That all citizens and other persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall be entitled to the full and equal enjoyment of the accommodations, advantages, facilities, and privileges of inns, public conveyances on land or water, theaters and other places of public amusement and also of common schools and public institutions of learning or benevolence supported in whole or in part by general taxation and of cemeteries, so supported; and also the institutions known as agricultural colleges endowed by the United States, subject only to the conditions and limitations established by law, and applicable alike to citizens of every race and color, regardless of any previous condition of servitude.

SEC. 2. That any person who shall violate the foregoing section by denying to any entitled to its benefit, except for reasons by law applicable to citizens of every race and color and regardless of any previous condition of servitude, the full enjoyment of any of the accommodations, advantages, facilities, or privileges in said section enumerated, or by aiding or inciting such denial, shall, for every such offense, forfeit and pay the sum of $500 to the person aggrieved thereby, to be recovered in an action on the case, with full costs; and shall also, for every such offense, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined not more than $1,000, or shall be imprisoned not more than one year: Provided, That the party aggrieved shall not recover more than one penalty; and when the offense is a refusal of burial, the penalty may be recovered by the heirs at law of the person whose body has been refused burial: And provided further, That all persons may elect to sue for the penalty aforesaid or to proceed under their rights at common law and by State statutes; and having so elected to proceed in the one mode or the other, their right to proceed in the other jurisdiction shall be barred. But this proviso shall not apply to criminal proceedings, either under this act or the criminal law of any State.

SEC. 3. That the district and circuit courts of the United States shall have, exclusively of the courts of the several States, cognizance of all crimes and offenses against, and violations of, the provisions of this act; and actions for the penalty given by the preceding section may be prosecuted in the territorial, district, or circuit courts of the United States wherever the defendant may be found, without regard to the other party. And the district attorneys, marshals, and deputy marshals of the United States, and commissioners appointed by the circuit and territorial courts of the United States with powers of arresting and imprisoning or bailing offenders against the laws of the United States, are hereby specially authorized and required to institute proceedings against every person who shall violate the provisions of this act, and cause him to be arrested and imprisoned or bailed, as the case may be, for trial before such court of the United States or territorial court as by law has cognizance of the offense, except in respect of the right of action accruing to the person aggrieved; and such district attorneys shall cause such proceedings to be prosecuted to their termination as in other cases: Provided, That nothing contained in this section shall be construed to deny or defeat any right of civil action accruing to any person, whether by reason of this act or otherwise.

SEC. 4. That no citizen possessing all other qualifications which are or may be prescribed by law shall be disqualified for service as grand or petit juror in any court of the United States, or of any State, on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude; and any officer or other person charged with any duty in the selection or summoning of jurors who shall exclude or fail to summon any citizen for the cause aforesaid shall, on conviction thereof, be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and be fined not more than $1,000.

SEC. 5. That all cases arising under the provisions of this act in the courts of the United States shall be reviewable by the Supreme Court of the United States without regard to the sum in controversy, under the same provisions and regulations as are now provided by law for the review of other causes in said court.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. If the House should now agree to the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, will it bring before the House for final action the bill in the form agreed to by the Senate?

The SPEAKER. It will not bring the Senate bill itself before the House, but it will bring the exact words of the Senate bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. Including the provision of the Senate bill in regard to schools?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can say nothing about the provisions of any of these propositions; that is a matter with which he has nothing to do.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 114, nays 148, not voting 27; as follows:

So the substitute was rejected.

During the vote,

Mr. SLOAN stated his colleague, Mr. FREEMAN, who was absent on account of sickness, would, if present, vote in the negative.

Mr. SOUTHARD said: Mr. Speaker, I am paired with my colleague, Mr. SHERWOOD, who is absent. He would vote "ay," and I would vote "no." I wish to state further I voted twice the other day on a question relating to this matter through mistake, when I was paired with Mr. SHERWOOD.

Mr. RANDALL stated that Mr. STEPHENS, of Georgia, who was compelled to leave the Hall, would, if present, vote in the negative. The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SPEER moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. VANCE. I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question then recurred on the adoption of Mr. SHANK's preamble, as follows:

Whereas it is essential to just government we recognize the equality of all men before the law, and hold it is the duty of government in its dealings with the people to mete out equal and exact justice to all, of whatever nativity, race, color, or persuasion, religious or political; and it being the proper object of legislation to enact fundamental principles into law: Therefore, &c.

Mr. POTTER. I should like to amend that preamble by adding the following sentence from the democratic platform:

4. Local self-government, with impartial suffrage, will guard the rights of all citizens more securely than any centralized power.

The SPEAKER. The amendment is not in order, as the previous question is still operating.

Mr. HYNES. The gentleman from Indiana said that preamble was adopted under duress. Can the House enforce that duress?

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows nothing of duress outside of the Hall.

Mr. SHANKS demanded the yeas and nays on the preamble.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 218, nays 26, not voting 45; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Archer, Ashe, Atkins, Averill, Banning, Barber, Barrere, Bass, Beck, Begole, Biery, Bland, Bradley, Buckner, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. So the preamble was adopted.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the preamble was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I now call for the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The question was on the passage of the bill.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 162, nays 99, not voting 28; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Roderick B. Butler, Caldwell, Caulfield, Chittenden, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Comingo, Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Crossland, Crutchfield, Davis, DeWitt, Durham, Eden, Eldredge, Finck, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Hamilton, Hancock, Henry R. Harris, John T. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Barnum, Barry, Creamer, Danford, Farwell, Freeman, Frye, Havens, George F. Hoar, Kendall, Killinger, Marshall, Maynard, Mitchell, Nunn, Thomas C. Platt, Purman, Ransier, Ray, Sener, Sherwood, William A. Smith, Southard, St. John, Straits, Walls, and Wheeler—28.

So the bill was passed.

During the call of the roll the following announcements were made:

Mr. FARWELL. On this question I am paired with Mr. MITCHELL, of Wisconsin. If he were here he would vote "no," and I would vote "ay."

Mr. SOUTHARD. I am paired with my colleague, Mr. SHERWOOD. If here he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. SENR. On the final passage of this bill I am paired with the gentleman from South Carolina, Mr. RANSIER, who has been suddenly called home on account of the dangerous illness of a member of his family. If he were here he would vote "ay," and I would vote "no."

Mr. MCKEE. I desire to state that my colleague, Mr. BARRY, is detained from the House by illness. If he were here he would vote "ay."

Mr. GUNCKEL. My colleague, Mr. DANFORD, is absent under leave from the House by reason of sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. CESSNA. I desire to make a request for unanimous consent. The battle is over and the result is before us in the shape of the passage of a modified bill. I ask unanimous consent, though not in accordance with my own votes, that we take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill and adopt this as a substitute for it.

Mr. SPEER. I object.

Mr. CESSNA. I make the proposition merely for the purpose of saving time.

Mr. RANDALL. It will not save any time. This bill will go over to the Senate and of course be passed at once.

HENNEPIN CANAL.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I rise to a privileged question. I call up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the House postponed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 145) for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of Lake Michigan and of the Illinois, the Mississippi, and the Rock Rivers until to-morrow at one o'clock.

The question being taken on the motion to reconsider, there were—ayes 102, noes 71.

Mr. HOLMAN called for the yeas and nays.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the yeas and nays will not be insisted upon, and that the gentleman will allow me to go on with the appropriation bill.

Mr. SPEER. Certainly; I will agree to that.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I call for the regular order.

On the question of ordering the yeas and nays there were—ayes 26, noes 94.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 142, nays 82, not voting 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Averill, Banning, Barber, Barrere, Bass, Biery, Bradley, Bufington, Burleigh, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick B. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Carpenter, Cason, Caulfield, Cessna, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clements, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Corwin, Cotton, Crooke, Crutchfield, Darrall, Dobbins, Donnan, Duell, Dannel, Eames, Eldredge, Farwell, Field, Fort, Foster, Gooch, Hagans, Harmer, Benjamin W. Harris, John T. Shoemaker, Sloan, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, George L. Smith, Snyder, Sprague, Stanard, Standford, Alexander H. Stephens, Charles A. Stevens, Stone, Stowell, Straft, Strawbridge, Swann, Taylor, Charles K. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thompson, Thornburgh, Townsend, Wallace, Jasper D. Ward, Wells, White, Whitehead, Whiteley, Charles G. Williams, John M. S. Williams, Williams Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, and James Wilson—142.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Archer, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Beck, Begole, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Burchard, Caldwell, John B. Clark, jr., Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Crossland, Curtis, DeWitt, Durham, Finck, Garfield, Giddings, Glover, Gunckel, Gunter, Robert S. Hale, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, Hatcher, E. Rockwood Hoar, Holman, Hoskins, Hunter, Hulton, Lamar, Lawson, Leach, Magee, Milliken, Mills, Monroe, Morrison, Neal, Niblack, O'Brien, Hosea W. Parker, Parsons, Pendleton, Pike, Potter, Randall, Read, Robbins, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Henry B. Saylor, Scofield, H. Boardman Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Spear, Storm, Tyner, Vance, Waddell, Waldron, Whitehouse, Whitthorne, Charles W. Willard, Willie, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—82.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Albright, Barnum, Barry, Bundy, Burrows, Chittenden, Clymer, Clinton L. Cobb, Comingo, Creamer, Crouse, Danford, Davis, Davies, Eden, Freeman, Frye, Eugene Hale, Hancock, Hathorn, Gerry W. Hazelton, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Howe, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Lamson, Lamport, Luttrell, Marshall, Maynard, McKee, McLean, Mitchell, Nunn, Perry, Phelps, James H. Platt, jr., Thomas C. Platt, Purman, Ransier, William R. Roberts, Ross, Milton Saylor, Henry J. Scudder, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Shanks, Sherwood, Sloss, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Starkweather, St. John, Sypher, Todd, Tremain, Wallis, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, Wilber, George Willard, William B. Williams, and Woodworth—65.

So the motion to reconsider the vote postponing the bill was agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion to postpone; and being put, it was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. That brings the Hennepin Canal bill before the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAWLEY] to yield to me to allow me to go on with the appropriation bills.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. If I yield to the gentleman will the bill come up to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It is now before the House, subject of course to the House going into Committee of the Whole or to any other privileged business.

Mr. HOLMAN. Can this business be postponed except by unanimous consent, so as to have control of the House to-morrow?

The SPEAKER. It must have control of the House as unfinished business to-morrow.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. May it not be postponed to-morrow to make way for a privileged question, if a majority of the House so determine?

The SPEAKER. Yes; a majority of the House, of course, can do anything.

Mr. ELDREDGE. What legislative day is this?

The SPEAKER. It is Thursday.

Mr. ELDREDGE. This is Thursday, is it? I was induced to withdraw my objection to dispensing with the reading of the Journal with the express understanding that the House was to adjourn at noon, and I desire, if I can now do so, to withdraw that objection. The Speaker gave me to understand that if I persisted in my demand for the reading of the Journal, the House could not adjourn at noon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair was of the opinion that the House would adjourn and ought to adjourn at twelve o'clock, but the gentleman who was entitled to the floor refused to yield for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I withdrew the objection with the express understanding that the House would adjourn, or I should have insisted on the reading of the Journal.

The SPEAKER. Well; the gentleman has lost nothing. The Journal will be read when the House meets again.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If the Journal is to be read when the House next meets, of course I have nothing further to say about it.

The SPEAKER. O, undoubtedly; the Journal will all be read.

NATIONAL BANK AND BANK EXAMINERS.

The SPEAKER appointed as the conferees on the part of the House on the conference ordered on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3825) to amend the national-bank act and fixing the compensation of national-bank examiners, Mr. MAYNARD, Mr. MERRIAM, and Mr. DURHAM.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire now to call up the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, with the amendments of the Senate thereto; and I desire to say that two or three changes have been made in the printed report of the committee, which are marked upon the copy of that report which I send to the Chair.

I desire to say further that I hope the House will remain long enough in session first to dispose of the amendments to this bill and to the consular bill, to which the amendments of the Senate are immaterial, and which I think can be disposed of by one vote. I ask the House then to pass the pension appropriation bill to-day. That will not take more than five or six minutes, and it will give the Senate something to work upon.

Mr. RANDALL. I join cordially in the suggestion of the gentleman from Ohio, that we dispose of these three bills to-day.

Mr. GARFIELD. Before calling up the legislative, &c., bill, I yield to my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations from Maryland, [Mr. SWANN], who has charge of the consular appropriation bill.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. SWANN. The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence in all the amendments of the Senate to the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill; and I move that they be concurred in. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SWANN moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO A COMMITTEE.

Mr. GARFIELD. Before proceeding further, I ask leave of absence for the Committee on Appropriations to-morrow, as they desire to visit some of the public buildings.

Mr. RANDALL. If the Committee on Appropriations has no business to bring before the House to-morrow, why not adjourn till Monday?

Mr. GARFIELD. That is a question that will come up by itself. Mr. HOLMAN. There can be no objection to granting the committee leave of absence.

No objection was made; and the leave was granted.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House proceeded to the consideration of the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3818) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

The recommendations of the Committee on Appropriations were concurred in without division, except in the following cases:

The third amendment of the Senate was as follows:

Clerk to the Committee on the Judiciary, $2,220.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. RANDALL. I would ask the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] why we should not concur in this amendment, as it pertains entirely to the Senate?

Mr. GARFIELD. The Senate, by their amendments, have cut down the salaries of a number of the clerks of the House. They have also raised the salaries of a number of their own clerks. We desire to non-concur in all of those amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. So that you may have something to wrestle about.
Mr. ELDREDGE. The committee in their report on the Senate amendments, numbered from 1 to 90, recommend concurrence in some and non-concurrence in others. In their report there is not one word to indicate what those amendments are. And unless gentlemen upon this floor have had more opportunity than I have had—

Mr. GARFIELD. The bill with the Senate amendments numbered has been printed.

Mr. ELDREDGE. That all may be. But I rise simply to state this proposition; I suppose it has been stated a thousand times before, and perhaps every member of the House feels as I do about it. There is no legislation under heaven so vicious as that of concurring in amendments made under circumstances like those here suggested.

No member can understand anything about them unless he is familiar with the bill. The House is obliged to rely entirely upon the confidence they repose in the gentleman who makes the recommendation. The amendment was non-concurred in.

When the fifteenth amendment of the Senate was reached,

Mr. GARFIELD said: In order to save time, I would suggest that the amendments of the Senate numbered from 15 to 21, relating as they all do to the clerks of the House, be non-concurred in, as recommended by the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we should take a vote upon the seventeenth amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. Very well; have a vote on that.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would ask that a vote be taken upon the amendments of the Senate the effect of which is to reduce the appropriations here made for the salaries of the clerks of the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. CESSNA.) Does the Chair understand the gentleman to ask for a separate vote on these amendments?

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire a vote on the amendments of the Senate reducing the appropriation made by the bill as it passed the House for paying certain clerks. I am in favor of concurring in the amendments of the Senate. By the bill as it passed the House we increase the amount allowed by law to certain clerks of the House, the journal clerk, the tally clerk, and others. The effect of the Senate amendments is to reduce those appropriations to the amount fixed by law for the salaries of those clerks. I insist for myself that the amendments proposed by the Senate, being in conformity to law, should be concurred in by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To what amendment does the gentleman refer?

Mr. HOLMAN. I refer to the amendment No. 17. The language of this bill as it passed the House was as follows:

Clerk of the House of Representatives, $4,320; officer charged with disbursing the contingent fund, $576; chief clerk and journal clerk of the House, while such positions are held by the present incumbents, and no longer, $3,600 each; two reading-clerks, assistant journal clerk, and tally clerk, $3,000 each; four assistant clerks, at $2,592 each, &c.

The Senate have stricken out after the words "two reading clerks assistant journal clerk, and tally clerk" the amount appropriated by the House, $3,000, and have inserted $2,592, the amount provided by law. Now I propose that the House concur in this amendment of the Senate, so as to make the appropriation correspond to what the law is for this purpose.

Mr. GARFIELD. One word in answer to the gentleman. I was opposed to putting up these salaries as was done at the last session. But as the gentlemen on the other side of the House are more interested in this particular question than I am, I shall vote with the gentleman from Indiana to concur in the Senate amendment. My own impression is that it was relatively unjust to put these salaries up; but in obedience to the action of the majority of the House, I have recommended non-concurrence. In the new departure which the gentleman proposes I will follow him, and I hope this side of the House will allow this amendment of the Senate to be concurred in.

Mr. LAMISON. I would inquire of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations whether, in making this reduction of the salaries of the clerks of the House, the Senate has reduced the salaries of the House clerks below those of the Senate clerks?

Mr. GARFIELD. They have done two things. They claim that we have put the salaries of our clerks up above the corresponding clerks of the Senate. By their amendments they have put the salaries of our clerks down to the old rate, and have put the salaries of their clerks up to our figures; so that if we non-concur in one amendment they will insist upon the other. The position of the Senate is this: We must either put up the salaries of their clerks to correspond to the amounts which we have given to our clerks, or we must put down the salaries of our clerks to the level of the salaries of their clerks at present.

Mr. LAMISON. I hope that whatever may be done by the committee of conference which may be appointed upon this bill, the salaries of the clerks of this House will at least be equalized with those of the clerks of the Senate. I believe the clerks of the House are entitled to as much for their services as are the clerks of the Senate. I think their duties are as arduous, and that they perform as much labor in a given time or indeed much more than the clerks of the Senate. Whatever else may be done, I think their salaries should be at least equal to the salaries of the clerks of the Senate, and that there should be no distinction in that respect between the two Houses.

is to cut down the salaries of our clerks to where the Senate clerks now are. If that does not prevail, I do not see how we can resist the proposition to put the salaries of the Senate clerks up to where we have put the salaries of our clerks.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. There was something of a contest over this matter last year, and after full discussion I think the House was satisfied that we did the right thing at that time. I have generally been opposed to the increase of salaries, and on all occasions, with these exceptions, have voted to keep salaries as they were. Now, it is true that the clerks here—for instance, the principal reading clerk, Dr. Mahaffey—get less than is paid in the Senate to clerks of a lower grade; while everybody knows that in this large House, where we sometimes sit all night and call the yeas and nays forty or fifty times at a single session, the work is much harder than in the Senate. In fact, no work of this kind can be harder than that performed in this House by our clerks. I think that what we have seen during the last few weeks shows that these men earn their money; and it is only fair play and common honesty that they should receive the compensation originally fixed by us in this bill. In other cases, where men render little service, I would agree to a reduction of salaries; but I think we must all admit these clerks earn their money.

Mr. HOLMAN. Did not the gentleman vote for the repeal of the provisions of the legislative appropriation act of March 3, 1873, by which the salaries of clerks were increased?

Mr. STARKWEATHER. I have not voted for the increase of the salaries of any clerks except those I have designated; and I did that because I believed they earn their money. I am willing to stand on that position. If all our constituents had been here recently and had seen the labor performed by these men day after day and night after night, when we were all tired and had to go to our homes or lie down on the lounges here, while these clerks were compelled to go through their wearying labor, I think they would all agree that these gentlemen earn the money we have appropriated for them in this bill.

A MEMBER. This is for the next year.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. No matter whether it is for this year or next year. The men who may succeed those now in these positions will perform the same work and ought to have the same pay.

Mr. RANDALL. As the Senate has raised the salaries of its clerks, I do not think it ought to have cut down the salaries of ours. Now, when any general proposition is presented for a 10 per cent. reduction that shall apply to every officer of the Government whose salary can constitutionally be reduced, I will, in view of the hard times, vote for such a reduction.

Mr. STARKWEATHER. So will I.

Mr. RANDALL. But I do say that it is improper and invidious to strike at the officers named in this amendment and nobody else. They are worthy men; they fully earn the amount awarded to them. They have to maintain a character of respectability; they must be men of integrity; and the salary is not one dollar too much. But if the policy of a general reduction of official salaries 10 per cent. shall be adopted, then let them come in with the rest. I hope that this question will be permitted to go to a committee of conference, so that at least there may be some proper adjustment of the salaries in the two bodies.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that no gentleman on either side of the House will consent that the question as to what party may control this House hereafter shall have any influence in the decision of the question. We have fixed by law the salaries of these clerks. In the repealing act which public sentiment compelled us to enact we left these salaries at $2,592. We are not responsible for the action of the Senate. They have reduced the appropriation for clerical salaries in this House to what the law is, while they have increased the salaries of clerks in their own body beyond what the law has fixed. What I ask is that we concur in their action reducing the salaries of the clerks of this House to the sum paid by law, and that we non-concur in the proposition to increase the salaries of Senate clerks; and then let the question go to a committee of conference.

Mr. GARFIELD. I call the previous question on agreeing to this amendment.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

Mr. COX. I move that the House adjourn. I want an opportunity between now and to-morrow morning to examine these amendments, some sixty in number.

A MEMBER. Ninety.

Mr. COX. We have been here now six hours and a half, and I think it is time we should adjourn.

The motion to adjourn was not agreed to.

Mr. COX. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday next.

Mr. RANDALL. I appeal to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] to withdraw that motion until we finish this bill.

The motion was not agreed to; there being yeas 32, noes not counted.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the members will remain here for thirty minutes more, we can finish this bill.

The question being taken on concurring in the amendment, it was concurred in.

The twenty-fifth amendment was read, as follows:

In the paragraph making appropriations for contingent expenses of the State Department, strike out the following:
For repairs, $4,000.

Mr. GARFIELD. The committee recommend non-concurrence in this amendment. We at first recommended concurrence; but the Secretary of State showed the committee conclusively that upon the Department going into the new building it would be absurd to suppose that so large a building would not need some small alterations and repairs to put it in order.

The amendment was not concurred in.

The twenty-sixth amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out "twenty-one" and insert "seventeen;" so it will read:
And for miscellaneous items, not included in the foregoing, $6,250; in all, $17,570.

Mr. GARFIELD. The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence in that amendment of the Senate by striking out the words "twenty-one" and "seventeen," in line 379, and inserting the following:

For publishing in newspapers the laws passed at the second session of the Forty-third Congress, $50,000; in all, $71,000.

I desire to explain that amendment. At the last session of Congress the Committee on Appropriations made no appropriation for publishing the law in newspapers during the present session of Congress, forgetting that the law then repealed did not cease to act until the 4th of March next. When we passed the bill last year we thought the law requiring the publication of the laws in the newspapers was to terminate at the end of the last fiscal year, when in fact it does not terminate till the end of this Congress. The publication under the law, therefore, in the newspapers must go on until the end of this Congress; and it is necessary to make this appropriation to pay for that publication.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Are those laws now being published in the newspapers?

Mr. GARFIELD. They are.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Under what authority?

Mr. GARFIELD. Under the authority of the law requiring the Secretary of State to publish them in newspapers. That law has been repealed to take effect on the 3d of March next, at the end of the present Congress.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. They have to be published for this Congress.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to understand exactly what this amendment is.

Mr. GARFIELD. It appropriates $50,000 for the publication of the laws for the second session of this Congress up to the 4th of March next.

Mr. RANDALL. It does not belong here.

Mr. GARFIELD. It does, because this is under the State Department. It is one of the estimates which came from the Department of State. It is important that it should be passed immediately, as he has been publishing the laws in the newspapers for a month.

Mr. RANDALL. It does not belong here. The Senate have sent amendments to the bill, sent to them from this House, and on the amendments from the Senate it is not proper for us to insert entirely new and different matter.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is perfectly proper, technically, because there is an amendment of the Senate here, and we propose to concur in that amendment by adding this appropriation of $50,000 for the publication of the laws in newspapers. It is under the heading of miscellaneous items. It is precisely where we should put it if the estimate from the State Department had come in time.

Mr. SPEER. Is this for publishing the laws of this session in the newspapers?

Mr. GARFIELD. It is for publishing the laws passed at this session in the newspapers under the law, which does not expire till the end of this session.

Mr. RANDALL. This is an appropriation bill for the year beginning July 1, 1875, and ought not to include an appropriation for a period preceding the 4th of March, 1875.

Mr. SPEER. How, then, can the appropriation in this bill be made available if it is to pay for publication of laws before the 1st of July next?

Mr. GARFIELD. By its very terms it provides for the publication of the laws at this session of Congress.

Mr. SPEER. I thought we were through with this nuisance of publishing the laws in the newspapers.

Mr. GARFIELD. I voted against it, but we must pay for this publication as long as the law provides for it.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. SPEER. Does not the law allow the Clerk to select the newspapers in which the publication is to be made?

Mr. GARFIELD. It does.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Ohio says that the last appropriation bill contained no appropriation for this object.

Mr. GARFIELD. It did for the publication of the laws of the last session, but not for the publication of the laws of this session, as it was believed at that time that the law then expired, instead of continuing up to the 4th of March next. There is now no appropriation whatever to pay for carrying into effect the law requiring the laws of this session to be published in the newspapers.

Mr. RANDALL. Then this specifies what it is for.

Mr. GARFIELD. It simply carries out the law to the end of this Congress, when the law by its own terms is repealed.

Mr. SPEER. Does not this in a measure re-enact the old law?

Mr. GARFIELD. No; it only provides for the publication of the laws of the second session of the Forty-third Congress, at the end of which the repeal is to take effect requiring that publication.

Mr. RANDALL. If these laws have not been published and we make no appropriation for it, does not that end the whole thing?

Mr. GARFIELD. No.

Mr. SPEER. If we do not appropriate then they will not be published.

Mr. GARFIELD. They are being printed, and the bills for the work will come in at the next Congress. If we do not appropriate for it here it will come up in a deficiency bill. I have tried for years to stop this thing, but this appropriation is necessary to carry out the law now upon the statute-book.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I will read from the law:

For publishing the laws of the first session of the Forty-third Congress in pamphlet form and in newspapers, $86,000: Provided, That after the 4th of March, 1875, the publication of the laws in the newspapers shall cease.

There was then no appropriation made for the publication of the laws of this session.

Mr. GARFIELD. That is true, and it shows the necessity for the amendment of the committee.

Mr. O'BRIEN. What would be the effect if this appropriation were not made now?

Mr. GARFIELD. We should have to provide it at another time as a deficiency.

The question being taken, the amendment was concurred in with the amendment proposed by Mr. GARFIELD.

The thirtieth and thirty-first amendments were read, as follows:

Strike out the words:

And so much of the act entitled "An act to provide for the better organization of the Treasury, and for the collection, safe-keeping, transfer, and disbursement of the public revenue," approved August 6, 1846, and of all other acts and parts of acts authorizing the office of assistant treasurer of the United States at Charleston, South Carolina, is hereby repealed from and after the 30th day of June, 1875.

And insert as follows:

Office of assistant treasurer at Charleston, South Carolina:
For assistant treasurer, $4,000; one clerk, $1,500; one clerk, $1,600; one assistant messenger, $720; and two watchmen, at $720 each; in all, $9,560.

Mr. RAINEY. I see that the committee recommend non-concurrence in these amendments. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations what is their reason for recommending non-concurrence?

Mr. GARFIELD. The words which the Senate in their amendment propose to strike out repeal the acts and parts of acts which authorize the office of assistant treasurer of the United States at Charleston. The Senate strike that out and insert another clause making an appropriation for that office. The Committee on Appropriations proposed to repeal the laws authorizing the office because the reports from the Treasury Department showed that there was not a sufficient amount of work to be done, of fiscal agency to be carried on there, to warrant the keeping up of the independent treasury at Charleston. The work could be done as well without that machinery as with it. And under the advice obtained at the Treasury Department the Committee on Appropriations thought it best to repeal the law establishing the independent treasury at Charleston. The Senate have put that back and we recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. RAINEY. I am very sorry the committee has taken this view of the matter, for I think this office ought to be retained. The Charleston post-office and all the smaller post-offices of the State make their deposits in the sub-treasury at Charleston. At this sub-treasury all the financial business of those post-offices is transacted with the Treasury here. I have been informed that if this office is abolished it will create quite an inconvenience to the post-office service at Charleston, and in their manner of doing business and making remittances to the Treasury here. And why the Secretary of the Treasury, a new incumbent of the office, should see fit to make this recommendation to abolish this office I cannot possibly see.

Mr. FORT. He does so because it does not pay.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us vote.

The question being put, the amendments of the Senate were non-concurred in.

The thirty-second amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In line 791 insert these words, "for one clerk, $1,500."

Mr. GARFIELD. This amendment and the amendments numbered 33, 34, and 35, relate substantially to the same thing. They all go to increase the force of the assistant treasurer at Chicago. The Committee on Appropriations recommend non-concurrence.

The question being taken, the thirty-second, thirty-third, thirty-fourth, and thirty-fifth amendments were non-concurred in.

Mr. ROBBINS. I do not think there is a quorum, and there are ninety of these amendments to be considered. The House is not in a condition to consider them properly. We have been here now seven or eight hours, and I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope we will be allowed to finish the bill. It will only take a little while.

Mr. ROBBINS. I desire to test the sense of the House on my motion as well as to ascertain if there is a quorum present.

The question being put, the Speaker declared that the "noes" had it.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Let us have a division. We have been here long enough. Everybody is tired out.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 31, noes 80.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I believe a quorum has not voted.

The SPEAKER. It does not require a quorum to adjourn.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It requires a quorum to go on with business.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman raise that question?

Mr. ELDREDGE. I do.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the gentleman will not make that point. I ask the House to stand by the committee and finish this bill. We can test the presence of a quorum by the next vote on the bill.

Mr. ELDREDGE. If the understanding is that we shall adjourn over until Monday after this bill is disposed of, I do not object.

Several MEMBERS. O, no.

Mr. ELDREDGE. We have been in session long enough. Civil rights should be enough for one day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin can test the question on the first issue raised in the bill.

The thirty-sixth amendment of the Senate, under the head of "Mint at Philadelphia," was read, as follows:

Strike out "$225,000" and insert "$250,000," so that it will read "for wages of workmen and adjusters, $250,000."

The committee recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I demand a division.

The question being put on concurring in the amendment of the Senate, there were—ayes 13, noes 78.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will order tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GARFIELD, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. ELDREDGE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 2, noes 142.

The SPEAKER. The Chair votes in the negative, his vote making a quorum, and the amendment is non-concurred in.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will hold on for fifteen minutes we will finish this bill.

ROBERT TANSILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that by unanimous consent I may offer a resolution for the return from the Senate of a bill in the engrossment of which there has been a mistake. I offer the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Clerk be directed to request the return from the Senate of the bill of the House No. 3780 to relieve the political disabilities of Robert Tansill, of Prince William County, Virginia, that an omission in the engrossment may be supplied.

There was no objection, and the resolution was agreed to.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. The next three amendments propose to increase the expenses of the mint and assay office at San Francisco.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to ask the gentlemen the reason why he proposes to cut down this appropriation.

Mr. GARFIELD. For the reason that this is an increase in the appropriation made, and the Committee on Appropriations are satisfied that it is not a necessary increase.

Mr. PAGE. How much is the increase?

Mr. GARFIELD. I cannot tell the gentleman exactly; but if the action of the House be unjust to any one, sufficient reasons can be given to the committee of conference to overcome it.

Mr. MERRIAM. I will state a fact which ought to have some bearing, if not upon the House, on the committee of conference. I will state that under the appropriation bill of last year more than one-third of these double-eagles which we have been at the expense of making were exported and melted down for recoinage. They do that instead of taking our gold bars for exportation; and I protest in the name of the American people against this expense as being wholly unnecessary.

Mr. GARFIELD. I am willing to pay all the necessary expenses of these mints, but I think this is an unnecessary expense, and that the amount proposed by the Committee on Appropriations is sufficient.

Mr. HOUGHTON. This has no relation to the coinage of gold.

Mr. GARFIELD. I know that. It relates to the coinage of silver. The amendment is for the purpose of enabling the Secretary of the Treasury to increase the coinage of trade-dollars at the mints.

Now, sir, the present facilities of the mints are insufficient to meet the wants of trade. We have not a sufficient quantity of these trade-dollars to meet the demands to pay for merchandise from China and the East Indies. We have to send to Mexico for gold. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment of the Senate was non-concurred in.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now ask the Clerk to read the forty-fourth and forty-fifth amendments of the Senate.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fuel, crucibles, chemicals, repairs, and other necessities, $1,000.

Assay office at Charlotte, North Carolina:

For assayer in charge, $1,800; melter, $1,500; wages of workmen, $600; contingent expenses, $1,500; in all, $5,400.

The Committee on Appropriations recommended non-concurrence.

Mr. ASHE. I hope the House will not non-concur in the amendment in relation to the mint at Charlotte, North Carolina, which I believe is the forty-fifth amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman desires a separate vote on that amendment, I shall not object to that, although we have repeatedly passed upon that question.

Mr. ASHE. I hope the House will concur in the amendment of the Senate. It is true that by the last report we have from the assay office this mint does not appear to be of much value; but, Mr. Speaker, at the same time the gold is there, although the mines have not been worked of late as heretofore.

This mint was established in the year 1838, and from that time till 1861 about $5,000,000 of gold were coined there from the productions of those mines, while, during the same time, something over $5,000,000 from the same source were coined at the mint at Philadelphia, making between ten and eleven millions of gold coined from the productions of these mines.

Well, sir, the veins of these old mines are still there unexhausted, and will be worked with profit as well as other mines developed, as soon as we can command capitol and labor.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Are they taking any gold out of those mines now?

Mr. ASHE. Yes, sir; they are working some of those mines now.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. How much gold are they taking out?

Mr. ASHE. It is estimated that they will get out this year from one hundred and fifty to one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars in gold.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. How much minting has been done in Charlotte during the last fifteen years?

Mr. ELDREDGE. "There are millions in it."

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. But millions do not come out of it; that is the trouble.

Mr. ASHE. They have not coined any there since 1861; it has been only an assay office. These old mines, rich in gold, are still open. All we want is capital to get the gold out of them. More than that, they are continually discovering other mines rich in gold.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. What you need, then, is an appropriation to carry on the mines rather than to carry on an assay office.

Mr. ASHE. We want an assay office there to ascertain the value of the gold taken from the mines there, and to act as an arbitrator between the producer of the gold and the buyer of the gold, and not be under the necessity of sending the gold to Philadelphia to be assayed.

Mr. MERRIAM. It would be cheaper to pay for sending the gold to Philadelphia or to New York.

Mr. GARFIELD. Now let us have a vote.

Mr. ASHE. I am not quite done.

Mr. GARFIELD. I thought the gentleman had concluded.

Mr. ASHE. Not quite yet. Further than that, this Congress has recently passed what is called the new financial bill, under the operation of which specie is to be distributed throughout the country. I hold in my hand a letter from the Director of the Mint, in which he says that he thinks this assay office should be maintained at Charlotte, and that for the distribution of silver under the new financial bill it will be one of the most suitable positions in the South. I ask the Clerk to read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE DIRECTOR OF THE MINT,
January 21, 1875.

DEAR SIR: I am in receipt of your favor of yesterday requesting my opinion as to the propriety and policy of continuing the assay office at Charlotte, North Carolina, and whether Charlotte would not be one of the most suitable points in the South for the distribution of specie under the provisions of the finance bill recently passed by Congress.

As to the inquiry respecting the continuing of assay facilities at Charlotte, I reply that although the gold production of that section is quite limited at present, producers would feel very sensibly the discontinuance of United States assays at that point. The producers of bullion in that locality are, as a general thing, men with very limited means, and are compelled to sell their bullion at home and cannot await returns from Philadelphia or New York.

The assay office being established and in successful operation at an annual expense of only $4,500, and which sum does not much exceed the amount which would be required for the care and preservation of the premises, it would in my opinion be as well to continue the office.

To your second inquiry, I reply that Charlotte would in my opinion be one of the most suitable and convenient points in the South for distributing silver coin.

Very respectfully,

H. R. LINDERMAN,
Director of the Mint.

HON. THOMAS S. ASHE,
House of Representatives.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask my friend from North Carolina [Mr. ASHE] whether this same Director of the Mint has not reported to the present Congress that the amount of bullion received at the assay office at Charlotte during the last year was about $8,000, but little more than the amount paid for salaries there?

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly.

Mr. ASHE. That is in consequence of the stringency of the money market, the depression of the industries of the country, and the want of labor and capital. As soon as we get them, these mines will be reopened and worked. And there are new mines and rich mines continually being developed. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. GARFIELD] I am afraid has some prejudice against the name of this assay office.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no.

Mr. ASHE. I conclude so from some remarks that fell from him at the last session of Congress. Charlotte is an honored name in history.

The place is not named after Charlotte Corday, the assassin of Marat; but after one of the most amiable princesses of England. I hope the gentleman will dismiss any prejudice he may have on account of the name.

Mr. GARFIELD. I have no prejudice whatever against the name. I call for a vote.

The question was taken on concurring in the amendment of the Senate; and upon a division there were—ayes 41, noes 57; no quorum voting.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I move that the House now adjourn.

Several MEMBERS. O, no.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I withdraw the motion.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I renew the motion.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. And pending that motion, I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday next.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is perfectly clear to my mind that the House is unwilling to go on with this appropriation bill now, and I will myself make the motion to adjourn.

Mr. ELDREDGE. No such thing is perfectly clear. The gentleman knows it is not true.

Mr. GARFIELD. I decline to allow the gentleman to stand up here and say that I know anything is not true that I have said.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I say—

Mr. GARFIELD. I call the gentleman to order. I demand the protection of this House for myself and for others against this habit. It is one I will not allow.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman knows perfectly well that it is not true that there is any unwillingness to consider the appropriation bills, or to antagonize them.

Mr. GARFIELD. I did not say any such thing. I said it was perfectly manifest that the House was not willing to go on with the appropriation bills to-night.

Mr. ELDREDGE. We have sat here from ten o'clock this morning till now, five o'clock.

Mr. GARFIELD. I expressed my regret at the disposition of the House. I rose and said that it was manifest the House was unwilling to proceed with the appropriation bills to-night.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The House has sat here with perfect patience since ten o'clock this morning.

Mr. GARFIELD. I do not yield. I said that I would move to adjourn because it was manifest the House was not willing to continue the consideration of the appropriation bill to-night; and a member rises in his place and says that "the gentleman from Ohio knows that that is not true."

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman did not say that the House was unwilling to go on with the appropriation bills to-night; he said the House was not willing to go on with the appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. It is perfectly apparent that there is a mutual misunderstanding between the gentlemen—an entire misunderstanding. The gentleman from Ohio made the remark which he has just stated; and the Chair thinks the gentleman from Wisconsin misunderstood him.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I understood the gentleman from Ohio to say that there was a disposition not to consider the appropriation bills. I say that it is not true.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman did not say so. The Chair thought the gentleman from Wisconsin was under a misapprehension.

Mr. GARFIELD. I simply remarked that the House was unwilling to go on with the appropriation bills to-night.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin was "ruling on a hypothetical case."

Mr. ELDREDGE. I am only speaking of what I understood the gentleman to say. He appears to be very sensitive on the point. I take nothing back.

Mr. GARFIELD. And I stand by my words.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to adjourn.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no; let us finish the bill to-night.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. We on this side can control the House.

Mr. GARFIELD. I withdraw the motion to adjourn.

Mr. STANDIFORD. I renew the motion.

The motion was not agreed to.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It is now perfectly apparent that the House wants to consider the appropriation bill.

Mr. RANDALL. If the House does not get through the bill to-day, it will go over till Tuesday.

Mr. ASHE. I call for tellers on the amendment.

The SPEAKER. There was no quorum voting. The Chair orders tellers, and appoints the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. GARFIELD, and the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. ASHE.

The House divided; and the tellers reported, ayes 65, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not concurred in.

The forty-sixth and forty-seventh amendments were read, as follows:

In the appropriations for the Territory of Utah, insert the following: For legislative expenses, namely, for compensation and mileage of members of the Legislative Assembly, officers, clerks, and others, $23,400; and this appropriation may be used, under the direction of the Department of Justice, to defray the judicial expenses of the supreme and district courts of said Territory; and the amount so used shall be reimbursed to said appropriation out of the treasury of said Territory; and, until said reimbursement shall be fully made, no member or officer of said Legislative Assembly shall be entitled to any compensation or allowance out of any moneys of the United States.

Strike out "$1,600" as the aggregate amount of appropriations in the paragraph and insert "$25,000."

Mr. GARFIELD. Part of that amendment ought to be agreed to, and a part, the committee think, should not be.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I would like to know the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. SPEER. I hope the House will never agree to it.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It looks to me as though it was intended as a bribe to coerce the action of the Territory.

Mr. GARFIELD. The portion of the amendments providing for the expenses of the territorial Legislature ought of course to be agreed to. We should have inserted that appropriation if the estimate had been here in time. The Senate has, however, added a clause which we have not seen sufficient ground to concur in. We therefore recommend non-concurrence.

Mr. SPEER. I hope the committee of conference will never agree to concur in that last provision.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Why should it be provided that no officer shall be paid until reimbursement be made by the Territory? Why should a public officer be deprived of his salary because some other person does not do what he ought to do?

Mr. SPEER. It is a most extraordinary provision.

Mr. ELDREDGE. A most infamous provision.

The SPEAKER. The House cannot do anything more than non-concur in the amendment.

Mr. SPEER. And I hope the committee of conference appointed by the House will insist on non-concurrence.

The amendment was not concurred in.

The eighty-third amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

In the paragraph appropriating $11,900 for compensation of district marshals of the United States, strike out the following: Provided, That the provisions of an act "making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875," approved June 16, 1874, which prohibit the allowance of mileage to persons holding employment or appointment under the United States, shall not be so construed as to apply to the legal traveling fees of United States marshals or deputy marshals. And all accounts of said marshals or their deputies, for expenses and mileage incurred subsequent to the 1st day of July, 1874, shall be audited, allowed, and paid in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1853, in the same manner as if said act had not been passed; but no fees shall be allowed for constructive mileage, and every claim for mileage shall be accompanied by sworn proof that the distance for which mileage is claimed was actually and necessarily traveled by the officer.

Mr. GARFIELD. We recommend non-concurrence in this amendment.

Mr. SPEER. I think the amendment should be concurred in. The law as it now exists does not allow anything but actual traveling expenses to any person in the service of the Government. The House has attempted to modify that provision so as to allow mileage instead of actual traveling expenses for marshals. The Senate has struck out the amendment of the House, and left the law just as it is, so that all persons in Government employ shall be paid merely their actual traveling expenses. The attempt on the part of the House is to restore mileage, a system which has been very much abused and has led to very large expenditures on the part of the Government, which were never intended by Congress.

Mr. HURLBUT. The proposition is to allow only actual mileage.

Mr. SPEER. It is true it is provided that there shall be no constructive mileage; but the law passed by Congress only a year or two ago provides that all persons in the employ of the Government shall be paid only their actual traveling expenses. It seems to me that that is sufficient. I hope the House will not sustain the recommendation of the committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. I will say only a word. It was shown clearly in the debate heretofore had upon this question in the House that the law in regard to marshals gave them mileage as a part of their compensation. It was understood to be part of the regular compensation which these marshals were getting. If they do not have it, then they are not sufficiently compensated. It was believed at the time we passed the Army appropriation bill last year that the mileage clause which was intended only to apply to Army officers would not apply to these marshals. It has, however, been construed to apply to them. It consequently takes this much out of their fees. In effect it substantially takes away a large portion of their compensation. It was thought that we should except marshals from the contemplation of that law, and we have done so. The Senate have stricken out the provision we inserted in the bill. The Committee on Appropriations have recommended non-concurrence and I think we should non-concur until the Senate can show us by what means they propose to make marshals good for the loss of this part of their compensation. I hope the House will sustain the committee in the recommendation of non-concurrence.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Senate have stricken this out for the reason that it is an improper provision to be included in a general appropriation bill. I think some other mode can be devised for the compensation of these marshals without restoring the mileage system, which has been so much abused. I hope the House will concur with the Senate in striking this provision out of the law.

Mr. GARFIELD. Let us have a vote.

The Senate amendment was non-concurred in.

The eighty-eighth amendment of the Senate was read, as follows:

Strike out the following section:

SEC. 2. That the circuit court of the United States in and for the district of Iowa shall be held at the times and places now provided by law for holding the United States district court in and for said district; but the circuit judge shall not be required to sit in said court except at Des Moines. Causes removed from any court of the State of Iowa into the circuit court of the United States within said district shall be removed to the nearest circuit court, unless the parties thereto shall otherwise agree: Provided, That all appeals or writs of error allowed by law from the district court to the circuit court for Iowa shall be taken to the circuit court at Des Moines, to be heard by said court when held by one or more circuit judges: And provided further, That the judge of the district court for said district of Iowa may, in his discretion, order that the same jurors be summoned to serve in the circuit and district courts when held at the same time and place, and at a place other than Des Moines.

Mr. GARFIELD. This clause was put in the appropriation bill in the House changing the jurisdiction of the circuit court in Iowa. There has been some difference of opinion among members as to how that should be done. The Committee on Appropriations recommend concurrence with the Senate in striking this provision out with an amendment substituting what I send to the Clerk to be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. The circuit court of the United States for the district of Iowa may by consent of parties in any case, or without such consent, or in case where the amount in controversy does not exceed the sum or value of $5,000, remit such case for final hearing to the district court of the United States for the district of Iowa, to be tried or heard in some one of the divisions thereof. In cases where the amount in controversy does not exceed the sum or value of $5,000 application for such transfer may be made by either party in term time or upon notice at chambers in vacation, before final issue, and upon such application it shall be the duty of the court or judge to transfer any such cause if, in the opinion of such court or judge, delay and inconvenience to the litigants will be thereby avoided. And in all cases where causes are so transferred they shall be sent for hearing or trial to the division where, in the opinion of the court or judge, the trial can be had with the least inconvenience to the litigants. And said district court is hereby invested as to all cases thus sent to it with all the powers and jurisdiction of the circuit court, and such causes shall proceed in the district court and judgments and decrees therein and orders in reference thereto be enforced in the same manner as if the said court had in all respects full circuit court powers. The foregoing provisions shall extend to all cases originally brought in the circuit court and to those removed to that court from the State courts, but not to appeals, writs of error, or petitions for review in bankruptcy. The circuit judge may hear bankruptcy appeals and petitions for review in bankruptcy and chancery cases and non-jury cases submitted to him at chambers whenever the parties shall so agree: Provided, That the judge of said district court shall have power, by an order made and entered of record at any regular term, to alter from time to time the boundaries of the existing divisions of said district in such manner as will in his opinion facilitate the transaction of business or promote the convenience of suitors.

The amendment was agreed to, and the Senate amendment, as amended, was concurred in.

The remaining Senate amendments were disposed of.

Mr. ARCHER. I now move, as we have gotten through with all the amendments of the Senate, to reconsider the vote by which the seventeenth amendment was concurred in, so far as it cuts down the pay of four employés of this House. If any men are entitled to the pay they now receive, they are the assistant journal clerk, the two reading clerks, and the tally clerk of this House.

I have not in my experience in this House seen but one man that was able to undergo the fatigue of those offices; and they are important offices to the members of the House. The Senate propose to cut down their pay about $412 a year. I hope we will reconsider and non-concur.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise the point of order that the House has considered these amendments as in Committee of the Whole, and that it is not in order to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks there was nothing said as to the amendments being considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ARCHER. The proceeding has been in the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not think that there is any reason to cut off the right of the House to reconsider its action on the amendments if it chooses.

Mr. KELLOGG. Let us reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The question is on reconsidering the vote by which the House concurred in the amendments of the Senate relating to the clerks of the House.

The question being put, there were—ayes 102, noes 10.

The question recurred on concurring in the amendment, and it was non-concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the House, in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee on Appropriations, non-concurred in the seventy-eighth amendment of the Senate.

A MEMBER. Which is that?

Mr. STORM. It is the amendment which abolishes the third assistant examiners in the Patent Office.

Mr. GARFIELD. The seventy-seventh and seventy-eighth amendments of the Senate must be considered together.

The Clerk read the seventy-seventh and seventy-eighth amendments of the Senate, as follows:

Strike out "$40,000" and insert "$100,000."

And add these words:

Provided, however, That on and after the 1st day of July, 1875, the grade of third assistant examiner of the Patent Office shall cease.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the House concur in the seventy-eighth amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. If the gentleman will allow me, I will explain the position of this matter in a single sentence.

The Commissioner of Patents came before the Committee on Appropriations and requested us, instead of the usual $40,000 to bring up the work of photo-lithographing or otherwise producing copies of drawings of current and back issues for the use of the office and for sale, to give him $100,000 for that purpose. He said if he had $60,000 more he could work that all up, and then at the end of the year disburse with the services of the three assistant examiners. We were not willing to give $100,000 this year, and only gave $40,000. The Senate has put upon the bill the provision recommended by the Commissioner, increasing the amount to $100,000, with the proviso that at the end of the year the services of all these third assistant examiners shall be dispensed with.

Mr. HOLMAN. Could not the services of these examiners be dispensed with, reserving the question as to whether the amount should be increased from $40,000 to $100,000?

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no. Their services are necessary to bring up this work; and with the appropriation of $100,000 the Commissioner will be able to employ enough assistance to wind up the work in one year.

Mr. HOLMAN. The explanation seems satisfactory. I withdraw the motion to reconsider.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move to reconsider the several votes of concurrence and non-concurrence with the Senate amendments; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now move the appointment of a committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GARFIELD. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that when the House adjourns to-day it be to meet on Monday.

The question being put on Mr. HOLMAN's motion, there were—ayes 34, noes 72.

So the motion was not agreed to.

POSTAL TELEGRAPH.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Judiciary, presented a report in writing to accompany the bill (H. R. No. 4470) to establish certain telegraphic lines in the several States and Territories as post-roads and to regulate the transmission of commercial and other intelligence by telegraph; which was ordered to be printed, and recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary, not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The question being taken on the motion to adjourn, it was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and forty minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until twelve o'clock on Saturday.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. WRIGHT. I present a petition of several members of the bar of the supreme court of the District, representing that the statutory laws and laws of local application in force in the District of Columbia are of four kinds: First, the statute laws of England in force at the date of the cession of Maryland; second, the statute laws of the State of Maryland in force at the date of such cession; third, the acts of Congress; and, fourth, the acts of the Assembly of the District organized under the act of February 21, 1871; and that many of these statutes and laws are out of print and can only be found with the greatest difficulty, and they therefore pray that there be appointed a commission of two lawyers practicing in said court to collect and codify such laws. I move that the petition be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

STATE OF NEW YORK, IN ASSEMBLY,
Albany, January 29, 1875.

On motion of Mr. Scudder:

Whereas the Legislature of the State of New York has at different times ratified and confirmed leases between Indian and white settlers on the Allegany Indian reservation in said State; and whereas the courts of this State have decided that said ratification is null and void, the Congress of the United States alone possessing power to deal with and for the Indians, and that as Judge Barker, of the supreme court of this State, in an elaborate opinion given in a suit to test the legality of such ratification of leases, did say that State action alone cannot accomplish the results; that the State should, through its Legislature and executive officers, take appropriate steps to secure the aid and co-operation of the United States to secure to the white settlers the ratification of their leases and to protect them in their rights: Now, therefore,

Resolved, (if the senate concur.) That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are requested to lay the matter before Congress at an early day, and procure the passage of a law or take some action for the relief of said white settlers.

Resolved, (if the senate concur.) That a copy of this resolution be furnished to each of the members of the Senate and Congress from this State.

By order.

HIRAM CALKINS, Clerk.

It was so ordered.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. FENTON, it was Ordered, That the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of John Fisk, and that the petitioner have leave to withdraw his petition and papers.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. OGLESBY. The Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Albert G. Boon, of Colorado Territory, praying compensation for services rendered the United States in 1861 in negotiating a treaty with the Arapaho and Cheyenne Indians of the Upper Arkansas River and reimbursement for moneys expended in the accomplishment of said treaty, have had the same under consideration, and instructed me to ask to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims. Although it has been referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and although it is apparently about the subject of Indians and Indian affairs, it is in its nature wholly and exclusively a claim for money advanced and services rendered as an agent of the United States. The committee feel that this does not properly belong there, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, where it can be properly attended to.

The Committee on Indian Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the petition; and it was referred to the Committee on Claims, and the accompanying report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Public Building and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2109) for the protection of the United States custom-house in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, reported it without amendment.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the petition of John R. Harrington, praying an extension of letters-patent for improvement in carpet lining, reported a bill (S. No. 1247) for the relief of John R. Harrington; which was read, and passed to a second reading.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Charles B. Phillips, praying to be allowed a share of the avails of the one-third part of the wharf-boat D. G. Fowler, forfeited under the act of Congress of August 6, 1861, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1248) for the relief of Charles B. Phillips.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask that that bill go on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar with the adverse report, which will be printed.

PENSION TO SOLDIERS OF 1812.

Mr. PRATT. The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2190) to amend the act entitled "An act granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and the widows of deceased soldiers," approved February 14, 1871, and to restore to the pension-rolls those persons whose names were stricken therefrom in consequence of disloyalty, and to whom, after the committee had reported the same back to the Senate with the recommendation that it should pass, it was subsequently, by order of the Senate, recommitted, have directed me to report the same back now to the Senate with the recommendation that all be stricken out from the enacting clause and a substitute in the nature of a new bill inserted and recommended to the consideration of the Senate. As this is a measure of general interest, I beg leave to state in this connection the changes which the committee recommend in the existing pension law.

The first section of this substitute admits to the pension-rolls all surviving officers, soldiers, and sailors who served in the war of 1812 for the period of thirty days and were honorably discharged and who did not in any manner voluntarily engage in or aid or abet rebellion.

The second section admits to the pension-roll all the surviving officers and men who served for thirty days in the Indian war of 1811 and who did not voluntarily aid the rebellion. I may state in this connection that it appears from correspondence with the Pension Office that the number of regulars, militia, and volunteers who were engaged in the war of 1811 is estimated at six hundred and fifty. History puts the number engaged in the battle of Tippecanoe at seven hundred. The Commissioner makes no estimate as to the number of those who survived, but it will be apparent that the number must of necessity be very few.

The third section of the amended bill admits to the roll the surviving warriors of the Seneca Nation of Indians who co-operated and served with the Army of the United States for the period of thirty days in the war of 1812. The survivors are estimated at the number of about one. All these pensions are payable from and after the passage of the act at the rate of eight dollars per month.

Another section of the bill admits the surviving widows of the soldiers who served in the wars of 1811 and 1812 whose husbands served for the period of thirty days, provided they were married prior to the treaty of peace with Great Britain and have never remarried.

Another section restores to the pension-roll the names of all persons now surviving heretofore pensioned on account of service in the war of 1812 whose names were stricken from the roll in pursuance of the act of February 4, 1862, their pensions to be paid from and after the passage of the act. The Commissioner of Pensions states in a letter to me that the number who were thus stricken from the rolls was two hundred, and he estimates that of that number there are about sixty remaining to be benefited by this act.

I may further state in this connection in relation to the number of surviving soldiers of the war of 1812 who served for the period of thirty days, that the Commissioner of Pensions in a letter to me dated the 16th of December, 1873, estimated that, including them and the widows of those who were dead, there would be fifty-four hundred and twenty-nine added to the pension-roll. Of course that number is considerably diminished since that time, since the average age of the survivors of the war of 1812 is now about eighty-one years.

These are the main provisions of the substituted bill which the committee have recommended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar and the amendment printed.

Mr. PRATT. The same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1057) amending an act granting pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the war of 1812, and the widows of deceased soldiers, approved February 14, 1871, have instructed me to report it back with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed, inasmuch as the provisions of this bill are incorporated in the bill which I have just reported.

The bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following petitions, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

The petition of John Akley, a soldier of the war of 1812, praying to be allowed a pension;

The petition of Christy Jordan, of Missouri, praying to be granted a pension for services rendered in the war of 1812, and also that a land warrant may be issued to him;

The petition of Walter Wheatley, a citizen of Ohio, praying to be allowed a pension on account of services rendered in the war of 1812;

The memorial of Andrew Johns, delegate from the Seneca Nation of Indians, asking that pensions may be allowed to such of the survivors of that nation as served in the war of 1812;

The petition of members of the Seneca tribe of Indians who cooperated with the American forces in the war of 1812, asking to be placed on the pension-roll;

The petition of Joseph Peach and Philemon Jones, praying to be allowed pensions for services rendered in the war of 1812;

The petition of Edward B. Rollins, a soldier in the war of 1812, praying to be allowed a pension; and

The petition of citizens of Pennsylvania, praying the passage of a law granting pensions to soldiers of the war of 1812.

Mr. PRATT also, from the same committee, who were instructed by a resolution of the Senate to inquire into the propriety of reporting a bill placing on the pension-roll, at the rate of eight dollars per month, the surviving soldiers of the Indian war of 1811; also the widows of such as were dead, who were married before the 1st day of January, 1825, asked to be discharged from the further consideration of the subject, the committee having taken action thereon; which was agreed to.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

Mr. CLAYTON. The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 570) to organize the Territory of Oklahoma and for the better protection of the Indian tribes therein, and for other purposes, have instructed me to submit a written report; and as it is short, I ask to have it read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred Senate bill No. 570, to organize the Territory of Oklahoma and for the better protection of the Indian tribes therein, and for other purposes, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The committee recommend that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until the second Monday in December next.

From the information your committee have been able to obtain relating to affairs in the Indian Territory, they are impressed with the belief that the welfare of the Indian tribes, the better administration of justice, and the interests of the United States alike demand additional legislation looking toward the better government of said Territory and the civilization of the Indians.

Before entering upon the consideration of a subject of such magnitude and importance, it seems desirable that the Senate should take some steps to procure the fullest and most reliable information relating to affairs in the said territory, the sentiments and desires of the lawful inhabitants, and their capacity for self-government under a territorial form.

In furtherance of this idea your committee would most respectfully recommend that the whole subject be placed in the hands of a special committee of the Senate, with authority to visit the Indian Territory, and with such powers as this body should think proper to confer upon them.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move that the report be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLAYTON. I also move that the consideration of the bill be postponed until the second Monday in December, next.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CLAYTON. I also report with this bill sundry memorials bearing on the same subject, and move that the Committee be discharged from their further consideration.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1257) to provide for the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at Decatur, Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) If there be no resolutions, the remainder of the morning hour is allotted to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. SARGENT. Before the committee proceeds I should like to make a suggestion and a statement. I would suggest that to-day, the Saturday session, after the committee now to be called shall have concluded its business, the next committee on the Calendar be called and that the day be devoted to the consideration of reports from committees in the order that they would be called during the morning hour; and at the conclusion of the day's session I should like to ask the indulgence of the Senate that the Louisiana question may be taken up to be the unfinished business on Monday, at which time I desire to submit some remarks, hoping that by then I shall be able to regain sufficient strength to proceed with the speech which I should have made the other day if I had not been interrupted by sickness. I make the suggestion now that the Committee on the District of Columbia proceed until it has finished its business and that afterward the next committee be called.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the suggestion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I object, not in order to compel my friend to make his speech to-day.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not feel strong enough to speak to-day, but I hope to be by Monday.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I say I do not make the objection in order to compel the Senator to make his speech to-day; but I think we had better follow the regular order of business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Committee on the District of Columbia is entitled to the remainder of the morning hour for bills from that committee.

METROPOLITAN POLICE.

Mr. SPENCER. On behalf of the committee I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 304.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 304) relative to the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill proposes to clothe the Court of Claims with jurisdiction of all claims by any member or members of the Metropolitan police of the District of Columbia, under or by virtue of joint resolution approved February 28, 1867, entitled "Joint resolution giving additional compensation to certain employes in the civil service of the Government at Washington."

The Committee on the District of Columbia proposed to amend the bill by inserting in line 4 after the word "claims" the words "if any there be," and to insert at the end of the bill the following proviso:

Provided, That this resolution shall not be construed so as to create any new claim or liability under the said resolution approved February 28, 1867.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have that bill explained. It relates to creating a jurisdiction in the Court of Claims over certain asserted claims that I suspect are barred by the statute of limitations. If they are not barred by the statute of limitations and are claims of contract, then the Court of Claims has jurisdiction now. In order that the law part of that affair may be investigated, I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, where it ought to have gone in the first instance.

Mr. SPENCER. I will state to the Senator from Vermont that there is a printed report in the case which can be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is purely a law matter, and I think it ought to be considered by the law committee.

Mr. SPENCER. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON STREET RAILROAD.

Mr. SPENCER. I move to proceed to the consideration of House bill No. 2102.

The motion was agreed to; and the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2102) to incorporate the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railroad Company was resumed as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That bill has been fully considered as in Committee of the Whole, and various amendments suggested by the honorable Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] were placed on the bill at the last session.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the bill be read.

The bill was read.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. On page—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the time of the Committee on the District of Columbia be extended for an hour.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I object to. I shall not object to three-quarters of an hour longer, which will give them a whole hour.

Mr. SHERMAN. An hour from the time they commenced ought to be enough.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is three-quarters of an hour from now.

Mr. CHANDLER. I give notice that when that time is up I will call up the steamboat bill.

Mr. SPENCER. I accept the suggestion of three-quarters of an hour.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to that suggestion.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In section 1, line 16, I move to amend by striking out the word "Third" and inserting "Fourth;" also in line 17 by striking out "Third" and inserting "Fourth;" and in the same line by striking out all after the word "west" in that line and also the first word of the following line, the words being "to its intersection with New Jersey avenue, thence northwest along New Jersey avenue," so as to read:

Along said First street west to Massachusetts avenue; thence northwest along said avenue to Fourth street west; thence along Fourth street west to O street north; thence along O street north to Twelfth street west, &c.

The object of the amendment is to bring the road one block nearer the new market, and thereby better accommodate the public.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That strikes out New Jersey avenue.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now, I move, on the same principle of keeping this road out of the avenues, which are about all there are left to other people than corporations, to strike out in line 15 of section 1 the words "Massachusetts avenue," and insert "G street north;" and in line 16 to strike out "northwest" and insert "west," and strike out the word "avenue," and insert "G street;" so as to read:

And running thence due north along said First street west to G street north, thence west along said street to Fourth street west.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I do not think that this amendment should be adopted. It is true that as the bill now stands the road runs for three blocks on Massachusetts avenue. So far as that avenue is concerned, while the Senate and the city might object to a railroad running through the whole length of the avenue, the running of a railroad simply along the avenue for the distance of three blocks makes the road much more easily operated and I think much more generally convenient for the public, and I do not believe it will seriously mar the beauty or the usefulness of the avenue. The bill was amended in very many particulars during the last session when it was before the Senate, and I should be very glad if it could be passed now with those amendments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not understand whether the Senator from Nebraska opposed this amendment or not. If he does not oppose it, I do not wish to take up time in stating the reasons for it to the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I stated that I did oppose the amendment because while it might be objectionable to run the road the whole length of that avenue, as the honorable Senator said, because it would mar the beauty of the avenue and possibly interfere with its usefulness as a driving-street, yet I believed that to run the road a short distance on that avenue would add much to the usefulness and convenience of the road to the public, and would not interfere with the use of the avenue to any such extent as would render it desirable to adopt the amendment of the Senator from Vermont. I stated further that very many amendments were placed upon the bill at the suggestion and on the motion of the honorable Senator at the last session; but I trust this amendment will not be insisted upon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope the Senator does not suppose that any amendments that I proposed at the last session, and which were agreed to, were bad ones. I think they were all satisfactory to him.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I thought that very many of them were entirely unnecessary, but to satisfy the honorable Senator I yielded to many of them. Some of them I thought were very good. This one I happen to think is not necessary, and consequently I am opposed to it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is perfectly right, but that makes it necessary that I should state to the Senate the ground upon which I think it is a proper and wholesome amendment.

Massachusetts avenue is nearly five miles long, the only avenue that crosses the entire city in a direct line. I have been told it is five miles long, but now I am told by my colleague that it is not five miles long. I will not take up the time of the Senate on the question of how long it is; at any rate it goes from Rock Creek, on the borders of Georgetown, to the Eastern Branch, whatever the distance may be. It is in the upper part of the city, and an avenue that is wide. It is not blocked up by business traffic, there being scarcely any stores or manufacturing operations upon it, so that the heavy business of the town is and always will be of course below. Besides, it is the only avenue in the city where people can foot or on horseback or in carriages or in any other way may have a free scope through the town without the danger and inconvenience that arise where these rail-tracks are, with the stone pavements between them generally ridged and uneven.

Now, it is proposed to grant privileges to this corporation to set up for their own profit and for the public good—but I suppose chiefly for their own profit—this railway. They choose to take two blocks out of the middle of Massachusetts avenue to run their railroad upon it. I propose that they shall turn out of First street west one block below Massachusetts avenue and keep along G street until they strike Fourth street, and go up that. The distance run in this way will not be fifteen rods farther. It is merely the difference between making a right-angle for two blocks and making an oblique one, coming out to the same point. Now that the road is made to go on Fourth street instead of Third street, it will have three blocks upon Massachusetts avenue.

I think it is wrong in the interest of the public convenience of this city that this avenue should be blocked up by street cars. There is no public necessity for it; and that being the case, I submit that this avenue, which is to be a fine one in the end, shall not be destroyed for its best purposes by the unnecessary location of a railroad in it; and my motion therefore is to require this company to keep out of this avenue, as the Senate has just required that they shall keep out of New Jersey avenue, and for a very good reason too, so that they shall pursue the streets and leave the avenue alone. I am sure that every person interested in the propriety and comfort of the city who knows anything about that avenue ought to agree with me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 10, noes 16; no quorum voting.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. SPENCER. I appeal to the Senator from Nebraska to accept the amendment. I think it is not very material.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Rather than take the time of the Senate I will yield and allow the amendment to be put upon the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the amendment will be considered as agreed to. The amendment is agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I suggest that there is no quorum, and until by a count we ascertain the presence of a quorum we cannot proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood that there was no objection.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection; but the Chair ought to ascertain that there is a quorum here, as I have no doubt there is.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will not insist on that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will not insist on it except to have the record show that we are not acting without a quorum. It will not take half a minute to learn the fact. The Chair will merely count the Senate. I think there is a quorum in the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (having made a count.) There are forty Senators present—a quorum.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not wish to interfere at all with the location of these railroads, except where they interfere with the public grounds, but I must say that this railroad perhaps is as much open to as many objections as any of the propositions that have been presented, except that one is saved. This road now is relieved of the objection of passing through Massachusetts avenue, but it runs nearly the entire length of Ohio avenue, a large portion of Maryland avenue, a portion of Virginia avenue, and crosses in front of the Capitol, and then again crosses the mall on Twelfth street.

It has appeared to me heretofore that Congress ought to be relieved from the location of these railroads. This one runs right around in the heart of the city, and does not give any accommodation to the remoter parts scarcely at all, except in the north direction, and it does not run to the extreme north even there by four or five blocks. At the last session the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds proposed a measure for the appointment of a commission that should locate these railroads and authorize them to be built wherever the public convenience required them, and not merely that they should be confined as private interests might at first dictate, and thereby compel the construction of a great many railroads in order to get the whole city accommodated.

It is clearly obvious that road may be made a paying road; but hereafter roads that are desired to be constructed in order to accommodate other portions of the city will be so unremunerative that they cannot be constructed, and therefore the remote parts of the city will be destitute, while we are crowded, huddled with a large number of railroads in the center of the city.

I wish that the Senator from Nebraska would consent to allow the proposition to have a commission locate these roads put on this bill and have it apply to all of them. I have no interest in the matter more than any other Senator. I desire to have these roads built where the interests of the people require them; but I do not like this mode of legislating merely upon the application of a few individuals where a road may be picked out and all the fat places acquired, while all the lean places are left out in the cold.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The honorable Senator objects to this road, apparently because it will be useful, because it will accommodate a great many people, because it will run in the center of the city, because he thinks it may pay. If there is any use in passing any railroad bills at all, it seems to me these are the very arguments which should be brought to bear in favor of their passage. We do not want railroads in the remote parts of the city where no people live; we do not want railroads at the outskirts where no one is to be accommodated; but we want them where the people go, where business goes, where the people are who are to be accommodated by their use; and I think if any bill has been before the Senate or is likely to be which carries out that idea thoroughly and completely, this is the one. Beginning at Fourteenth street, on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue, this road passes down near the Agricultural Bureau, then up by the avenue in front of the Capitol, across in front of the Capitol, without any additional railroad tracks, to which the Senator objects, and up by the new market and around on O street, and back again to the place of beginning. I believe that will accommodate more people than any other railroad in this city, without interfering either with the harmony or beauty of the city in any respect. Many amendments have been incorporated in the bill which were suggested by the Senators from Vermont at the last session, guarding it carefully and thoroughly in every respect, and I trust we shall now be able to put the bill on its passage.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will offer Senate bill No. 861 as an additional section to this bill, and I do so for the purpose of eliciting the sense of the Senate in relation to this matter. I am entirely indifferent what action shall be taken, but it seems to me that all of these railroads ought to be regulated upon some system.

There is another thing in relation to the matter that is not regulated by these private charters. I think that there ought to be a just system of taxation. Here the city and the General Government are at great expense in fixing the grades of the streets and avenues, and these roads have nothing to do but lay their track; it costs them nothing for the land. It strikes me that a just system of taxation ought to be provided for. I therefore offer this as an additional section to the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I trust that that additional bill of the honorable Senator will not be placed as an amendment upon this bill. If the honorable Senator desires a commission for the purpose of establishing or controlling the street railroads of the city, let him bring in his bill as an independent proposition, and not undertake to destroy this bill by putting an entirely different proposition upon it. I hope the Senate will vote down the amendment.

Mr. MORTON. It has been represented to me that this projected railroad is important to the interests of a large class of people in this city. The street-cars are the people's carriages; and no street-railroad will be built where it is not needed, because if it is not needed it will not pay. There can be no system of street railroads, as I understand it. They are built from time to time according to the growth and development of the city where they are needed, and intelligent men will not build them where there are already other railroads that supply the place. A street railroad will only pay upon condition that there is business for it to transact that is not already provided for by other railroads, and therefore they must be built from time to time as the growth of business and the growth of the city demand.

Now, if intelligent men are willing to build this road, believing it will pay, it is because it is needed and there people who will patronize the road and make it profitable. If there are already other roads that do the business, then it will not pay. The presumption, therefore, is that the road is needed and there is no existing road that supplies the demand. Now, to wait for a general classification of street railroads, to find where they ought all to go, and to refuse to authorize this road because it may interfere with the building of some other road in the future, it seems to me, is not tenable ground.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Vermont, [Mr. MORRILL.]

Mr. ALLISON and Mr. ROBERTSON. Let the amendment be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill the following:

That the chief officer of Engineers of the Army of the United States, the engineer officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in the city of Washington, and three other suitable and competent persons, to be selected by the President of the United States, are hereby constituted a commission to examine the whole subject of steam-railway tracks entering the District of Columbia, both as to existing roads and those in course of construction, and especially as to connections which will best accommodate travel and trade by land and water; the location and construction of tracks and depots, so as to diminish and limit the obstruction of streets, avenues and public grounds as far as possible; and also to examine as to the location of horse-railways now existing or authorized, and what more are or will be required for the future accommodation of the city of Washington, and where such railroads may be properly established without interfering with public grounds and with the least inconvenience to avenues and streets; and further to examine and report upon some just and equitable system of taxation for horse-railways, based upon the amount of gross or net receipts, and report a full and comprehensive plan, embracing all the points herein mentioned and all matters properly connected therewith to Congress, on the 1st of December, 1875.

Mr. SPENCER. I submit that it is hardly fair and just to attach that amendment to a bill to build a street railroad in the District of Columbia. I hope the Senator from Vermont will withdraw the amendment, and when his committee is called have the measure considered as a separate bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I consider that this is an exceedingly appropriate place to put this measure, because after all the legislation had been had it would seem rather hard after a railroad company had located its road to change its track and its direction; but if the Committee on the District of Columbia are opposed to it, I do not desire to antagonize them at all. It seems to me that they ought not to be opposed to it, for this is only creating a board that will report what is necessary and proper to be done under the circumstances in relation to all railroads. But if the committee feel that it is antagonistic to this bill or any other, I will withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire to offer an amendment which becomes necessary on account of the board of public works not now being in existence. In section 4, line 5, I move to strike out "board of public works" and insert "board of commissioners of the District of Columbia, and if there be at any time no such board, then by the Secretary of War;" so as to read:

That the said corporation hereby created shall be bound to keep said tracks and a space of two feet beyond the outer rails thereof, and also the space between the tracks, at all times well paved and in good order, in such manner and of such material as may be required by the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I desire also to transpose section 6 and make it the last section of the bill. It is a section which provides that this act may at any time be altered, amended, or repealed by Congress. I suppose there will be no objection to that change.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the transposition will be made. The Chair hears no objection.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON AND POINT LOOKOUT RAILROAD.

Mr. SPENCER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 463.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill (S. No. 463) supplementary to the act entitled "An act to authorize the Washington City and Point Lookout Railroad to extend a railroad into and within the District of Columbia," approved January 22, 1873, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on the District of Columbia reported the bill with amendments. The first amendment was in section 1, line 13, after the words "constructed or" to insert "for the purpose of locating or constructing."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 2, line 4, after the word "be" insert "and continue ever hereafter to be."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 2, after the word "fronting," in line 8, to insert "the extreme ends of."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 2, line 11, after the word "side-track" to insert "of sufficient length to accommodate two freight-cars."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 2, line 14, to strike out after the word "that" the words "all passenger trains" and insert "at least one passenger or accommodation train going each way;" and to strike out in lines 17, 18, 19, and 20 the words "whenever the superintendent of the hospital shall desire it; and no train or car shall unnecessarily stop upon the track in front of the hospital grounds without the consent of the superintendent;" and in line 21 strike out after "wharf" the words "shall be," and strike out "and" and insert "shall be;" so as to read:

That within the same period a switch and side-track of sufficient length to accommodate two freight cars shall be constructed, upon which cars loaded with supplies for the hospital may be run and allowed to stand until they are unloaded; that at least one passenger or accommodation train going each way shall stop daily upon the hospital wharf, and leave or take passengers.

The amendments were agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 2, line 24, to insert before "visitors" the words "board of," and in line 25 to strike out "convenience of that" and insert "interest of the;" so as to read:

That a safe and commodious wharf already constructed shall be constantly maintained at the expense and cost of the railroad company, outside of the road, in such a position and in such a manner as, in the opinion of the superintendent and board of visitors of the hospital, shall best subserve the interests of the institution.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in section 2, line 30, after the word "constructed" to insert "within three months after the passage of this act," and before the word "maintained" to insert "thereafter," and after "railroad-track," in line 33, to insert—

That the hospital shall have the right to build a bridge over the railroad track in order to reach the outer end of its wharf.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. May I ask the Senator from Nebraska whether the duty of the building such a bridge as that should not be changed from the Insane Hospital to the railroad company? It seems to me that if they cross so as to compel the hospital to build a bridge, the burden is here put upon the wrong party.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will state in answer to the honorable Senator that the section was put in that shape in accordance with the suggestion and at the request of Dr. Nichols. I made the same suggestion to him that the Senator now makes, and he said that he thought it was not advisable and he did not ask or desire that privilege. I have no objection to such an amendment as the Senator suggests, but I think it is perhaps unnecessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 3. That no railroad or other corporation at present existing, or which may be hereafter incorporated, shall enter upon any lot, square, or other ground, or part thereof, owned or held by the United States within the limits of the District of Columbia, for any purposes whatever, except as may hereafter be allowed by special act of Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPENCER. I offer the following as an additional section:

SEC. 4. That this shall be at all times subject to be amended or repealed by Congress.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ANACOSTIA AND POTOMAC RIVER RAILROAD.

Mr. SPENCER. The next bill is the bill (S. No. 265) to establish the Corcoran Park and Zoological Garden, near the capital, in the District of Columbia, and to incorporate a society to maintain the same, and a company to construct a street-railroad thereto; but the Senator from Arkansas who reported the bill [Mr. DORSEY] is not in his seat, and I will pass that over until he comes in. I move to take up next the bill (S. No. 575) giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad, and to regulate its construction and operation.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There is a bill which has passed the House precisely similar in its provisions. Let the House bill be substituted for the Senate bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to that suggestion.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 2103) giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad and to regulate its construction and operation.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. In line 3 of section 2 I move to strike out the words "board of public works for the District of Columbia" and insert "executive authority of the District of Columbia."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I should like the Senator from Nebraska to explain where the track of this road is to run when it shall be completed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The road begins on the south side of Pennsylvania avenue at Fourteenth street, passes down that street and along the wharf and around so as to accommodate the heavy business near the river.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Does it not cross the mall on Fourteenth street?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It begins on Fourteenth street and runs down that street to near the river and passes along near the wharves, thus accommodating the heavy business in that direction, and around the river front down to the navy-yard bridge. It seems in that way to accommodate a class of people who are now entirely without railroad facilities of that kind. It has been petitioned for largely, and the committee believe that it is needed for the convenience of the public.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. CLAYTON, it was Ordered, That E. J. Woolum have leave to withdraw his papers from the files of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLINTON LLOYD, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3911) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. No. 764) to remove the political disabilities of Henry Heth, of Virginia.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 796) to protect all citizens in their civil and equal rights, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had non-concurred in the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3825) to amend the national-bank act and fixing the compensation of national-bank examiners; it asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. HORACE MAYNARD of Tennessee, Mr. CLINTON L. MERRIAM of New York, and Mr. MILTON J. DURHAM of Kentucky, managers at the same on its part.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time allotted to the Committee on the District of Columbia has expired.

Mr. CHANDLER. I move that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of the steamboat bill.

Mr. SPENCER. I hope the Senator from Michigan will yield to the Committee on the District of Columbia an hour longer.

Mr. CHANDLER. I cannot possibly do it unless that be the will of the Senate.

Mr. SPENCER. There are a number of important bills reported by the District Committee which have not been acted upon which there will be no objection to whatever. If the Senator will yield to us one hour longer, we shall be able to pass those bills. Some of them are of a great deal of consequence, and there can be no objection to them. I appeal to the Senator to give us an hour longer.

Mr. CHANDLER. I cannot yield unless it be the will of the Senate. I make my motion and ask for a vote.

Mr. SPENCER. Then I hope the Senate will give the District Committee the time needed and vote down the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will not press his motion now. We have only had three-quarters of an hour. We have many important bills to which I think there will be no objection and which will give rise to no debate. It is approaching the close of the session and perhaps the District Committee will not have another opportunity. I should like at least half an hour given to the District Committee if so much time is needed. If the honorable Senator from Michigan will give way, we may compromise on that. I hope the Senate will not crowd off this committee with three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. BOGY. I hope the steamboat bill will be taken up. It is a very important matter, and it is late in the session and that bill ought to be passed promptly.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Michigan, [Mr. CHANDLER.]

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 24, noes 17.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken resulted—yeas 27, nays 16; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Bayard, Boggy, Boreman, Chandler, Cooper, Davis, Ferry of Michigan, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Harvey, Ingalls, Johnston, McCreery, Morton, Pease, Pratt, Ramsey, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Sprague, Stevenson, Thurman, West, and Wright—27.

NAYS—Messrs. Boutwell, Conkling, Flanagan, Gilbert, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hitchcock, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Spencer, Tipton, Wadleigh, and Washburn—16.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Howe, Jones, Kelly, Lewis, Logan, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Oglesby, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stewart, Stockton, and Windom—29.

So the motion was agreed to.

COMPENSATION OF NATIONAL-BANK EXAMINERS.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 3825) to amend the national-bank act and fixing the compensation of national-bank examiners, disagreed to by the House.

On motion of Mr. SCOTT, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendment to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the Vice-President appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Messrs. SCOTT, MORRILL of Vermont, and BAYARD.

LEGAL DAY'S WORK.

Mr. CONKLING. I ask that the bill (H. R. No. 2976) to define a legal day's work in certain cases which was indefinitely postponed be put upon the Calendar. It relates to the railway-car conductors in this District. I am requested to make the motion, and I suppose there will be no objection to it. The bill was reported back adversely some days ago and indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

HOUSE CONTINGENT FUND.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask that the bill from the House making an appropriation for the contingent fund of the House, which I understand it is quite necessary should be passed at once, be taken up and acted on.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will lay the bill before the Senate, if there be no objection.

By unanimous consent the bill (H. R. No. 4561) to make an appropriation to the contingent fund of the House of Representatives was read twice and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $20,000 to be added to the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What does that mean?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It means this: That the contingent fund of the House of Representatives has run short by reason of the expenditures necessarily involved by the committees of investigation which have been sent in various directions. I understand it to be necessary on that account.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STEAMBOAT LAW.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1588) to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to the security of life on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes.

Mr. SCOTT. I inquire whether the bill has not been read clear through and one or two verbal amendments made?

Mr. CHANDLER. The bill has been read about half through, I will inform the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the bill has not been read entirely through. The Secretary will resume the reading at the point where it was left off before. The bill was read to the end of the forty-second section.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Although I am on the committee from which this bill came, I should like to have a statement from the chairman of the committee as to the changes that are made by it when compared with the existing law, and also whether any officer of the Government who from his position is bound to have an opinion upon the expediency of this measure has expressed an opinion in favor of it. For my own part I think the bill ought not to pass, and certainly ought not to pass without an exposition of its character to the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. I will state to the Senator from Massachusetts that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] has a recommendation from the supervising inspector-general for the passage of this bill. He has given it, as I am informed, a very thorough investigation. The most of this bill corresponds with the old law. I have the different sections marked; but the Senate must see that as it is a bill of some eighty pages it would take some time to go through and give an explanation of everything in it. I think it is a good bill, and I hope the Senate will pass it precisely as it came from the committee and as it passed the other House.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Michigan referred to a letter in my possession from the Secretary of the Treasury relating to this bill, and which he, as the chairman of the committee, desires to have read. I will send it to the Chair so that it may be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE SUPERVISING INSPECTOR-GENERAL,
January 27, 1875.

SIR: Agreeably to the request contained in a communication addressed to the Department by Hon. JOHN SCOTT, United States Senator, under date of the 16th instant, and referred to this office for an opinion, in general terms, as to the respective merits of the proposed bill to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to the security of life on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes, now pending in the United States Senate, as compared with the present law, I have the honor to report that I have examined the provisions of the proposed bill as fully as the time afforded would permit, and consider it in many respects better adapted to secure the objects of such enactments than the provisions of the present law. Its requirements are in many instances much more practical and comprehensive and better adapted to meet existing necessities, while they afford every reasonable protection to life and property against the dangers incident to steam navigation. The bill in question is founded on the act of February 28, 1871, about thirty sections of the said act having been incorporated in the proposed bill without alteration, while many are retained with slight amendment. All the features of the present law which have proved to be practically valuable appear to have been retained in the proposed bill, and many have been added, the value of which, in the light of past experience, cannot be doubted. Some of the provisions of the present law which are worthless or pernicious have been omitted. The several provisions of the bill which relate to the prevention and extinguishment of fire, the construction and management of vessels, and the saving of life in case of necessary abandonment, and the appurtenances required to be attached to steam-boilers to secure their safety and facilitate their proper management, I consider both reasonable and sufficient. The provisions of the bill relative to the stamping of boiler-plates and the required guarantee of quality and strength by the manufacturer are a great improvement on the provisions of the present law, and will result in the production and use of a superior quality of boiler-plates quite sufficient to compensate for the proposed increase of working steam pressure allowable on boilers made of iron or steel plates manufactured under the provisions of this bill.

Very respectfully,

WILLIAM BURNETT,
Supervising Inspector-General.

Hon. B. H. BRISTOW,
Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Mr. President, I may say in regard to the bill—and I say it as much in complaint of myself as of any other one—that it has not had in the committee the consideration that the subject deserves. The length of the bill, as the chairman says, precludes the careful analysis of all its provisions; but one sentence will express its character, and that is that in every particular it diminishes existing securities for the safety of life and property. It is in fact a bill to leave in a very large degree the character of the equipment of steam-vessels for the protection of life and property to the owners and managers of steam-vessels, in the particulars that it allows the transportation, upon vessels carrying passengers, of every kind of combustible material without adequate securities; that it dispenses, in regard to boilers with steam-gauges, with lock-up safety-valves and with other securities that have been deemed essential to protect the public against the hazardous misapplication of steam power. Take, for example, another provision in the existing law, that every steam-vessel shall be provided with life-preservers containing at least six pounds of solid block cork, each pound capable of supporting four pounds' weight upon the water, making each life-preserver equal as security to the support of twenty-four pounds of solid weight. This bill provides—

That every steam-vessel (except ferry-boats and canal-boats)—

Consider what that exception is—

That every steam-vessel (except ferry-boats and canal-boats) carrying passengers shall be provided with a good life-preserver, containing not less than six pounds of good cork blocks, or other approved life-preservers of equal efficiency, capable of sustaining, when immersed in water, eighteen pounds of iron.

There, in the first place, is a reduction of six pounds, or 25 per cent. of the supporting power of the life-preserver. Then here is the phrase introduced, "or other approved life-preservers of equal efficiency" as a substitute for the block cork, whose efficiency is perfectly well known. When I inquired of a person that was bound to know, the superintendent of the steamboat service in the Treasury Department, what was the meaning of this phrase "other approved life-preservers of equal efficiency," he said there was a patented invention for the manufacture of life-preservers from cork-dust, and that the idea was to allow a substitute of this new invention for solid block cork.

Now, as a matter of human life, I think when the amount of money at stake is so inconsiderable there can be no excuse for Congress to allow such a change in the law. I speak of this not because of its gravity in and of itself, but as an indication of the purpose and the policy of this bill through eighty pages and seventy-five sections to diminish the security of life and property upon the waters of the country, and for no object, as far as I can see, except to diminish the expense of transportation upon the waters of the country; and when we consider that the internal navigation, as the coasting trade of the country, is a monopoly, if the expense of fitting out a steam-vessel upon the rivers or lakes of the country is increased 5, 10, or 15 per cent. in consequence of the security given to life and property by legislation, it is a burden that bears equally upon the whole business; and as the business is a monopoly, it does not interfere materially with it. During part of the year, to be sure, steam navigation upon water comes in competition with railroad transportation on land; but during the season when steamboats are mostly employed, their charges for transportation are so low that the competition is substantially among themselves.

Mr. SCOTT. From what part of the bill did the Senator read?

Mr. BOUTWELL. From the eighth section, twelfth page, in regard to life-preservers; and if the Senator has before him a copy of the existing laws, rules, and regulations, page 77, he will find this provision:

Every life-preserver, adjustable to the body of a person, shall be made of good sound cork blocks and other suitable material, with belts and shoulder-straps properly attached, and shall be so constructed as to place the cork underneath the shoulders and around the body of the person wearing it; and it shall be the duty of the inspector to see by actual examination that every such life-preserver contains at least six pounds of good cork, which shall have a buoyancy of at least four pounds to each pound of cork.

In this connection I may say that the use of the lock-up safety-valve is abandoned, the use of self-adjusting steam-gauges is abandoned in this bill, and provision is made for transportation of various kinds of combustible material. In section 4, on page 4:

That, except on ferry-boats—

And one would suppose from reading it these articles were not to be carried; but the provision is:

That, except on ferry-boats, no loose hay, (unless for feeding stock on board,) loose cotton, or loose hemp, camphene, nitro-glycerine, naphtha, benzine, benzole, coal-oil, crude or refined petroleum, or other like explosive burning-fluids, shall be carried as freight on any steamer carrying passengers, except where there is no other public means of conveyance.

And, further on, baled cotton is to be carried if in good merchantable shipping order, while under the existing law it is to be securely protected against danger from fire and bound with iron bands.

It is said by those who support the present bill that the self-interest of steamboat owners and managers is sufficient for the protection of the public. The law now in existence has been in operation three years. It was passed in 1871, but it cannot be said to have been in operation until the 1st of January, 1872. I have the statistics compiled from official sources for the years 1870, 1871, 1872, and 1873. The statistics for the year 1874 have not been collated, but I have good reason to believe that the result will show even greater security for life and property on the waters of the United States than is shown by the return for the years 1872 and 1873; and the years 1872 and 1873, as compared with the years 1870 and 1871 when the system was substantially what it will be under the proposed bill, show the advantage of the existing law.

In the year 1870 the casualties by fire were 35, in 1871 32, making an aggregate in the two years of 67. In the year 1872 they were 23, and in the year 1873 they were 29, making an aggregate of 52 in the last two years together against 67 in the first two years, and that in view of the fact that in the years 1870 and 1871 combined the steam-vessels licensed were 6,391 in number and in the years 1872 and 1873 the combined force was 7,157, showing a gain in the two last years over the first two years of 766 vessels, equal to 14 per cent.; and yet the diminution in the casualties by fire was about 33 per cent. So that there was a gain, when you consider the decreased number of accidents by fire and the additional number of vessels in service, of about 50 per cent.

The casualties by explosion in the year 1870 were 18; in 1871, 19; in 1872, 15; and in 1873, 5; showing, I think in a very marked degree, that the safeguards thrown around the steamboat service, especially in reference to the explosion of boilers, resulted in a very great gain in the matter of safety to the public. In the first two years the explosions were 37; in the last two years they were 20, and that in presence of the fact that the increase in the number of vessels in the service was about 14 per cent. I am told by those having in hand the statistics for the year 1874 that the return will be still more in favor of the advantages resulting from the present law.

An analysis of this bill shows—

Mr. SCOTT. Before the Senator passes from that point—for I desire to get from him as a member of this committee all the information I can—let me ask whether I am to understand him to say that the present bill diminishes or abolishes any of the protections provided in the former law in reference to the tests of boiler-plates and the efficiency of boilers?

Mr. BOUTWELL. The law is materially different in that respect. I cannot say, because I have not the knowledge of an expert, whether in that particular the proposed securities are better than those which now exist or otherwise; but I say that in all those particulars in which a person not an expert can judge of the security proposed by the bill and can judge also in those particulars of the securities furnished by the present law, the security furnished by the present law is far superior to that proposed in the bill, as in the matter of life-preservers, as in the matter of lock-up safety-valves, as in the matter of self-registering steam-gauges, as in the matter of transporting combustible materials upon the steam-vessels of the country.

The difficulty of ascertaining exactly the effect of the proposed bill is very great. Here are seventy-two sections, and thirty-three of these sections are taken from the existing law, but in the main it is to be said that those sections taken from the existing law do not touch the question of security for life and property on steam-vessels. There are thirty-eight sections amended, and I believe every section which does relate to security of life and property, as far as I observe, is subject to amendment in the proposed bill; and there is one additional section.

There are many points in this bill. I have a paper here which is in the nature of an examination of the various provisions of the bill, prepared by a gentleman who is very competent to judge of it, but I do not choose to go over these provisions in detail. I know they would be tedious to the Senate, and I do not know, if they were listened to, that they would be instructive. There is one other point in this bill, however, to which I will refer.

Here are numerous and intricate provisions in this bill, commencing on page 35, in section 29, rules for "coasting, steam and sail-vessels, and all such vessels navigating lakes, bays, rivers, inlets, sounds, and harbors, other than the waters flowing into the Gulf of Mexico, or their tributaries." They are to comply with certain rules in regard to passing each other. Those provisions are numerous; they are specific; they are embodied in this bill; and if the bill passes, they are to be embodied in the law. They refer to matters of very great importance to the safety of navigation. Whether these provisions are the result of an examination by an expert or by competent persons I cannot say. There is at the conclusion of this section a provision that the supervising inspectors may make other rules and regulations not inconsistent with those provided for in the bill; but I think myself that it is very hazardous to incorporate into law provisions relating to the details of navigation upon the water, and that it would be much better to leave that branch of the business subject to such rules as may be prescribed by the board of supervising inspectors, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

But, sir, I will not trouble the Senate further. The most I can say about this bill is that such examination as I have been able to give it, coupled with such experience as I have had in the administration of steamboat laws, leads me to think this a very dangerous experiment, and I feel entirely sure upon that point. I have no question that in various important particulars it diminishes the security for life and property furnished by the present law.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I have listened with great attention to the suggestions of the Senator from Massachusetts. It is our duty to pay attention to whatever may be said for or against any provision in this bill, because it is a very important subject indeed; and when Congress enacts a law upon it, it ought to be a good law. I shall occupy but little of the time of the Senate, however, in reply to what has been said by the Senator from Massachusetts. I say "in reply," because I have paid at this and former sessions of the Senate not a little attention to this subject, in which my constituents are very largely interested, in common with the whole western country and indeed the whole country where navigation such as is contemplated by this bill exists. Therefore I have anticipated these objections, considered them in my own mind, and acquired all the knowledge upon them that I was able to acquire.

The Senator from Massachusetts began by saying that every provision in the present law for the safety of persons or property is weakened by the bill in question. I beg leave to differ with the Senator, and to say that in my judgment the provisions for the safety of life and property in their practical operation will be more effective under this bill than they are under the existing law. Such seems to be the opinion of the chief officer of the board of inspectors, and such was the opinion of the convention of inspectors, the Government officers charged with executing this law and with general supervision over it. Such was their opinion, for they, as I understand, approved this bill.

But the Senator proceeded to specify. In the first place he alluded to the fact that petroleum and other combustible material may be carried on steam-vessels. That is the present law. The only difference that I am aware of between the present law and this bill is this, that the present law requires these combustible materials to be carried upon the guards or the fore-castle of the vessel. That has been found impracticable with respect to certain vessels embraced by the laws as they now exist, for there are vessels without guards, as the coasting-vessels. The consequence has been that the law could not be complied with. The only change in that respect which is made, as I understand by this bill, is by adding in the thirty-third and thirty-fourth lines of the fourth section, in reference to the place where these combustible materials may be carried, that they may be carried "in such other part of the steamer as the local inspectors shall designate in writing." It leaves the law to stand as it is, that this material "may be carried on the decks, guards, or fore-castle of any such steamer, at a secure distance from any fire or heat." That is the present law, and this bill adds to it, "or in such other part of the steamer as the local inspectors shall designate in writing."

Now, sir, why is that? It is first for the reason I have already mentioned, that in respect to a large number of vessels which are embraced by this legislation they have no guards, and therefore the law cannot strictly be complied with; but there is still another and a more material reason yet, which is, that in respect to a number of vessels there are safer places to carry these materials than either the fore-castle or the guards. Whenever a fire occurs on a steamer, if the combustion takes place on the fore-castle or on the guards of the vessel, the conflagration is immensely and speedily increased by the action of the winds; and many a vessel has been lost by a conflagration arising either upon the guards or fore-castle which would have been speedily suppressed if it had occurred in some other portion of the vessel. What greater safeguard can you require than this which is required, that if these materials are carried anywhere in that vessel other than the places specifically named in the act, it shall be a place to be designated by the local inspectors in writing? I think it will be found that that is an additional protection, and that is the opinion of those most interested in the subject, and also, as I understand, of the board of supervisors.

Mr. CONKLING. Does the Senator understand the change he has now stated is the only one made in this regard?

Mr. THURMAN. The only material one. There may be some others. If there are others, they have escaped my attention. I will not affirm positively, but I am not aware at this moment of any others in that respect.

The second point is the omission or dispensing with lock-up safety-valves. Why are lock-up safety-valves dispensed with in this bill? Because experience has found that they do more harm than good. How is this lock-up safety-valve? It is locked up and perhaps not inspected for six months; it may become out of order and yet may be relied upon by the officers or navigators of the vessel, they supposing it to be working well and therefore governing themselves by it, when, in point of fact, it is out of order and endangering the vessel every hour. Hence it is the universal opinion, I believe, of steamboat men, and I think it is the opinion of all who have investigated the subject and have a practical knowledge of it, that the lock-up safety-valve enhances rather than diminishes the dangers of the vessel. That is the reason that is dispensed with.

Then comes the life-preserver. The present law seems to be in favor of somebody who manufactures a particular kind of life-preserver. It seems to me that makes a sort of monopoly of the trade in life-preservers. This bill dispenses with that monopoly, and the only question is does it provide a sufficient life-preserver. There is no particular magic in a life-preserver with so many pounds of good sound cork in it, if you can have another life-preserver equally good of a different kind. There is no necessity for that. What is this provision in regard to life-preservers? Let us look at section 8:

That every steam-vessel (except ferry-boats and canal-boats) carrying passengers shall be provided with a good life-preserver, containing not less than six pounds of good cork blocks, or other approved life-preservers of equal efficiency, capable of sustaining, when immersed in water, eighteen pounds of iron, such life-preservers to be adjustable to the body under the arms, for each cabin-passenger which by the certificate the vessel is permitted to carry; also a good life-preserver for each deck or stowage passenger which the inspector's certificate shall allow her to carry, and including the officers and crew; which life-preservers shall be kept in convenient and accessible places on such vessel, in readiness for immediate use in case of accident.

What more can be required? What necessity is there to go further than that? All these vessels, with their appurtenances and equipments, are subject to inspection, and especially in respect to the requirements of law, the requirement that they shall have, among other things, life-preservers, fire apparatus, buckets to extinguish fire, and the like. These things are especially to be considered by the local inspectors. In every certificate given to a vessel it is stated whether that vessel has the requisite number of life-preservers and the requisite apparatus and machinery for extinguishing fire, so that it is not left to any negligence of the inspector at all. He is obliged to put it in the certificate itself and thus to show that the vessel has complied with the requirements of the law.

What is the next thing? That self-registering steam-gauges are dispensed with. I do not know how the fact is, but I am told that at the convention of the board of supervisors—and these supervisors, as we all know, are the Government officers charged with the supervision of this subject—the conclusion was unanimous on the part of that board that there was no self-registering steam-gauge in existence that could be relied upon or trusted, and that therefore they had best be dispensed with. Indeed, in respect to most of these matters, I may say that nearly every piece of self-acting machinery, the object of which is to do away with human supervision, only encourages negligence and omission of duty on the part of the persons navigating the vessel, and when they are accustomed to rely upon these automata and to dispense with their own personal supervision, experience has always proved that the danger was enhanced and the loss increased. But, sir, that is not all.

In the next place, the Senator mentions the rules in respect to navigation found in section 29. I am informed by gentlemen well acquainted with this subject and who have been engaged in this business for a long time that these are precisely the rules which have been in existence for twenty years, established by the board of supervisors and recognized by the courts. It is obviously important that these rules shall be uniform; it is obviously important that they shall be permanent, so that every person navigating a vessel may know what the rules are and may have no excuse of ignorance for non-observance of them. So far from these rules being fluctuating, as the Senator from Massachusetts seems to think they should be, in the varying opinion of inspectors from time to time, of one supervising here, another supervising there, it is of the highest importance that they should be uniform as far as possible and as permanent as possible. Every rule of navigation that results from the decision of a court becomes a permanent rule of the law and remains a permanent rule of the law unless the Legislature interfere and change it. So in regard to the most of these rules, which have the sanction of judicial decision already, there is the highest importance in their being permanent in their nature until it shall be found by experience that a rule ought to be changed and then legislation can be employed for the purpose of changing it.

I believe these are all the suggestions that were made by the Senator from Massachusetts; but there is one more point which has been made heretofore and I suppose it will be renewed, that this limits the liability of the owners of these vessels in a case of loss; but in respect to that it simply puts them on precisely the same footing that the vessels in Great Britain have been navigated under for now I believe more than a century.

Mr. BAYARD. In cases of a collision?

Mr. THURMAN. In cases of collision, fire, and the like. This is precisely the same rule that was adopted in regard to sea-going vessels in 1851, and by the decision of the Supreme Court extended to all vessels navigating the great lakes twenty-four years ago. What possible reason can exist why there should be a discrimination against river-going vessels and in favor of sea-going and lake-going vessels? There is no reason that can suggest itself to the mind, it seems to me, in favor of the law as it has stood in Great Britain for a century or more, in favor of the law as it has stood in this country in reference to sea-going and lake-going vessels for now nearly a quarter of a century, that is not equally strong in favor of the provisions of this bill on that subject.

Mr. President, this is a matter of great importance to those who are interested in the commerce of this country. As the law now stands as to river steamboats, the old common-law liability without the slightest relaxation upon the common carrier, every railroad in the country which is a competitor with river navigation has an advantage over the river navigation so great that river transportation becomes almost impossible, or is carried on under the most onerous disadvantages. How is it with the railroads? The stockholders in a railroad company have no individual liability whatever except in a few States where their individual liability is equal to the amount of their stock. With regard to the most of them, there is no individual liability whatsoever; they risk nothing but the stock they put in the company. The property of the company is liable and the stock of the stockholder which is invested in that company may be thereby lost to him; and that is the limit of his loss, whereas his competitor, the navigator upon the river, has not only his boat and everything that appertains to her liable for the loss, but he is individually liable to the very last cent of his property, and is thus put, in this competition between river and rail navigation, under this prodigious disadvantage, which has so often resulted in his utter ruin and destruction.

Sir, those who wish to see competition with railroads fostered, those who are complaining of the onerous charges made by railroads, those who talk in this Senate about monopoly and wish for cheap transportation, are bound to do what they can to foster river navigation and thus have the best of all possible competition with the rail.

I will not take up more of the time of the Senate now on this subject. I have only one word more to say on it. In respect to these questions of danger or loss, let me say to Senators who are not well acquainted with river navigation by steamers, which is principally in the interior of the country and largely in the West, that there is the strongest of all possible safeguards against fire or disaster of any kind that can destroy a steamer or injure the passengers or crew in the fact that in a large majority of cases the river steamboats are owned in part, and generally more than a moiety of them owned, by the men who navigate them. I think I may safely affirm that the captain, the mates, and the clerk own a majority of the stock in every small steamer that navigates the western waters. Even in respect to some great ones, worth perhaps a quarter of a million of dollars, a very large proportion, perhaps nearly a moiety, is owned by the officers of the boat who navigate her, and they always, and oftentimes their families, are on that boat. They have the strongest impulse that can actuate the mind of man, the impulse of self-preservation, as well as the protection of their own property, to make them careful. That accidents will occur, we all know. They occur upon the ocean. Great steamers are burned on the ocean. Collisions occur on the ocean, and more life is lost in a single ocean fire or a single collision on the ocean than is lost in the navigation of all the great rivers of America by river steamboats in the course of twelve months. No, sir, there is no reason for oppressing these people by onerous regulations. These regulations, some of which are so onerous, commenced under what I may say a panic. I remember it well. They commenced when the steamer Moselle blew up opposite the city of Cincinnati, which induced the enactment of regulations so severe that in practice they were found to be more injurious than beneficial. These regulations have been increased from time to time, and this great interest, which ought to be fostered by the Government, has been fettered under a mistaken idea that you can regulate this thing by law even to its minutest details.

Sir, I hope this bill will pass.

Mr. CONKLING. Before the Senator sits down will he allow me to gain a piece of information of him? He seems to have reflected on this subject, and I beg the Senator to inform us, speaking now of the act of 1871, which is the existing law, what are the evils and oppressions which need a remedy?

Mr. THURMAN. To go into that would require me to make a much longer speech than I wanted to make.

Mr. CONKLING. Not at all, if my friend apprehends my question. Omitting the rule of marine liability for which he contends, and I understand his views on that subject, will he enumerate (I do not ask him to go into them but to enumerate) the subjects in respect of which oppressive provisions are found in the existing law?

Mr. THURMAN. I was going to say to the Senator that I would do so, but that branch of this matter I prefer should be spoken upon, as we have agreed it shall be, by the Senator from Pennsylvania who is on the committee.

Mr. SCOTT. No; the Senator from New York is on the committee.

Mr. THURMAN. I thought the Senator from Pennsylvania was on the committee.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator from Pennsylvania would explain, I would be much obliged to him.

Mr. SCOTT. My friend from Ohio is under an entire misapprehension. I have been sitting here, as I usually do, at the feet of my learned friend from New York who is a member of the Committee on Commerce, and third, if I recollect aright, on the list, expecting to learn many things in regard to this bill from him, and as I see he is about to take the floor on the question, I shall wait until I hear him before I respond.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Pennsylvania is now under a greater misapprehension than he ascribes to the Senator from Ohio. I am, to be sure, on the Committee on Commerce. I have been a member of the Senate also for several years. I have in public and in private often asked others to inform me of the evils to be fairly complained of in the existing law, and I affirm that to this moment I have been unable to gather in committee, or here in the Senate, or elsewhere, anything but general declamation, with now and then a charge against the existing law which on examination could not be found sustained by any of its provisions. Never have I heard anything else, except in respect of an ice-boat, and boats towing coal-barges on a western river. There was complaint touching the regulation of steam pressure on tugs towing coal flotillas on the Ohio River; and the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] on an occasion not yet I hope forgotten, the regulation complained of having been temporarily relaxed before, obtained the consent of the Senate to make the relaxation permanent as to the freight craft referred to. This legislation was agreed to with an understanding in the Senate I think that it would obviate all serious ground of objection to the act of 1871, which we are now asked to sweep away with the voluminous alterations in the bill before us. Such being my ill success in learning why we are urged to this sweeping legislation, it will hardly be expected of me to anticipate the proposed grounds of action, and either to combat or agree to them, without light from some quarter.

No, sir, I do not rise now, to enter the debate. It would be premature and wasteful of time to do so. We have heard nothing from the chairman of the committee; we are not permitted to hear from the honorable Senator from Ohio. The Senator from Ohio excuses himself from giving us light, by saying that it has been "arranged" that the Senator from Pennsylvania shall enlighten us, and instantly the Senator from Pennsylvania rises to decline to let his light shine. I submit that before we proceed to enact into law eighty-three pages, relating to a subject at once so complex and so grave as this, some one ought to be able and willing to tell us two things: first, the requirements made upon us, that is the evils to be corrected; and, second, the changes which this voluminous proposed statute will make in the existing laws. It seems to me that a legislative proceeding would hardly be decorous, if even orderly, which, when a subject so important is under consideration—a bill to recast the statutes regulating the navigation for a continent—does not invoke so much as a statement from somebody of the effects of the measure as compared with existing law, and a statement of the needs or merits of the subject involved, or the defects in the legislation as it stands. Does either House of Congress, does any legislative body, ever do less than this? Is that a deliberative body wherein less than this is done?

Mr. President, I understand the cost at which a Senator asks a question which seems to challenge this bill. I understand the numbers and the persistence of the lobby which comes here into the Senate Chamber, and sits here, to superintend and oversee this proceeding. I understand the force which hires and governs a newspaper to pour out upon the members of the Senate gross and false abuse because they ask pause in rash legislation on this subject. I do not speak in ignorance of this. I do not speak in ignorance of the fact that this measure has but one parallel within my observation during fourteen years of congressional service, in the pertinacity with which it has been pushed upon Congress, or in the bold and assuming lobby which engineers it—a paid lobby which seems to bestow little effort on presenting the facts needed to support the seventy-three sections we are asked to accept in lump. I believe this scheme is fraught with danger to many lives, I might say millions of lives. It involves peril to the lives of my constituents, although in such a matter I would speak not alone for my constituents, but for all concerned. It involves nothing concerning me except my duty regardless of any single interest, and yet those who challenge its propriety will do so at the cost of public obloquy.

The honorable Senator from Ohio speaks of casualties by sea, and he reminds of an illustration of the course pursued to tear down opposition to this project. Some time ago a vessel went down in Long Island Sound, and the journal to which I have referred published that every life there lost was chargeable to me, because I had opposed the "steamboat bill;" and what think you was the reason given? Because on the last vessel there was not one state-room door with a parliamentary hinge. Not deeming myself an adept in a matter so occult, I applied to an expert, and after rummaging the pages of the "steamboat bill," he told me there was nothing there about a parliamentary hinge upon a state-room door; and yet it was published that I was to meet the sheeted ghosts of those who found a watery grave because there were no parliamentary hinges and because I had opposed the "steamboat bill."

Mr. BAYARD. Is a "parliamentary hinge" anything connected with a dead-lock? [Laughter.]

Mr. CONKLING. As to the latter subject, my honorable friend from Delaware must be an expert; he should testify in that regard. As to a parliamentary hinge, I have already confessed my ignorance; so I can hardly speak of either. I say that here is a measure pressed in behalf of personal interests. There is no interest in dollars and cents which has a right to assume jurisdiction of such a matter. It rises higher; it is broader; but far be it from me to intimate that any Senator would govern his vote by the mere pecuniary profit to be made by some owner of a ferry-boat or a steamboat, could he dispense with the safeguards now by law required.

Mr. President, at a proper time—I shall not have a word to say for the purpose of consuming time—I wish to assign my reasons for the vote I shall give against this bill, in so far as my reasons are not answered by some exposition to be made on the other side; and I trust the Senator from Pennsylvania or some other Senator will give us the information and explanation which is usually offered promptly in advance of all else when a grave measure is presented.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, the position of the Senator from New York at the present moment in regard to this bill seems to hinge somewhat upon a grievance—

Mr. CONKLING. O, no.

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator says "no." If it does not hinge upon a grievance, we certainly have had both a "parliamentary hinge" and a "grievance" introduced into the discussion. I have neither a grievance nor an interest in connection with this bill otherwise than as the grievances of the public and the interests of the public may be supposed to enter into it.

I am not called upon, and I shall not respond to any call that shall be made for the purpose, to enter into a disquisition of all the sections of this bill to point out the inconveniences of the act of 1871, but I will ask the attention of the Senate for one moment to what has followed the enactment of that law of 1871, so that we may understand the importance of final action upon this bill at this session, the importance of not permitting it to go over as it has heretofore gone over, and not obtain that discussion which its great importance deserves.

The act of 1871, to which reference has been made and out of which these grievances are supposed to have arisen, has in it just seventy-one sections, and the bill which we are considering has in it just seventy-three sections. The two which are added relate to the very important subjects, if I have read them aright, of a uniform for the inspectors and a limitation of the provisions of the bill to vessels of twelve tons. All the other seventy-one sections are simply enactments of the law of 1871 or amendments of that law of 1871, and these amendments, so far as I am informed, are brought about in this way: There is a supervising inspector-general provided for and there is a board of supervising inspectors. These supervisors met, as I understand it, in convention with the representatives of the steamboat interest of the United States, and finding defects and grievances—to use the words of the Senator from New York—in the law of 1871, they prepared a bill and introduced it in the Forty-second Congress. That bill was for the purpose of remedying the defects that were found in the law of 1871, to one of which the Senator from New York has already alluded, that with reference to the pressure of steam-tugs upon the Mississippi River—one so glaring that it had to be remedied by a special law, limited in its operation at the time; and a defect of a similar character so glaring that it had to be remedied by a special law, to permit the ice-boat which was to free the channel of the Delaware River to run at all and cut out the ice in that winter. The law had in it those two defects at least, which were so apparent that special enactments had to be obtained for the purpose of permitting steam-tugs to run on the Mississippi River and to permit the channel of the Delaware to be freed from ice so that vessels might reach the wharf at Philadelphia in that year. And, sir, the reason given at the time for the passage of both those special enactments, if I remember aright, was that a general bill was then pending for the purpose of curing the admitted and acknowledged defects of the law of 1871, and those special enactments were for that reason made temporary.

That general bill introduced into the Forty-second Congress passed the House; it came to the Senate; it was reported by the Committee on Commerce, of which the Senator from New York is an honored member; it passed the Senate; and it went to a committee of conference. That conference committee made a report, and the bill failed in that Congress because there was not time to consider that report. I make no charge against the Senator from New York for having defeated that bill. He is acting here upon high considerations of public duty, and I have no doubt that he can dismiss either sheeted ghosts or any animadversions in the newspapers without the slightest apprehension that they will ever disturb either his dreams or his repose. But, sir, the fact remains that the discussion which was demanded on that report of the committee of conference defeated that bill in the Forty-second Congress.

I know nothing about lobbies. I know the fact that the conferences between the inspectors appointed by the Government and the representatives of the steamboat interest have twice resulted in introducing these bills into Congress. The first one met the fate to which I have referred. The second one we have now before us. It passed the House at the last session; it was discussed there when it passed on the former occasion. It is now reported from our Committee on Commerce, and we are here to consider it, if necessary, in detail. It is a large bill, seventy-one sections, as I have said, re-enacting the law of 1871. But the large majority of these sections are upon subjects, as the Senator from Massachusetts has well said, upon which no one can have an opinion except those who are experts with reference to steamboats. I have made this criticism on the bill myself: that it sounded to me very much more like a specification for building a steamboat than a law for regulating a steamboat; and if there is a fault in it, it is that there is too much detail in that particular; but those details have been regulated by the inspector-general on the one side, with his associate inspectors and the steamboat interest upon the other side, who are conflicting in their interests, and I presume that they reached as near what is right with reference to those subjects of scientific detail or technical detail as it is possible to get a bill under those circumstances.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Will the Senator allow me a word?

Mr. SCOTT. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOUTWELL. Unless the Senator has some information in regard to the action of the board of supervising inspectors and the action of the supervising inspector-general which has not come to my knowledge, I think he is in error in saying that this bill, with the exception of the indorsement which has been given to it in the letter read to us from the Clerk's desk, has been prepared on conference with those officers and with their approval.

Mr. SCOTT. I have no other knowledge upon that subject than that which I derive from the public newspapers and that which has been communicated to me by those gentlemen who are interested in this subject; and that information is that this bill has been the result of conferences between the supervising inspectors and those representing the steamboat interest. Whether they have approved it in all its details or not I do not know; but the letter of the supervising inspector-general certainly does to the extent of saying that this bill is an improvement upon the law of 1871 in his opinion.

Mr. CONKLING. In several respects.

Mr. SCOTT. And he mentions what they are, and the letter addressed to him asks for his opinion in a general way as to the relative merits of the law of 1871 and the proposed law. He does, if I recollect the letter aright, indorse the proposed law in general terms, and then proceeds to specify certain particulars in which it is certainly an improvement of the law of 1871.

Now, as I have said, Mr. President, I think we are brought to this question: The bill is presented in such detail as that if it is to be taken up and discussed section by section for the purpose of taking a vote upon every section in the bill, it is very evident that this session will be wasted without action. If we are content to take the "bill" as the result of the best judgment that can be arrived at growing out of conferences between those interested in the subject, and trust again to time to reveal the defects of this bill and legislate as to them hereafter, then in my view we shall be doing the public a great service.

Mr. CONKLING. May I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. SCOTT. Certainly.

Mr. CONKLING. Seeing as he does that there are obvious objections to taking up the bill section by section on account of the time thereby required, does not the Senator think the smallest substitute for that with which we ought to be content would be a statement from some Senator of the changes proposed and of the defects in the present law? And if my honorable friend does agree with me in that, then I beg him at least to enumerate—I do not ask him for an exposition—to enumerate, in addition to the matter of the rule of marine liability and beyond the matter of steam-pressure on coal-boats, and ice-boats, which were obviated long ago—passing these over, I ask him if he will not generalize, if he will not, by enumeration or reference or in some way enable us to know in what regards difficulties now exist.

Mr. SCOTT. I must confess my surprise at an appeal of that kind made to me, not a member of the Committee on Commerce, by a member of the committee which has reported this bill. If it was to receive consideration section by section anywhere, then the appeal ought to be made to a member of that committee from which the bill comes. I have stated that I am not familiar with this bill section by section; I could not be expected to be familiar with it; but there are gentlemen who, if they have objections to it, must certainly have had their attention drawn to the bill section by section when they considered it in the committee. And if the Senator will proceed and state the objections to it section by section, then in all probability those members of the committee who are responsible for reporting it will answer his objections.

Mr. CONKLING. Does my honorable friend think that the natural or reasonable way of getting at the subject? Here comes a bill of eighty-odd pages, relating to a very complex matter. It is presented without any written report. It is ushered in without any statement whatever by the member of the committee reporting it or by any body else. The member of the committee reporting it is appealed to. He says nothing but to ask the Senator from Pennsylvania to have read a letter, the letter is read, and the consideration proceeds. The letter gives us no facts, or particulars whatever. Nobody states either the proposed changes or the provisions in the existing law against which complaints are made; and now the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania meets a request referred to him by the Senator from Ohio—

Mr. SCOTT. That is a mistake.

Mr. CONKLING. No; we all heard the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. SCOTT. That is a mistake.

Mr. CONKLING. No. The Senator from Michigan referred to him so much of the inquiry as related to the reading of a letter from an official. Then came the Senator from Ohio, and after telling us how he had reflected upon this subject at the last session, and how he had reflected at this session upon these grievances, one phrase he employed was "the oppressions of steamboat men." Hearing all this, I felt sure we were about to be filled with information, but the Senator soon after sat down. I then put up a petition to the Senator from Ohio, asking him would he not tell us—if he had not time to tell us all—would he not tell us of some of the grievances which go to make up this sum of "oppressions" which has occupied his thoughts and enlisted his sympathy. But no, he would not. Thereupon, as a court would refer a matter to a referee, he referred me to the Senator from Pennsylvania to give the information of which obviously I stood so much in need, and added "we have arranged that the Senator from Pennsylvania shall make that part of the statement." Now comes the Senator from Pennsylvania, and says that if I will state the objections to the bill, if I will put in the defense—continuing the parallel of a proceeding in court—after he hears the defense he will see what sort of a case he will prove. Well, Mr. President—

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from New York will permit me to remind him that the reference of the Senator from Ohio to me was a very complimentary one certainly, in mistaking me for the Senator from New York as a member of the Committee on Commerce. Therein lay the mistake.

Mr. CONKLING. O, Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania exaggerates the mystery of this hap-hazard proceeding. As much misunderstanding and loose understanding as there has been about the whole business, I do not believe the Senator from Ohio down to this time has supposed that I was in favor of this bill and was prepared to state and advocate the merits claimed for it. No, no. I am willing to make allowance for a vast lack of care and attention on the part of those who are willing to accept the measure in gross; but I hardly think the Senator from Ohio has drifted down to this time believing me the proper and chosen person to advocate such a bill and to set forth its merits, and asserting further that "we have arranged" that it shall be so done. That will not do.

Mr. CAMERON. I wish to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. CONKLING. I yield for that.

Mr. CAMERON. I desire to say a word or two before I make the motion.

Mr. THURMAN. I appeal to the Senator from Pennsylvania not to make that motion now. I want about five minutes to say a few words in answer to my friend from New York.

Mr. CAMERON. I should be very glad to give way to the appeal of my good friend from Ohio; but I have my own notions about this bill, and before making the motion to go into executive session I desire to say that I do not wish this bill disposed of to-day. It is a very important question, one which has been agitating Congress for many years, and every year it has been decided in such a way as to require a new decision the next year. Before the bill is disposed of I should like to have the Senate so understand it that a measure can be passed which will last a few years. I want such a bill passed as will concentrate the public opinion upon this subject, and concentrate the intelligence and the learning upon the subject of steamboats and matters belonging to steamboats. The trade of the Ohio River is so immense that you can hardly figure out what it is, and of course the State of Pennsylvania is deeply interested.

Mr. SCOTT rose.

Mr. CAMERON. I trust I am not keeping my colleague—

Mr. SCOTT. I only wish to say that by some kind of "parliamentary hinge" I got off the floor when I had it; but I yield to my colleague for the present.

Mr. CAMERON. No; I would rather my colleague would finish his remarks. I will not interfere with him. I thought the Senator from New York had the floor.

Mr. CONKLING. I so understood.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York had the floor and yielded it to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CAMERON. Then I will give way to my colleague.

Mr. SCOTT. I do not desire to proceed further; but I thought I had the floor and yielded to the Senator from New York, who proceeded by a "parliamentary hinge" to talk so that I got off the floor.

Mr. CONKLING. I may be pardoned for saying that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] is certainly in error. He did once yield to me and then he resumed the floor, and having answered the whole inquiry by proposing that I should go on and make the objections to the bill the Senator emphatically took his seat, and then I rose and was recognized by the Chair and I yielded the floor to the Senator who now has it.

Mr. CAMERON. It all comes down to this, that I so seldom speak that I am generally put out of what I believe are my rights. I had the floor before my colleague; at least I supposed I was entitled to it.

I will only repeat that I want this question debated, so that the Senate and the country shall understand it. There is too much jobbery in this country on the part of persons interested in patent-rights. Every year this question arises; men come here and pretend to be adepts in all that belongs to the navigation of the Ohio and other rivers, and it generally turns out that they are somehow connected with some company or somebody that has some patent-right or some amendment to a patent-right.

We shall never get the navigation of the Ohio River properly understood and properly arranged by a complete system of legal regulations until we get over the whole system of patent-rights. Look at it in regard to sewing-machines. Here is a machine in which the poor people all over the country are interested that does not cost in the most expensive form more than fifteen dollars; and yet it is sold for seventy-five or eighty dollars. Every year comes in some inventor, as he calls himself, and puts in some little amendment to the original patent, and he gets seven years more; and at the end of the seven years he gets seven more. Our mode of compensating for inventions was intended to terminate at a short period, so that the public might be benefited by them. I think the sewing-machine is one of the most glaring instances of wrong there is in the country connected with the patent-right system, and therefore I mention it.

Next to that is the system which gives to every man who invents something belonging to a steamboat the control of the steamboat business of the country for fourteen years from that time, making all the labor and all the enterprise of the country depend upon the patentee. Why, sir, the trouble about the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, of which we have recently heard so much, arose from some person happening to marry somebody who had invented a sewing-machine, and he got so much money that he could not live in his rural village and could not occupy the quiet, pleasant position which the money of his father-in-law gave him, but he must come to New York and become president of an immense corporation, and coming into that corporation, having so much money, he must start out with the cry, "Everybody in Congress is corrupt, and I will go there and make them more corrupt." It was one of these gentlemen who was president of that company when all this wrong on the other side of the building began.

I have not time to go into all the wrongs connected with the system; but that is one. The sewing-machine case is a glaring instance, and so is this trouble as connected with the steamboats of the country. Sir, there is no more intelligent set of men in all the country than the men who have learned to be captains on the Mississippi and Ohio Rivers. I say "learned," because they went in as boys to work, all the time going on to cultivate their intellects while they were getting practical information. They have made the great trade of the Ohio and the Mississippi what it is; but these men are constantly wronged by people coming here pretending to be inventors, great geniuses! Why, Mr. President, a genius does not arise every day; the cases are very rare. The useful talent of the country is that which good common sense, practical experience, solid integrity gives to its possessor; and men with such qualities are apt to be those who learn their business and rise from the humblest position in society and who climb their way by patient toil up the ladder of fame.

As I said, I make these remarks only for the purpose of illustrating the necessity of our having more time to investigate this subject; to show that the country should have more time to think of it; that the people interested should have more time to give us the benefit of their intelligence and their experience and their observation in regard to it. Now, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MORTON. I hope the Senator will withdraw that motion for a few moments.

Mr. CAMERON. With the understanding that I do not lose my motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the Senator withdraws his motion temporarily. The Chair will observe that if the Senator had pressed his motion before, debate would have been out of order, because the motion is not debatable.

Mr. CAMERON. I make the motion now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to withdraw his motion.

Mr. MORTON. I hope the Senator will withdraw the motion for a few moments. I think I understand a little about this matter. I should like to say a word about it.

Mr. CAMERON. I cannot refuse an appeal of that kind, but I give notice that I have the control of the floor, and I will not give way again. I will withdraw the motion with the understanding that the Senator from Indiana will renew it when he concludes his remarks.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, this question has been before the Senate several times within the last three years. If I remember correctly, a bill passed this body at the last Congress which is said to be this bill. I am not so familiar with the details as to be able to remember that; but I suppose there is no doubt that the bill which we passed then is substantially the bill that is here to-day. It was lost in a conference committee for want of time. It has been brought up, I think, on several occasions.

Mr. SCOTT. The committee agreed and made a report, but it was lost here after debate.

Mr. MORTON. It was lost for want of time on the report being made. I think this bill has been switched off and defeated several times in very much the way it is proposed to do it this afternoon. I do not profess to be able to debate this bill, because it is so long since I was at all familiar with its details that I cannot speak with certainty, but there are two or three things that I will venture to say about it.

It has been represented to me repeatedly during the last two or three years by those who represent the steam navigation of the Ohio and Mississippi, and I think the Missouri River, and the tributaries of those streams, that the adoption of this bill was important to the navigation of our western rivers. I understand that those representing the navigation of our western rivers are unanimous upon this subject; not only so, but that they are earnest in regard to it. They have sent delegations here repeatedly to present to both Houses of Congress the interest which they have in the adoption of this bill.

I think some little attention ought to be paid to the navigation of the western rivers. I think that those who represent the vast inland navigation are entitled to some consideration at the hands of Congress and ought not to be laughed out of court. If these men were not of the opinion that the interests of steam navigation on our western rivers were deeply involved in the passage of this bill, I am very sure they would not have been at the trouble they have to procure its passage. They have not been paid lobbyists at all, as I understand, but men of character and responsibility, who have come here from Pittsburgh, and Cincinnati and Saint Louis and Louisville, sent by large interests simply to lay before the committees of Congress this question and ask the passage of a bill that will protect their interests.

This bill has been prepared not so much, I presume, by politicians as by experts, by scientific men, men who understand what is demanded for the successful navigation of our western rivers, for the safety of human life, what safeguards ought to be thrown around the manufacture of steam-engines and the construction of steamboats and steam navigation in every form. I have always understood that this bill had been prepared with the greatest care and repeatedly revised, and brought here as the result of the judgment of men who understood this thing, and that it was not a mere question of introducing somebody's patent-right. The men who navigate steamboats do not want to introduce new patent-rights unless they are of great value, and they can do that without coming to Congress.

If this bill had been prepared by patentees and was being urged by patentees, there might be some ground to suppose that it was for the purpose of enabling some man to sell his patent-right. But those who have represented the interests of this bill to me were not patentees; they were steamboat men, men who represent that vast interest navigating the Ohio and the Mississippi and their tributaries, and they say that as the law now stands the navigation of these streams is burdened by unjust requirements.

Mr. CONKLING. What are they?

Mr. MORTON. The Senator from New York asks me what they are. They are to be found in the difference between this bill and the old one.

Mr. CONKLING. What is that?

Mr. MORTON. If my friend is familiar with that, he is able to answer. [Laughter.] I once had some knowledge, as I said before, but the particulars have passed away. I am not able—I presume the committee who reported this bill or somebody who has had it in charge will be able—to specify the material one; but it has been constantly represented to me (and I speak now upon those representations) that the changes proposed in the law are important, and it is said that some of them are vital.

Now, talking about patent-rights, I should say—

Mr. CAMERON. I wish to say to my friend from Indiana that I always like to listen to him, but when I gave way I did not know he was going to make a speech. I thought he wanted to make an explanation.

Mr. MORTON. I am very nearly done, and I hope the Senator will allow me to go on for two or three minutes.

Mr. CAMERON. Very well.

Mr. MORTON. I think this bill is of a great deal more importance than any executive session to-day.

Mr. CAMERON. I do not think so.

Mr. MORTON. I have given my opinion about it. It has been said by men who know something about it that the resistance to this bill is in large part due to large patent-right interests; that the law now requires certain patents to be purchased and to be used in the navigation of steamboats and the construction of steam-engines, and in one way or another, that this bill will dispense with. Whether that is true or not, I am not able to say; but speaking of patent-rights, I will say to my friend that it has been represented to me, I believe from the first, in regard to this bill that those outside who were resisting the passage of this bill were doing it upon the ground that it would dispense with the use of patent-rights which the present law requires steamboat men to buy. I am not prepared to assert that upon my own knowledge. I only refer to it because the subject of patent-rights has been mentioned.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I will say to the Senator that so far as I know there is nobody appearing against this bill. I have been so connected with the administration of the law that I think I should know something about it. I do not remember that any person has ever spoken against this bill to me. I do not know what acquaintance the Senator from Indiana may have with people who are opposed to the passage of this bill, but I have never known that any public or private interest has been represented in opposition to this bill. There is no doubt, at least I think there is, a large public interest opposed to this bill; but, like other great public interests made up of individual interests, it very often happens that there is nobody to represent those interests; and I rather think that all the representation concerning this bill that has ever been made has been made by those people who favor it. If the Senator knows of any private person in opposition representing either private interests or a public interest, he is certainly wiser in that respect than I am.

Mr. MORTON. I think I do not; and I think I said before that I had no personal knowledge on the subject. The subject of patent-rights was referred to by my friend from Pennsylvania; and I simply gave what had been said to me on the other side by parties who I think are interested in the passage of the bill.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I believe there is nothing in the existing law requiring patent-rights to be used or any articles that are patented to be used. There are certain safeguards to be provided for. Now then, if you will encourage inventive genius, if you will have applied by the inducements held out by the Government the intellectual power of the people of this country to produce something better than now is by giving to those people who do produce something better than now is the exclusive right of the use of that thing, and if upon public grounds and in the public interest and with reference to the security of life and property you will have those things used, then, of course, somebody will derive some benefit from the use of them; but it all proceeds upon a public interest according to the idea that has existed in this country from the time the Constitution was framed until now, and I do not think that there is any occasion to complain that the public in a public matter with reference to public interests that are as important as any other public interests avails itself of the results of intellectual power which individuals and corporations do not use to avail themselves of when they act under wise principles of policy.

Mr. MORTON. One word and I am done. I am glad to hear the Senator say that he knows of no person or class of men resisting the passage of this bill. On the other hand I think it is well understood that there is a very large interest favoring the passage of this bill, an honorable interest, an interest that deserves consideration and recognition at the hands of Congress. I have understood, I think—and that is my memory—that the chambers of commerce in Pittsburgh and Cincinnati and other considerable towns upon the Ohio and Mississippi Rivers have made earnest representations from time to time in favor of the passage of this bill. It has been considered a matter of importance to commerce as well as to those who are directly engaged in navigation. For this reason I shall vote for this bill.

Mr. CAMERON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The question being put a division was called for, and the ayes were 19.

Mr. SHERMAN. Before the vote is taken I wish to make an inquiry of the Chair, whether this bill will come up as the unfinished business on Monday morning?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will if the Senate adjourns on it.

Mr. SHERMAN. Then I see no object in resisting the motion.

The division being concluded, the noes were 15.

Mr. CAMERON. There being no quorum, I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. SCOTT. I think there is a quorum present.

Mr. SHERMAN. I call for the yeas and nays on the motion to adjourn. I have no doubt there is a quorum; but we had better go into executive session. Pending the motion to adjourn, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to adjourn has priority.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think there is a quorum present.

Mr. THURMAN. I suggest that the question be taken again on going into executive session.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are nominations that ought to be confirmed, and I should like to have an executive session.

Mr. CAMERON. Very well. I withdraw the motion to adjourn, and move again that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, before the doors are closed, will lay before the Senate a number of House bills for reference.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

A bill (H. R. No. 4559) to remove political disabilities of George S. Hawkins, of Florida;

A bill (H. R. No. 4471) to afford relief in the judicial courts to Robert Erwin;

A bill (H. R. No. 4560) relating to practice in the supreme court of the District of Columbia;

A bill (H. R. No. 4561) to relieve Thomas Boyd Edelin, of Prince George's County, Maryland, of all political disabilities; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4562) removing the political disabilities of Beverly Kennon, of Virginia.

The joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) authorizing the President to appoint a commissioner to attend the international penitentiary congress at Rome was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The bill (H. R. No. 796) to protect all citizens in their civil and legal rights was read the first time by its title.

Mr. DAVIS. I object to the second reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS and others. O, let the bill be referred.

Mr. DAVIS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be considered as read the second time, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After twelve minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and twenty-seven minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 6, 1875.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Clerk proceeded to read the Journal of Thursday last.

Mr. SENER. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the Journal be dispensed with.

Mr. STORM. I object.

The Clerk then resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal.

PRINTING OF CIVIL-RIGHTS BILL.

Mr. FORT. I ask unanimous consent that the civil-rights bill passed by the House yesterday be printed in the form in which it was passed.

Mr. MAYNARD. It will be printed in the Senate, of course.

Mr. FORT. But we want an edition of it for the use of the House. There was no objection, and the order to print was made.

WESTERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF NORTH CAROLINA.

Mr. WILLIAMS, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice be directed to inquire into the expenditure of the public funds in the western district of North Carolina since its organization in 1872, with power to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths.

PAY OF ACTING ASSISTANT QUARTERMASTERS, ETC.

Mr. COBURN, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4564) to regulate the pay of acting assistant quartermasters and to provide for the selection of quartermaster-sergeants of posts; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

MILEAGE OF OFFICERS OF THE ARMY.

Mr. COBURN also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4565) to provide for regulating the mileage of officers of the Army; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

ISLAND OF MACKINAC, MICHIGAN.

Mr. COBURN also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4566) to set apart a certain portion of the Island of Mackinac, in the straits of Mackinac, within the State of Michigan, as a national park; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

FORT WILKINS MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. COBURN, also by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4567) to provide for the sale of the Fort Wilkins military reservation in the State of Michigan; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

FEES OF MARSHALS, ETC.

Mr. SENER. I ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice the bill (H. R. No. 3623) to amend the twenty-third paragraph of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1853, and for other purposes, and I ask that the amendment of the Senate be concurred in with one exception. The amendments as they come from the Senate are but the consolidation of two bills (3622 and 3623) of this House passed during the last session. The object of the bill is substantially to provide for the authentication, recordation, and transmission of the accounts of clerks, marshals, &c. The amendment in which we recommend non-concurrence is in relation to the mileage of marshals, &c. We non-concur in that, because we think the amendment not satisfactory, since it is not in harmony with the following proviso in the bill making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes:

For compensation of the district marshals of the United States, $11,900: Provided, That the provisions of an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, approved June 16, 1874, which prohibit the allowance of mileage to persons holding employment or appointment under the United States, shall not be so construed as to apply to the legal traveling fees of United States marshals or deputy marshals. And all accounts of said marshals, or their deputies, for expenses and mileage incurred subsequent to the 1st day of July, 1874, shall be audited, allowed, and paid in accordance with the provisions of an act entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1853, in the same manner as if said act had not been passed; but no fees shall be allowed for constructive mileage, and every claim for mileage shall be accompanied by sworn proof that the distance for which mileage is claimed was actually and necessarily traveled by the officer.

This proviso was put in by this House but was stricken out by the Senate. The House yesterday non-concurred in this action of the Senate as to this provision in the legislative appropriation bill. We recommend non-concurrence in the amendment to this bill. If that shall be done, then a committee of conference on this matter can either strike out this provision entirely and let this bill become a law without it, or the two committees of conference—that is, the one on this provision and the conference committee on the legislative appropriation bill—can mutually consult and arrive at some conclusion which will be satisfactory both to the marshals and to the interests of the Government.

The SPEAKER. It requires unanimous consent.

Mr. SNYDER. I object.

TRANSFER OF CAUSES IN ALABAMA.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Some time since a bill was introduced and referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws in relation to the transfer of causes in the United States circuit courts of Alabama. It is House bill No. 3962. With some modifications the Committee on the Revision of the Laws unanimously recommend its passage. It was introduced by a member on the democratic side of the House, and is approved by gentlemen on this side. It is to cure a defect in a bill passed at the last session, by reason of which defect cases are now hung up and cannot be tried anywhere. I report the bill back with amendments, in the form of a substitute for the original bill.

The SPEAKER. The substitute alone will be read, and will be treated as an original bill.

No objection being made, the bill (H. R. No. 4568) was received and read a first and second time.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

The first section provides that all civil causes, actions, suits, executions, pleas, process, and other proceedings which were pending on the 3d day of March, 1873, in the district courts of the United States for the middle and the northern districts of the State of Alabama, and which have not already been finally disposed of in said district courts, and which might have been brought and would have been originally cognizable in a circuit court or in a district court by reason of its having circuit court jurisdiction, are hereby declared to be transferred to the circuit court of the United States for said districts, respectively; and the clerks of said district courts shall transmit all of the original papers and files in such causes, and all dockets, minutes, orders, judgments, and decrees in such causes as the same appear and are kept in said district courts, and which are not already otherwise removed and disposed of by law, to the clerks of the said circuit courts for each district respectively.

The second section provides that all civil causes, actions, suits, executions, pleas, process, or other proceedings which were transferred by the act of Congress approved March 3, 1873, from said district court into the circuit court of the United States for the district of Alabama, and which are now pending in said circuit, shall be, and the same are hereby, transferred from said district court at Mobile into the circuit courts of the United States for said northern and middle districts respectively; and the said circuit courts of the United States in and for said district shall have, and are hereby vested with, exclusive jurisdiction to try and determine all such causes and actions so transferred the same as if such causes or actions had been originally brought in such circuit court; and the clerk of said circuit court at Mobile shall transmit all of the original papers in such causes, together with a complete transcript of all the dockets, minutes, judgments, orders, and decrees in such of said causes as are not finally disposed of in said circuit court, to the circuit court for the said middle and northern districts respectively; to each such causes as were originally transferred from the district courts of said districts.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. E. R. HOAR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN HENDERSON.

Mr. SPEER. I am directed by the Committee on Claims unanimously to report back House bill No. 3208 for the relief of John Henderson with a recommendation that it do pass. I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered at this time.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which objections will be in order.

The preamble of the bill states that there is due and unpaid to John Henderson for mail-service on route numbered 2541, in Pennsylvania, for the quarter ending June 30, 1864, the sum of $47.88.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to John Henderson the sum of $47.88, the amount due him for mail-service on route numbered 2541 for the quarter ending June 30, 1864, on satisfactory evidence that the same is justly due.

Mr. SPEER. I wish to call attention to the following letter from the Post-Office Department in relation to this case:

OFFICE OF THE AUDITOR OF THE TREASURY
FOR THE POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
Washington, April 28, 1874.

Sir: In answer to your letter of the 8th instant, I have the honor to inform you that the records of this office show a balance of $47.88 in favor of John Henderson, contractor on route 4581, Pennsylvania, for the quarter ending June 30, 1864.

The certificate alluded to in the inclosed copy of communication from this office, dated January 24, 1865, was not received from the Post-Office Department until the 10th instant. Hence the cause of account not having been settled before. The account cannot now be settled by this office, as all unexpended balances have been covered into the Treasury in accordance with section 6, act of July 12, 1870.

Very respectfully,

J. J. MARTIN,
Auditor.

Hon. R. M. SPEER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to strike out the preamble.

Mr. SPEER. I have no objection.

The motion to strike out the preamble was agreed to.

The bill was then ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SPEER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENRY HETH.

Mr. SMITH, of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the Speaker's table and passed at this time Senate bill No. 764 to remove the political disabilities of Henry Heth, of Virginia. The petition in this case is on file in the Senate.

No objection was made; and the bill was accordingly taken from the Speaker's table, read three times, and passed; two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

MARY W. JONES.

Mr. HUNTON. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 3817, to increase the pension of Mary W. Jones.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I object.

Mr. HUNTON. Will the gentleman hear the report read?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Not now.

FRESH WATER FOR MARE ISLAND NAVY-YARD.

Mr. PAGE, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 150) in relation to supplying Mare Island navy-yard with fresh water; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DANIEL S. MERSHON, JR.

Mr. SHOEMAKER, of Pennsylvania, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Claims the bill (S. No. 134) for the relief of Daniel S. Mershon, jr., and moved that the same be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

PORTRAITS ON CURRENCY AND STAMPS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and adopted:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to inform the House whether the portraits of any living originals have been prepared or engraved for the purpose of being printed upon any currency or stamps issued under the authority of the Treasury Department; and if so, under what law the right so to print such portraits is claimed in contravention of section 3576 of the Revised Statutes and chapter 172 of the acts of 1864.

CLAIMS AGAINST BOARD OF HEALTH.

Mr. STORM, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia:

Whereas the board of health of the District of Columbia, in the discharge of their duty, have frequently found it necessary to remove and destroy private property from infected houses to prevent the spread of contagious diseases; and whereas the board of health have neglected to pay the owners of such property so destroyed; and whereas Congress has made an appropriation to pay for such property: Therefore

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to investigate the matter, and report to the House what action, if any, is necessary to compel the board of health of said District to meet its obligations.

ABUSES IN PROSECUTION OF CLAIMS.

Mr. LAWRENCE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4569) to prevent abuses in the prosecution of claims against the Government; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Resolved, That the Committee on Appropriations be directed to take action for the purpose of purchasing Carpenter's picture of "The Reading of the Emancipation Proclamation."

CONTRACTS FOR WORK ON PUBLIC BUILDINGS, ETC.

Mr. COX. I ask unanimous consent for the adoption of the resolution which I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and is hereby, directed to transmit to this House an abstract account of all contracts for material used and labor done on public buildings by the late Supervising Architect of the Treasury, A. B. Mullett, stating the names of the persons to whom the contracts were given, the names of their bondsmen, the kind of material and labor furnished, distinguishing between such contracts as were given to the lowest responsible bidder after proposals were invited by advertisement in the public press and those given out on the said Supervising Architect's own responsibility and without advertising; the dates of these contracts to include from March 4, 1866, to October 1, 1874; also what amount has already been expended on the new State, War, and Navy Department now in course of construction in this city; what portion of it has been finished, and what estimates have been made of the cost of the whole building, if the plans of the late Supervising Architect are carried out.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I must object to the adoption of that resolution. It will take more than a month to prepare that information. I have no objection to the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. COX. Let it be so referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

GUARANTEE OF TEXAS PACIFIC RAILROAD BONDS.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I be allowed at this time to present the memorial of the manufacturers, coal-bank proprietors, and business men of the city of Youngstown, Ohio, touching the Texas Pacific Railroad guarantee bill, and that it be read at the Clerk's desk, and referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad. The memorialists are 55 persons, companies and corporations, embracing within that number the proprietors of forty-two coal-banks, seventeen blast-furnaces, seven rolling-mills, two ore-banks, foundries, machine-shops, &c., who employ, when working, twelve thousand men, and who pay wages that support at least fifty thousand people. They believe that the suggestions contained in the memorial are important to their industries, and very important to a very large number of unemployed laborers, who are now in a condition of great need because of business depression. As the Representative of these people I wish their voice to be heard here, and ask that the memorial be read.

Mr. MAYNARD. I must object to the reading of that paper.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I ask then that it be printed in the RECORD. There being no objection, the memorial was referred to the Committee on the Pacific Railroad, ordered to be printed, and to be published in the RECORD. It is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, citizens of the city of Youngstown and vicinity, in Mahoning County, Ohio, manufacturers of iron and producers of coal and business men connected therewith, respectfully represent, that the stoppage of great works of improvement, of production of iron, and other things, and the general depression of business and production in all directions, have greatly lessened the demand for labor and thrown out of employment immense numbers of laborers and thereby created great distress generally, but especially among those who are dependent upon their labor for subsistence.

It is believed to be very important that every available means should be seized in this distressing crisis to give opportunity for labor and employment; and to that end encouragement should be given, among other things, to the completion of any and all advantageous railroad and other public projects as an outlet for the surplus labor.

So far as the General Government can safely and securely, without loss, under proper guarantees, give credit, aid, and encouragement to great national highways and improvements, the undersigned believe that it ought to be done in this depressing crisis; and they therefore view with approbation the efforts making to obtain aid and means to construct and complete the Texas and Pacific Railroad and any others that have been suspended in consequence of the depression.

The undersigned respectfully and earnestly pray your honorable body to give such credit, guarantees, aids, and encouragement in this direction as may legitimately, safely, and securely be done, and thereby greatly afford the employment and relief necessary for the great mass of laborers.

POTTAWATOMIE INDIANS.

Mr. SHANKS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4570) to carry into effect the tenth article of the treaty with the Pottawatomie Indians of February 2, 1867; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

DRAW-BRIDGE OVER PEARL RIVER.

Mr. LYNCH, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Resolved, That the Committee on Commerce be, and they are hereby, instructed to inquire into the expediency of compelling the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas Railroad Company to build a draw-bridge over Pearl River, and report by bill or otherwise.

AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL-BANK ACT.

Mr. MERRIAM, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4571) to amend the national-bank act; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and ordered to be printed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes gentlemen who are upon the floor for reference of bills will not detain the House further, as that can all be done on Monday next, and there can be no possible gain by referring them this morning.

MILITIA FORCE OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask unanimous consent to make a report from the Committee on War Claims, which was ruled out on private-bill day two weeks ago. It is a unanimous report, and there can be no objection to it. It simply is a call for information. It is a report to accompany House bill No. 1505, authorizing the Secretary of War to ascertain and report the amount necessarily expended by the Territory of New Mexico in organizing, equipping, and maintaining militia forces during the rebellion. It simply asks for information, and I ask unanimous consent to put the bill upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. Is the report accompanied by a resolution which the gentleman asks to have read?

Mr. KELLOGG. It is a bill authorizing the Secretary of War to ascertain the amount of expenditures in New Mexico in relation to the militia called out by General Canby during the war. There is no appropriation in it and no call for any appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. It is the incipient step toward an appropriation.

Mr. KELLOGG. It commanded the unanimous consent of the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I object.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE OUACHITA RIVER.

Mr. NEGLEY, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4572) as a substitute for the bill (H. R. No. 112) to authorize the North Louisiana and Texas Railroad Company to construct a bridge across the Ouachita River at or near Monroe, Louisiana, and a bridge over the Red River at or near Shreveport, Louisiana; which was ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

Mr. HOLMAN. Not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. NEGLEY. I am authorized by the Committee on Commerce to report the substitute by unanimous consent. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will withdraw his objection that it shall not be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

Mr. RANDALL. All these cases come under the rule except reports from committees.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. If the gentleman from Indiana does not insist on his objection that this shall not be brought back by a motion to reconsider, I give notice that I shall make objection.

The SPEAKER. The substitute has been recommitted, not to be brought back by a motion to reconsider.

COMMITTEE ON MISSISSIPPI LEVEES.

Mr. MOREY. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Special Committee on the Mississippi Levees be authorized to employ a clerk during the present session.

Mr. STORM. I object to the adoption of that resolution.

Mr. MOREY. Then let it be referred to the Committee on Accounts.

There was no objection, and the resolution was so referred.

FOX AND WISCONSIN RIVERS.

Mr. SAWYER, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4573) to aid the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLESTOWN NAVY-YARD.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. I ask unanimous consent to introduce the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy transmit to this House copies of all the correspondence between the heads of Bureaus and the Secretary of the Navy, and especially correspondence of the commandant of the Charlestown navy-yard in reference to putting men on the rolls in the construction department from the 1st of July, 1874, to the 1st of January, 1875.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. Let it be referred then to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

There was no objection, and the resolution was so referred.

COLUMBUS C. BENNETT.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4574) for the relief of Columbus C. Bennett, of Indiana; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CORRESPONDENCE BY TELEGRAPH.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4575) for the transmission of correspondence by telegraph; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

FEES AND COSTS IN UNITED STATES COURTS.

Mr. SENER. I again ask unanimous consent to report back from the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3623) to amend the twenty-fifth paragraph of section 3 of an act entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1853.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering the Senate amendments at this time?

Mr. HOLMAN. Let them be reported first.

The SPEAKER. The Chair put the question in that way because there are several amendments, and necessarily there must be consent in advance.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no further objection and the amendments will be read.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read and were severally concurred in, except the following, in which the committee recommended non-concurrence:

Add as an additional section the following:

SEC. 7. That the proviso in the sixth paragraph of the "Act entitled an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1874, shall not be construed to apply or to have applied to attorneys, marshals, or clerks of courts of the United States, their assistants or deputies; and all accounts of said attorneys, marshals, and clerk for mileage and for expenses incurred subsequent to the 1st day of July, 1874, shall and may be audited, allowed, and paid at the Treasury Department of the United States in the same manner as if said act had not been passed; and hereafter no allowances shall be made to any such officer or person for mileage or travel not actually performed under the provisions of existing law.

Mr. SENNER. I ask that that amendment be non-concurred in, and that the bill go to a committee of conference.

The amendment was non-concurred in, and a committee of conference ordered.

Mr. SENNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was non-concurred in and a committee of conference ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RECONSIDERATION OF REFERENCES.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I move to reconsider all references and recommitments to-day; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid upon the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

AFFAIRS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. POLAND. I present a report in writing from the select committee appointed to examine into the condition of affairs in the State of Arkansas, and move that the report be printed and recommitted.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. From the same committee, and by its permission, I submit a minority report, and ask that the same order be made in regard to it, with the understanding that it will be called up at the same time.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the order that the minority report be also printed and recommitted will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. Can we have the conclusions of the committee read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the report is not in the form of presenting conclusions.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to ask the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] when he proposes to bring up the report for action?

Mr. POLAND. The committee have had no conference as to making any arrangement for that. I may state that the report of the majority of the committee does not call for any action of the House. The report presented by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. WARD], submits a resolution. Therefore the affirmative on this subject is rather with the gentleman from Illinois, who represents the minority; and it is his wishes that the gentleman should consult.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I did not make the usual motion to reconsider the order to recommit, for the reason that we have an understanding that we will call up the matter in the immediate future, having the right to report at any time.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the right of the majority.

The SPEAKER. That right belongs to the committee, of course.

Mr. POLAND. The committee would consider it proper to consult as to that with the gentleman who recommends affirmative action.

Mr. RANDALL. I understand that four out of five members of the committee make the majority report. They can make any arrangement with the single gentleman of the minority they please; but the House never recognizes minority reports.

The SPEAKER. Minority reports are matters of courtesy.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. If there is any question about it, I will enter a motion to reconsider the order recommitting the minority report.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Can the gentleman do that?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. That would give the minority a privilege which does not belong to them.

Mr. RANDALL. The minority report comes in as a matter of courtesy simply.

Mr. POLAND. So far as the majority of the committee are concerned, we will throw no obstacles in the way of this being brought before the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair apprehends that this can be regulated by the committee itself.

Mr. HYNES. I submit that when the House orders the report of the minority to be recommitted, the gentleman from Illinois has then the right to enter a motion to reconsider.

Mr. RANDALL. It only comes in by courtesy.

Mr. HYNES. But its position is changed when it is sent back to the committee. The House has then taken action on it.

The SPEAKER. It is practically not an accomplished fact. It is a matter pendente lite. It is still under advisement.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I understand that the committee has the privilege to report at any time.

The SPEAKER. It has.

Mr. CESSNA. But if the committee should decline to report now, in what way would the minority be able to get its view acted on by the House except by a two-thirds vote?

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows no such way. The minority of this committee are in exactly the same position as the minority of any other committee. The committee is represented by the majority.

Mr. CESSNA. If a motion to reconsider the vote recommitting the majority report is not entered, I will enter that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania will observe that the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] makes a report for and on behalf of the committee; and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARD] asks consent to present the views of the minority. It is merely a matter of courtesy and by unanimous consent.

Mr. CESSNA. I understand that very well; but the majority report, as has been indicated by the chairman of the committee, recommends no action whatever. An order has been made for the printing and recommitment of that report. If, therefore, the majority should desire no further action, they will make no further report; and on behalf of the minority I desire to enter a motion to reconsider.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman will observe that a single member may object to a minority report.

Mr. CESSNA. I am not speaking of the minority report at all. But if a motion to reconsider the vote recommitting the majority report is entered, and we can then bring before the House both the minority and majority reports, that is all that is required.

The SPEAKER. That may be done. A motion to reconsider the vote recommitting the report of the majority may be entered. That would be in order.

Mr. WOOD. There is no such thing as a minority report, and cannot be under the rules of the House.

Mr. HYNES. I do not dispute that well-known parliamentary rule that a minority report can come in only by unanimous consent. But when it is once in by courtesy and when it has been recommitted, that under the rules becomes action on the part of the House, so that the case does not come within the objection raised by the gentleman from New York; and the attention of the Chair having been subsequently directed to other business, I think the entering of a motion to reconsider is clearly within the rule.

The SPEAKER. Not only is the gentleman from Arkansas wholly wrong, but he would gain nothing by what he proposes, because a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee was recommitted is as good as the other motion, and the other motion is wholly and absolutely irregular.

Mr. POLAND. I will myself enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which the report was recommitted.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen from Arkansas will observe that if the Chair recognized the practice of entering a motion to reconsider the vote by which a minority report was recommitted, it would disarrange the whole business of the House.

Mr. HYNES. Does the motion of the gentleman from Vermont include the minority report?

The SPEAKER. If the House chooses to substitute that or anything else, it can do so. The motion to reconsider brings the whole subject before the House. But if the Chair recognizes the practice of entertaining a motion to reconsider the vote by which a minority report, which a minority is by courtesy permitted to make, it would disarrange the entire business of the House, and at the best a construction of the rules thus given would not only disarrange the business of the House, but the minority would gain nothing by it.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Is it now in order to move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table?

The SPEAKER. Not at this time. The gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. POLAND], stated what ought to be sufficient for the House, that the intention is to report this matter back at a time which the committee may agree upon. As a further evidence of his good faith in the matter he has himself moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was recommitted.

Mr. MAYNARD. When the matter comes before the House, the views of the minority can be presented.

The SPEAKER. Certainly; whatever the House chooses it can substitute for the report of the committee.

Mr. CESSNA. The action of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] is entirely satisfactory.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I call for the regular order.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I desire to call up the report of the Committee on Elections in the case of the Delegate from Utah, and I move to postpone the special order in order to take up that subject.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The bill I desire to bring before the House has been postponed for three days, and I supposed it was understood by everybody that to-day would be devoted to its consideration. It is the Hennepin Canal bill. I have sought in every way in the world to accommodate the business of the House; but I will not to-day under the circumstances give way to any other business unless I am obliged to do so.

Mr. MAYNARD. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. I have been trying for the best part of an hour to get the regular order. The Chair evidently was of the opinion that I was trying for what was impracticable. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The regular order just now was the right of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] to report at any time, and the question now is upon the Hennepin Canal bill as it comes over as unfinished business from yesterday. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. SMITH,] however, the chairman of the Committee on Elections, desires a further postponement with a view to the House proceeding with the consideration of the report of that committee in relation to the Delegate from Utah.

Mr. MAYNARD. I will state very frankly that what I am trying to get at is to reach the bill in regard to the Freedman's Savings Bank in the morning hour.

The SPEAKER. That bill is in the morning hour, but this bill in relation to the Hennepin Canal bill comes up as unfinished business. It is competent for the House to postpone it until after the morning hour; but if the House chooses, its consideration cannot be interrupted.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH] has a right to call up the privileged question which he desires to call up; but the gentleman from Illinois having charge of the Hennepin Canal bill has a right to raise the question of consideration, and the question is whether the House will consider the report of the Committee on Elections in relation to the Delegate from Utah.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I rise to a question of order. I beg to call the attention of the Speaker to the question whether the report of the Committee on Elections, on which action is now asked, is a privileged report?

The SPEAKER. The Chair has not really examined the report.

Mr. HALE, of New York. I wish to call attention to this point. The report closes with a resolution that the Delegate from Utah having been guilty of certain violations of law is deemed unworthy to occupy a seat in the House of Representatives as such Delegate and that he be "excluded" therefrom. My point of order is this, that a motion to exclude a Delegate or a Member from this floor is not a privileged question within the rules.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would rather reserve his ruling on that point if the gentleman will allow the regular order to proceed. The Chair would rather look into the question closely than decide it eo instanti.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. It is well settled by parliamentary authority that a question of the exclusion of a member is equivalent to expulsion; it is a milder form of expulsion.

Mr. HALE, of New York. If the question is debatable, I desire to be heard also.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would rather the question should be postponed until it properly arises, if the gentleman will waive it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I want to call the attention of the Chair to the fact that this resolution relates not to a Member but to a Delegate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will examine the question closely.

HENNEPIN CANAL.

Mr. HURLBUT, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. No. 145) to provide for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of Lake Michigan and the Illinois, Mississippi, and Rock Rivers.

The bill was as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to survey, lay out, and construct a canal from a point on the Illinois River, at or near the town of Hennepin, by the most practicable and convenient route, to the Mississippi River, at the city of Rock Island, with a branch canal, or feeder, from Rock River, at the city of Dixon, connecting by the most practicable and convenient route with said main line of said canal at the most suitable and convenient point near the town of Sheffield. Said canal and said branch shall not be less than seventy feet wide at the water-line, and not less than six feet in depth of water, with locks not less than one hundred and fifty feet in length and twenty-one feet in width, and with a capacity for vessels of at least two hundred and eighty tons burden; and for that purpose the Secretary of War shall have power and authority, by engineers and agents employed by him, to enter upon any lands for the purpose of making the necessary preliminary examinations and surveys, and to enter upon and appropriate to the use of the United States, for the purpose aforesaid, any lands for the construction of such canal and branch, with guard-gates, waste-weirs, locks, lock-houses, basins, bridges, and other erections and fixtures, as may be necessary for the safe and convenient navigation of the said canal and branch.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War shall cause to be made, by skillful engineers of the Army, all necessary examinations and surveys, and from them and surveys already made he shall determine and locate the route of said canal, with a due regard to the permanency of its construction and its greatest advantages for military, naval, and commercial purposes; and the said engineers shall make and file in the office of the Secretary of War a survey, map, and profile of said canal and branch when thus located, and before the work thereon shall be commenced.

SEC. 3. That it shall be the duty of the Secretary of War to secure the right of way for such canal and branch, to acquire the title to such lands as may be necessary, by agreement, purchase, or voluntary conveyance from the owners, if it can be done on reasonable terms; but if that shall be found impracticable, then the Secretary of War, by engineers and agents, may at any time thereafter enter upon and take possession of said lands, and appropriate the same to the United States for the purpose of the construction of said canal and branch, and shall apply, at any term of the circuit or district court of the United States for the northern district of Illinois to be held thereafter, at any general or special term held in said district, upon twenty days' notice, for the appointment of commissioners to fix the compensation to be paid by the United States for such right of way, and any such land, to the owners thereof, and the damages, if any; such application shall be made on the service of notice, of not less than twenty days, to the parties in interest, of the time when and place where such application is to be made; and if it shall be made to appear to said court, or the judge thereof, that personal service of such notice cannot be made for any cause, such service may be made by publishing the same in such newspaper and for such length of time as the court or judge may direct; which notice and the petition on which it is issued shall in all cases describe with reasonable certainty the lands designed to be taken; and before proceeding to the hearing, the said court shall appoint guardians for such of the parties interested in the lands as are minors, and some suitable person or persons to represent the interest of such as are insane or otherwise incapable of managing their own affairs, and of such as are unknown or absent from the State.

SEC. 4. That upon the hearing the court shall appoint five disinterested freeholders residing in said district as commissioners of appraisal, whose duty it shall be to meet at a time and place assigned by them for that purpose, after giving notice to all the parties in interest, and to proceed and hear the proofs and allegations of the parties, and shall view the said lands so proposed to be taken and appropriated, and thus to ascertain and fix the compensation which the United States shall pay therefor, and to report their doings to the said court. It shall be the duty of said appraisers, in estimating such damages to land, also to estimate the benefits resulting to such premises from the construction of said work, and to offset such benefits against the damages estimated by them so far as shall be just.

SEC. 5. That the said commissioners shall have power to administer oaths to the witnesses, and to adjourn such hearing from time to time, as convenience may require, by proclamation, without notice; and they shall make a report of their proceedings to the court named in section 3 of this act, with the minutes of the testimony taken by them, if any. On such report being made by said commissioners, the United States shall give notice to the parties to be affected by the proceedings, or their attorneys, according to the rules and practice of such court, at any general or special term thereof, for the confirmation of such report; and if no appeal be taken therefrom, the court shall thereupon confirm such report, and shall make an order containing a recital of the substance of the proceedings in the matter of the appraisal, and a description of the real estate appraised for which compensation is to be made, and shall also direct to whom the money is to be paid. But either party feeling aggrieved at said appraisal may, within thirty days after the same has been returned into court, file an appeal therefrom and demand a jury of twelve men to estimate the damages sustained; but such appeal shall not interfere with the rights of said United States to enter upon the premises taken or to do any act necessary and proper in the construction of said work. In case the owner of the land takes an appeal, he shall give bonds, with sufficient surety or sureties, for the payment of any costs that may arise upon such appeal; and in case the party appealing does not obtain a verdict increasing or diminishing, as the case may be, the award of the commissioners, such party shall pay the whole costs incurred by the appellee, as well as his own; and the payment into court, for the use of the owner of said premises taken, of a sum equal to that finally awarded shall be held to vest in the United States the title of said land of the right to use and occupy the same for the construction, maintenance, and operation of said canal and branch.

SEC. 6. That whenever the report of such commissioners shall be confirmed, or, in case of appeal therefrom, final judgment thereon shall have been rendered, the court shall direct a summary of the petition and the report, with the order of confirmation or final judgment, to be entered of record. And said commissioners shall be entitled to such sum as the court shall deem just for their services, together with their necessary traveling expenses, for every day they are actually engaged in the performance of their duties, which shall be added to the amount agreed upon in their report, and paid as a part of said claims. And upon the payment of the compensation specified in said report for such right of way, and any such land, to the owner or owners thereof, or upon depositing the sum in such bank or other institution as the court shall designate for that purpose, the title to such right of way and lands shall pass to and be vested in the United States.

SEC. 7. That the Secretary of War shall cause said canal and branch to be made and constructed upon the land to be taken and appropriated as is hereinbefore provided, and that he shall cause said work to be entered upon and commenced as soon as practicable, and within not exceeding six months after this act goes into effect, and shall cause the same, with all necessary locks or lock-houses, waste-weirs, guard-gates, basins, and bridges, to be constructed and completed, ready for navigation, at the earliest possible day consistent with the public interests; and for that purpose he shall detail a sufficient number of the most skillful and experienced officers from the Corps of Engineers as he may deem best and necessary, who shall superintend and direct said work, under such orders and rules as he may prescribe.

SEC. 8. The same, and every part thereof, and the locks and waste-weirs, basins, bridges, lock-houses, and other erections and fixtures connected therewith, and to be constructed thereon, shall, at all times after the same shall be made, be kept and maintained in good order and repair and condition for the use and navigation thereof; and when thus completed the said canal and branch shall be a military, naval, postal, and public highway, connecting the waters of Lake Michigan and the Illinois, the Mississippi, and Rock Rivers, and shall be established as such to the United States and the people thereof forever, and no obstructions shall be placed therein which shall impede or interfere with the uninterrupted navigation thereof: Provided, That Congress may at any time regulate, fix, and determine the tolls and charges to be imposed upon said improvement when completed.

SEC. 10. That the Secretary of War shall have power to establish all needful rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the laws of the United States, concerning the use and navigation thereof, and provide such penalties for the violation of such rules and regulations as may be deemed expedient; and a copy thereof shall be filed in the office of the clerk of the district court of the United States for the northern district of Illinois, and a copy thereof, certified by said clerk, under his hand and seal of his office, shall be received in all courts of law as prima facie proof that such rules and regulations were so established; and suits for the violation of such rules and regulations, and to recover such forfeitures, may be prosecuted in said district court, and in any district court of the United States where one of the parties defendant in such suit may reside: Provided, That Congress may at any time revise or abrogate any of such rules and regulations.

SEC. 11. That the sum of $1,000,000 be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to carry into effect the provisions of this act, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated: Provided, That the moneys hereby appropriated shall remain and be at the disposal of the Secretary of War, and subject to his control for the purposes named in this act, until the same are expended, or until the work herein provided for is completed, any law or regulations to the contrary notwithstanding.

The following amendments to the first section had been previously reported from the Committee on Railways and Canals: Insert the words "or above" before "the city of Rock Island;" and strike out "the city of Dixon" and insert in lieu "the most convenient and suitable point."

Mr. HURLBUT. There is another amendment reported from the committee, and which I believe is acquiesced in by all the parties interested in the bill. The amendment is to strike out of the first section the words "near the town of Sheffield." I now enter the motion to recommit the bill, and would ask the House to indicate what length of time for discussion will be satisfactory.

Mr. BURCHARD. Before the gentleman makes his motion to recommit, I ask him to yield to me to move an amendment to the second section of this bill.

Mr. HURLBUT. I will allow the amendment to be read, and if, in the course of debate it should be deemed necessary to act upon it, I will give an opportunity for it to be considered.

Mr. BURCHARD. I move to insert in section 2, after the word "surveys," where it first occurs, in line 3 of the printed bill, the words "of routes to the Mississippi River above the Rock Island Rapids;" also to strike out the words "military, naval, and" before the words "commercial purposes."

Mr. HURLBUT. I cannot yield for that amendment.

Mr. COTTON. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BURCHARD] to modify his proposed amendment by changing the word "if" to "including;" so that it will read, "including routes to the Mississippi River," &c.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. There will be no trouble about that; the bill will cover all the ground desired.

Mr. HURLBUT. I suggest to the House to fix now the time for discussion of this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Not at present.

Mr. HURLBUT. Very well. I now yield to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY,] the chairman of the Committee on Railways and Canals.

Mr. MCCRARY. If I can have the attention of the House I will state very briefly the grounds upon which I support this bill, and upon which I understand the Committee on Railways and Canals have recommended its passage. Knowing how the House is pressed for time, I shall use as few words as possible.

I have had occasion more than once in the course of this Congress to urge upon the House the importance of some legislation upon the general question of transportation. I shall not now repeat anything that I have said upon that subject, except the general expression of belief, which has become with me a clear conviction after a pretty thorough study of the whole subject, that it is a question which demands at the hands of Congress careful consideration and the adoption at an early day of some efficient measures of relief.

The bill before the House, in my opinion, is one of a series of measures well calculated to bring that relief to the people which they ask with so much reason. I am not one of that number who believe that by any single scheme, by any single proposition, this problem of transportation can be solved. There are those who insist that the whole question may be solved by laws regulating transportation upon existing lines of commerce. There are those who insist that the whole question may be solved by measures looking to the opening up of additional lines of water transportation. There are those who insist that the whole question may be solved by encouraging or engaging in the construction of new lines of railway, either of standard gauge or narrow gauge. I believe that there is much to be said in support of each and of all these propositions, and doubtless something will eventually be done in all these directions. The people, though opposed to subsidies, can well afford to submit to the expenditure of a moderate sum of money by the Government if by that means they can surely get cheap lines of transportation over important routes.

One thing, of course, will be conceded by everybody, that competition, if it can be secured, is one element of great importance, of controlling importance, I may say, in the cheapening of transportation and thereby in the solution of this problem. The difficulty with the existing system of transportation grows out of the fact that the States of the Union have chartered corporations and have placed in their hands a monopoly of the carrying trade. Between those great corporations there never has been, and probably never will be, that free and permanent competition which is necessary to bring prices down to the lowest possible paying rate. This is so because combinations are formed by them for the express purpose of keeping up the rates. It will be conceded by all that wherever it is possible to establish one cheap line of transportation, if that line does not do all the business, it will by competition compel other lines to reduce their rates. One cheap line acts as a regulator of all other lines which carry to the same market or may by possibility serve the same ship-pers.

The bill before the House proposes to complete a line of water communication between Lake Michigan and the Mississippi River.

This can be done by the construction of a canal a distance of about sixty-four miles. I shall enter into no discussion of the engineering questions that are involved in this bill. The route has been examined and surveyed by several engineers, one of them acting under the authority of Congress; and they have substantially agreed in reporting that the canal can be constructed and completed for something less than $4,000,000. I believe those most interested in this bill are willing that any restrictions which are necessary to limit the cost of the canal within these estimates shall be admitted by way of amendment to this bill. I assume, therefore, Mr. Speaker, that the canal can be constructed and this line of water transportation from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi can be completed inside of $4,000,000. So much for the cost.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Do you take into consideration the purchase of the right of way?

Mr. MCCRARY. I do not think that is included.

Mr. GUNCKEL. No; it is not.

Mr. MCCRARY. Now, Mr. Speaker, what will be the advantages; what will be gained? In a word, sir, this will be gained: A line of water transportation from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi River will be established; and whatever the rates over that line of water transportation may be, the railroads which now carry between Lake Michigan and the Mississippi will have to adopt those rates in order to compete with the water line.

Let me call the attention of the House to some facts upon this question to show the importance not merely to Illinois and the Northwest but to the whole country of extending the line of water transportation, which now extends from the Atlantic Ocean to a point one hundred miles west of Chicago, on to the Mississippi River.

The cost of carriage from the Mississippi River to Chicago, as gentlemen will see who will examine the subject, is vastly greater in proportion to distance than the cost of carrying from Chicago to New York. I think I shall be able to show the House, by reference to a few facts, that this great difference grows out of this single fact—that from Chicago to New York the railways compete with water transportation. It is a fact well settled, fully demonstrated, and which I presume no gentleman will dispute, that the rates of carriage by water all over the country are very much cheaper than the rates which are charged for carriage by rail. By reference to the statistics upon this subject, I find that taking the rates charged to Chicago from nine cities, extending from the southern border of Iowa to Saint Paul, Minnesota, the average cost of transportation by rail from the Mississippi River to Chicago is now seventeen cents and one mill per bushel, or was that during the years commencing with 1868 and ending with 1872. The average distance is about two hundred miles; the average cost about seventeen cents a bushel.

Now, from Chicago to New York the distance is about eight hundred miles; the average cost is only about thirty cents a bushel; and I believe latterly it is considerably less than that; but the statistics to which I have had access relate to the years from 1868 to 1872, and put the charge at about thirty or thirty-one cents a bushel. We find then this singular and important fact: The charge for carrying two hundred miles west of Chicago is seventeen cents per bushel, while the charge for carrying eight hundred miles, from Chicago to New York, is but thirty-one cents. I repeat, there is no way in which this difference can be explained except by reference to the fact that between Chicago and New York there is water transportation. The important fact to be remembered is that from Chicago to New York there is one cheap route, and this operates by way of competition upon all the other routes. I do not say that the cheap route must necessarily be a water route. It must be a cheap route. In some parts of the country water transportation is impossible, and there we must have cheap railroad transportation, which, by the way, can probably best be secured by constructing narrow-gauge railroads. Whatever the means employed—and I think in many cases narrow-gauge railroads should be preferred to canals—the great thing to be accomplished is the opening in competition with the existing railroads of cheaper lines of transportation. Because this bill seems to offer us such a line I heartily support it.

But, sir, there is another fact which illustrates still more clearly the point I make and will enable the House to see more distinctly the great benefit which will result from establishing the competing water line which is provided for by this bill. The Illinois and Michigan Canal, with its connections, extends one hundred miles westward from Chicago. Over these one hundred miles the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad competes with this water route; and in consequence of that competition the railroad is obliged to reduce its rates to the prices which are charged by the canal. What is the result? Here are five railroads, extending from Chicago to the Mississippi River—the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific; the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy; the Chicago and Northwestern; the Chicago and Alton; and the Illinois Central. One of these railroads for a distance of one hundred miles competes with the Illinois and Michigan Canal and its water connections, and the result is that that railroad is compelled to carry freight over those one hundred miles for about one-half the sum that is charged by the others. The exact facts are these: The cost on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad of carriage over the one hundred miles that compete with the canal is eight cents; over the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad, for the same distance, it is fourteen cents; over the Chicago and Northwestern road, for the same distance, eighteen cents; over the Chicago and Alton road, twelve cents; and over the Illinois Central road, sixteen cents. That one of these roads which competes with the canal carries for eight cents, while the others charge respectively for the same distance twelve, fourteen, sixteen, and eighteen cents, because they do not compete with the canal.

Now, the House will see from these facts what the result will be if this line of water transportation is extended to the Mississippi River; for that will bring this water line in competition with every one of these railroads, not only over those one hundred miles, but over the entire distance. Estimating the rates by water transportation according to the rates already charged so far as we have water transportation, we find that the cost of carrying a bushel of grain from the Mississippi River to Chicago would be eight and one-half cents as against seventeen cents by rail at present—less than one-half. What will be the result of reducing these rates to this extent? I have the right to assume they will be reduced, because we have one hundred miles of water transportation, and the result of that one hundred miles has been to reduce the rates over that distance to the extent of one-half. No man can say there is any doubt but the extension of this water line to the Mississippi River will result in the reduction of the charge on the whole line in the same proportion. What, then, will be the result of reducing the rate charged from the Mississippi River to Lake Michigan by the extension of this water line? I will not go at length into the figures, but will call the attention of the House to the fact that from the States of Iowa and Minnesota alone there is annually shipped to market about sixty million bushels of wheat and corn, to say nothing of any other product. If we can save on the transportation of this single item at the rate of eight cents per bushel, the result will be a saving upon sixty million bushels of not less than $5,000,000 in a single year.

As to the results likely to be secured by the extension of this water route, assuming that the rate to be charged upon the whole line may be safely estimated by the rates now charged upon so much of the line as is completed and in operation, I can do no better than to quote from the report of the Senate Committee on Transportation Routes. I read from that report as follows:

The average water rates appear to be but 50 per cent. of the present average rail rates. The average saving in the transport of grain from the river towns mentioned to Chicago, upon the basis of the results here obtained, appears to be 8.6 per bushel. The total surplus quantity of wheat and corn in the States of Iowa and Minnesota during the year 1872 is estimated at sixty million bushels.

If we assume that this saving of 8.6 cents per bushel would be effected on the transport of this quantity, either by water carriage or by the effect of water carriage in causing a reduction of rail rates, we find that the reduced cost of transporting the surplus wheat and corn of Minnesota and Iowa to Chicago will amount, on the crop of a single year, to the sum of $5,160,000, or $1,261,000 more than will be required to construct the Hennepin Canal.

But, sir, I wish to call attention to another significant fact to illustrate still further the proposition I have made that this line of water transportation, if allowed to compete with railroads from Chicago to the Mississippi River, will bring down their charges very largely. As I have said, canal and slack-water navigation now extend about one hundred miles west of Chicago to La Salle.

In the report of the committee of the Senate on this subject, already quoted from, I find what I shall now read in illustration of the point I am making:

A more marked exhibition of the effect of water competition in reducing rail-freight charges is also given by Mr. Utley. The freight charges on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad is only eight cents per hundred pounds from Henry to Chicago, between which points there is water competition, while the rate from Tiskilwa, only twelve miles farther west than Henry, and beyond the effect of canal competition, is fifteen cents per hundred pounds, or nearly as much for twelve miles as for one hundred miles. Discriminations such as this are, however, characteristic of rail transport in all parts of the country.

This is an excellent illustration of the fact that by bringing water transportation into competition with railway transportation, or in other words by bringing a cheap line into competition with an expensive one, we may bring down prices. It is then a clear proposition that wherever without too great an expenditure of money we can open up a cheap water line, as for example where we can by a short and cheap canal connect great natural water-ways, we ought to do it.

We desire for the Northwest the great advantage to be gained by bringing the railroads which connect the Mississippi River with Lake Michigan in competition with water transportation. We desire the same benefits now enjoyed by the people to the eastward of Chicago by reason of this same competition.

As showing still further the importance of establishing water transportation wherever it is possible without too much expense in order to create competition with railroads, I call attention to some further facts stated in the report from which I have been reading. On page 52 of that report I find the following. In discussing the effect upon railroad rates of competing water lines, and referring to the rates between Chicago and New York, the committee say:

During the year 1872 the "all-rail" rates were 24.5 per cent. higher than the "all-water" rates, the "lake and rail" rates were 7 per cent. higher than the "all-water" rates, and the "all-rail" rates were 16.3 per cent. higher than the "lake and rail" rates.

The average summer rail rate for 1872 (May, June, July, August, September, October, and November) was 31.27 cents, and the average winter rail rates in 1872 (December, January, February, March, and April) was 36.2 cents, the average winter rate being 16 per cent. higher than the average summer rate. By comparing the all-rail rates for the months of June, July, and August with the all-rail rates for December, January, and February we obtain a more accurate expression of the effect of ample water facilities in competition with equally ample rail facilities. The average all-rail rate during the three summer months just named was 27 cents, and the average of the winter months was 39 cents, the winter average being 44.4 per cent. higher than the summer average, when the competition of water transport was in full force. It may be supposed that the increase in the rail rates during the winter months is caused by the increased cost of transport during that season of the year, but this is true only to a very limited extent. The chief cause is the absence of competition by lake and canal. This is evident from the fact that although the cost of transportation by rail is not greater in October and November than in June and July, yet the average of the rates during the former months is 44.4 per cent. higher than the average of the rates during the latter months.

Mr. Speaker, if these be facts, they demonstrate that one of the best means of solving the transportation problem is by opening cheaper lines all over the country, wherever it can be done without great expense. I care not whether these cheaper lines be canals or narrow-gauge railroads, so that they operate to materially cheapen rates.

Now, sir, having said this much and not desiring to detain the House, I will only add that I regard this as one—possibly the only one—of the canal projects now before the House which we can safely undertake and which we ought to undertake at the present time. The moderate sum which, according to the estimate of the engineers, will be required to complete it, can be safely appropriated within the next five years and the country will not feel it, and I am convinced that the results will more than justify the expenditure. The construction of this canal will complete water communication between the Mississippi River and the Atlantic—a line from the heart of the great grain region to the great grain markets of this country, and by connection with ocean steamers with the grain markets of Europe. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Will the gentleman before he resumes his seat allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. McCrARY. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is this $1,000,000 intended to build the whole work, or is it only the beginning.

Mr. McCrARY. It is only the beginning. The estimate is $3,899,000.

Mr. HURLBUT. I now yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. COTTON.]

Mr. COTTON. I desire to speak more particularly on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD.]

The only survey we have had of this proposed canal was made in 1871, under an act of Congress of July 11, 1870, which provided for a survey for a ship-canal route from Hennepin, on the Illinois River, to Rock Island, on the Mississippi River. The gentleman's amendment proposes that there shall be surveys made above the Rock Island Rapids also before this work is commenced. I have been called upon by a large number of my constituents to bring this matter to the attention of this House, and when this measure should be under consideration have had sent me many petitions asking that any bill that may pass this House shall provide, before the work shall be commenced, for making further surveys, including surveys of routes to terminate above the Rock Island Rapids. I now ask, in this connection, to have read to the House one of these memorials.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, believing that the shortest, cheapest, and most natural route for the construction of the so-called Hennepin Canal, from Hennepin, on the Illinois River, to the Mississippi River, would make the western terminus of such canal above the Rock Island Rapids, thereby saving the commerce of the whole Upper Mississippi Valley, which would flow through such canal, from the great delays, dangers, and expenses incident to their navigation, would respectfully urge your honorable bodies to provide for a careful survey of the route from Hennepin to the Mississippi River, above the Rock Island Rapids, and the adoption of such route, if found feasible, practicable, and economical for the construction of such canal, in any bill which you may pass granting Government aid to the proposed Hennepin Canal, in accordance with the resolutions adopted at the mass convention of the Upper Mississippi Valley, held at Clinton, Iowa, December 23, 1874.

Mr. COTTON. In this memorial reference is made to a convention held at Clinton, Iowa, on the 22d day of December last, which was called for the purpose of calling the attention of Congress to the importance of full and impartial surveys before other routes should be determined upon. At this convention, among other things, it was declared—

That in selecting the route for this canal all claims of localities should be ignored and the route adopted which the best engineering skill may determine, and which will be best adapted to the wants and interests of the whole Northwest; that the bulk of commerce which would flow through this canal would pass to and from the country north of the line of the rapids; that a short, practical route for the canal exists along the Meredosia River, forming a confluence with the Mississippi at a point twenty miles above Rock Island; that Congress so legislate upon the subject that the canal, when constructed, shall terminate above the Rock Island Rapids, if such route shall be found to be feasible, practicable, and economical; that no location shall be fixed upon until a thorough survey of all the country has been made, with a view of selecting the best route.

It is proposed to amend the bill to provide for these further surveys. There has been but the one survey, as I before remarked, made in 1871, and made under a law which fixed Rock Island as a point on the Mississippi River. I have the honor to represent a district extending quite a distance both above and below the point opposite Rock Island, and I wish in this matter simply what is fair to all portions of the district. Let the surveys be complete and thorough of all proposed routes, and that be adopted which is, in the language of the memorial, the most feasible, practicable, and economical. Let this amendment be ingrafted upon the bill, and it will accomplish that end. The gentleman who moves this amendment, I understand, will not in the end sustain the bill. I differ from him in that. I shall sustain his amendment, and after that the bill.

I have been asked by a gentleman in front of me what would be the cost of this canal. Yesterday I telegraphed to the Chief of Engineers for the recent estimates of its cost made under the act of the last session of Congress. I will ask to have read the answer from the Chief of Engineers. I will say, however, that only the last portion of this estimate applies to the canal from Hennepin to Rock Island, which is the sum of $4,541,007. The estimate is for a larger canal than this bill contemplates; one with locks one hundred and seventy feet in length by thirty feet in width, while the limit in the present bill is for a length of lock of one hundred and fifty feet with a width of twenty-one feet.

I ask the Clerk to read my telegram to the Chief of Engineers and his answer.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES OF THE UNITED STATES,
February 5, 1875.

Brigadier General A. A. HUMPHREYS,
Chief of Engineers, War Department:

Please telegraph me amount of the recent estimate of cost of constructing canal from Hennepin to Rock Island, with branch to Dixon, and of enlarging the canal from Chicago to Joliet, and improving Illinois River from Joliet to Hennepin, and on what width of canal and dimensions of locks this estimate is made.

A. R. COTTON.

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, D. C., February 6, 1875.

Hon. A. R. COTTON:

Report on canal from Mississippi River to Chicago, submitted to Secretary of War February 3. Estimated cost of ship-canal from Chicago to Joliet, $11,532,932; Illinois River, between Joliet and La Salle, including eleven locks and eleven dams, designed to give seven feet navigation, locks three hundred and fifty by seventy-five feet, $4,347,879; canal from Hennepin to Rock Island, with additional estimate for enlarged locks, one hundred and seventy by thirty feet, $4,541,007; total $20,421,818.

A. A. HUMPHREYS.

Mr. COTTON. It will be seen that this estimate embraces an enlargement of the canal from Joliet to Chicago, to be made a ship-canal of the dimensions of three hundred and fifty feet in length of locks and seventy-five feet in width, and a corresponding improvement of the Illinois River from Joliet to Hennepin. But those expenditures are not embraced in the present bill.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him whether there is any provision allowed in that calculation for the right of way?

Mr. HOLMAN. There is not.

Mr. COTTON. I believe there is not. My colleague was right in stating the estimate as made in 1871 of the cost of the canal from Hennepin to Rock Island at $3,899,722.64; but this present estimate is based upon enlarging the locks as I have said.

Mr. GUNCKEL. But does not include the right of way?

Mr. COTTON. I believe not.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Will not that require several millions more?

Mr. COTTON. It will not. I do not apprehend that the right of way would cost a large sum.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Is there any provision made for damages that may be claimed by the people who have water-rights on the Rock River that may be damaged by this?

Mr. COTTON. I do not suppose that it will affect such rights.

I will say that this estimate adds $641,284 on account of the enlargement of locks to the former estimate in 1871, making the estimate for the Hennepin Canal proper $4,541,007. The further expense up to $20,421,818 is for the work between Hennepin and Chicago. There already exists a canal from Chicago to Joliet, and that, with the Illinois River when improved and the proposed Hennepin Canal, will constitute a continuous water-way from the Mississippi River to the lakes.

We now ask, according to this estimate, less than $5,000,000, and that will build a canal sixty-five miles in length from Hennepin to the Mississippi River.

Now, I ask gentlemen first to adopt this amendment, which provides for further surveys so as to ascertain the best route, dealing fairly by every locality which may deem a route in that direction the most feasible. As it is proposed to make this canal with the nation's money, this is but fair and just. No point should be fixed; the canal should not be given a local or sectional character. This amendment being first adopted, pass the bill and authorize the commencement of this work. It is asked for by a great portion of the Northwest. It will secure a water-way from the lakes to the Mississippi River, and it will cost less than has been appropriated for the construction of a single public building in several of our cities. It is not a very large sum for so important an enterprise, and I trust that our friends in Congress will not refuse to grant an appropriation for a canal to complete the connection of the lakes with the Mississippi River which in amount is less than the cost of the Chicago post-office. I trust the House will pass the bill, after having first amended it so that the most practicable route, the one that will best serve the commercial interests of the country, may be secured. I now yield to my colleague [Mr. WILSON] the remainder of my time.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. How much time have I?

The SPEAKER. Five minutes.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Several years ago the West asked the attention of Congress to their need of better and cheaper transportation facilities. Corn was ninety cents a bushel in the East and South, and would not pay for shipping. The West then severely felt the want of cheaper routes, but the appeal was unheeded. The consequences to many settlers just gathering their first crops were discouraging, corn was permitted to rot in the crib, was used for fuel, and its production comparatively discontinued by farmers who cultivated the crop for eastern and southern markets. The power of the West to buy from the East was curtailed. The West suffered then, practiced economy, and turned their attention in greater degree than before to condensing their bulky products.

Several years have passed and a careful inquiry will show that the neglect to furnish cheaper transportation has resulted quite as disastrously to the East as to the West. The money received from foreign countries is paid to us for cotton, breadstuffs, and live-stock products principally; we sell but few manufactured articles, and our manufacturers thrive when the producers of these staple products thrive and suffer when they suffer. Our manufacturers are in the East, our producers in the West and South. Scarcely a State east of the Alleghenies produces enough of bread and meat for its own consumption; our annual export of these two commodities amounts to $200,000,000. They are produced in the Northwestern States that have two outlets to the ocean, one by the lakes and one by the Mississippi. Perhaps nothing is more necessary to the material well-being of the Eastern States than a prosperous Northwest.

What is the condition of our country at large? Our manufacturing industries languish although people consume and wear as much as formerly. Our artisans and operatives are idle, many of them, although industries throughout the civilized world are not generally depressed. The manufacturer is idle now, because the producer of the Northwest has not been able to buy his wares.

Our capital cannot employ our labor, because our labor costs too much; our labor costs too much, because the necessities of life are too high; and the necessities of life are high, because it costs too much to transport them from the field to the workshop. It costs more to transport a ton of merchandise from the Mississippi by rail to the Atlantic sea-board than from the sea-board to Europe or Asia.

The agriculturists of the country press this want on the attention of Congress. Boards of trade and chambers of commerce have petitioned for cheaper transportation; State Legislatures have requested it, and the President has recommended that Congress bring it about.

The completion of the Hennepin Canal will connect the lake and river systems, and make it possible for the States bordering on the Mississippi to regulate charges within their own limits, as the river will become the distributing point now that steam can be used on the canal. Those States that border on the Mississippi and produce our surplus grain and meat will have a continuous water communication to the sea-board, and a reduction in freights in consequence that will give them an advantage over their rivals in Russia they do not now enjoy in supplying the deficiency in Europe.

Our dual system of government makes it impossible for any one State to conduct a national improvement of this kind and control the future traffic over it. A State situated like Iowa, for example, cannot contribute to connect the river with the lake system except through Federal channels. She cannot get to Lake Michigan by water, because this link is missing; nor can she send her products to Europe by the river system, because there is a bar at the mouth of the Mississippi. And yet Iowa sells more wheat than any State in the Union, more corn than any other State the present year; she has more surplus pork and except Texas more surplus beef, and thousands of the Texan cattle are fed at the corn-cribs of Iowa.

The whole expense of opening the Hennepin Canal, deepening the passes of the Mississippi, and building a double-track freight railroad to the sea-board could be better afforded by this one State alone than that these enterprises should be delayed ten years longer, were there any constitutional methods by which Iowa could control the building and operation of these enterprises.

Iowa grows two hundred million bushels of grain annually, and exports perhaps fifty millions at a cost from her fields to the sea-board of about $25,000,000. The cost of moving her live stock, paying return freights on coal, lumber, and merchandise, will perhaps make a total cost of $40,000,000. It costs the grain and meat producers of my district fifteen mills per ton per mile to pay freights to the sea-board, which is more than double what the actual cost would be if our railroads competed with the lake and river system.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Inasmuch as nothing will probably be before the House to-day except this bill, I trust the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] will be allowed to go on with his remarks.

Mr. HURLBUT. I hope the gentleman will be allowed ten minutes in his own time.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire, and others. There is no objection.

No objection was made, and leave was granted accordingly.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Following out the line of thought that was in my mind when my time expired, I wish to say that the difficulty in the United States to-day is that our capital cannot afford to employ our labor, because our labor costs too much; and our labor costs too much because it costs the laborer too much to buy all the necessities of life. It costs too much to buy all the necessities of life because it costs too much to transport them. The employer in the Eastern States is further from the field where his bread and meat grows, speaking from a transportation point of view, than he is from Asia or Africa. On the eastern sea-board, the man who emplys laborers there can better afford to send to Asia, Africa, Russia, or any part of continental Europe for anything he desires than to send to the Western States for it.

We as a nation buy too much and sell too little. You can count on your fingers in a few minutes all the articles we have to sell. We have cotton, breadstuffs, live stock, and then if you add petroleum and a few other things there is little else. But few of the manufactured articles of this country find a market abroad. You can take the returns of the Secretary of the Treasury furnished monthly to members of this House and find in them but very few articles which, manufactured in the United States, find a market abroad. You must find your market in the Northwest or in the South, or you will not have one. But we are unable to buy, and you are unable to sell. Can the permanent prosperity of the United States be maintained and guaranteed without the permanent prosperity of the West? The West is anxious to send you cheap bread and cheap meat.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Does the gentleman know the cost of transporting a barrel of pork from Chicago to New York to-day, or a hundred pounds of grain?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Yes, I do.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. The cost of transporting a barrel of pork from Chicago to New York is $1.04, and for transporting one hundred pounds of grain thirty cents. Is not that cheap transportation?

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Certainly, and that is the very point I want to raise here. We cannot get to Chicago. The grand lake system of transportation is separated from the river system by a little band. Permit us to get from the river to the lakes, and we can give you cheap bread; we can give you of the East enough to eat, and that which will be cheap.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. According to the gentleman who preceded you, [Mr. COTTON,] you propose an enterprise that will cost the Government $4,000,000, and will pay $5,000,000 profit to the Northwest in one year. The Government of the United States is asked to expend $4,000,000, when private enterprise may be tempted to make $5,000,000.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. Why did not the gentleman from New York [Mr. CHITTENDEN] interrupt the gentleman to whom he desires to apply his remarks and not interrupt me?

Mr. CHITTENDEN. I beg the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. HURLBUT. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS.]

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. This very important measure comes into the House for consideration under a suspension of the rules, instead of being considered in Committee of the Whole as the rules require. I venture to say that the suspension of the rules was in good part a personal compliment to the very popular gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. HAWLEY.] If merely a personal compliment were involved, it would have given me great pleasure to have voted for it.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope the gentleman will not make such a broad, sweeping charge as that. I voted to suspend the rules, and I did so because I thought this measure was one that deserved serious consideration.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I do not include the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope the gentleman did not undertake to say that to act upon so grave a matter as this was merely personal feeling.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. It is known to gentlemen on the floor that many votes for considering this bill have been controlled by personal feeling. I do not withdraw the remark. And I say further that if this were merely a personal compliment to the gentleman from Illinois, if it did not affect great and broad interests, it would have given me great pleasure to have joined in that personal compliment. I have to say further that personal friends of my own whom I very highly esteem, and to whom I would be very glad to render a favor if I consistently could do so, are advocates of this measure.

But there are considerations which are broader than personal friendship; there are arguments which are grander than local interests. It seems to me these considerations are all ranged against the policy of which this measure is but the pioneer. The policy of our Government of late years in the matter of transportation has not gone beyond the improvement of natural water-ways in the first place; and in the second place subsidies to railroads, or in one very notable instance to steamships. Without taking time to trace the history in detail, I venture to appeal to the observation of every gentleman on this floor if it is not true that as to every subsidy which has been granted to railroads or to steamboat companies scandal has arisen or misfortune has befallen the recipients.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The gentleman is now speaking of subsidies to private corporations. This is not a subsidy to anybody.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I understand that.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. It is simply a work to be performed by the Government itself, and the question is, can the Government trust itself?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. It is to be performed by the Government itself or let by contract, as is suggested in the eighth section.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. The Secretary of War is to have a discretion in that matter, as he ought to have.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I come back to reiterate that no subsidy has ever been granted which has not produced grave scandal or involved those who accepted the subsidy in grave misfortune; either scandal or misfortune or both have been the result.

Now this, Mr. Speaker, is a new departure. My friend from Illinois has well said that this is not a subsidy. But it is a new departure; it is the opening of a new principle; it is saying that the Government shall enter upon the building of canals; and the very eloquent and very fair gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. MCCRARY,] who opened the debate, said that this is but one of a series of measures, involving not $4,000,000 alone, as this bill does according to the estimate of the gentleman from Iowa, but involving the final expenditure of scores of millions of dollars.

Mr. MCCRARY. I desire to interrupt my friend a moment by way of correction.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Certainly.

Mr. MCCRARY. I said that this was one of a series of measures. I did not say it was one of a series of canal measures. I shall not be in favor of any canal project, as I thought I had distinctly said, unless it is one which will connect other very important water-ways without any very extraordinary expenditures of money.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. This is, as the gentleman now suggests, one of a series of measures for canals that shall connect water-ways that shall not involve too large an expenditure of money. Who is to determine that question? Congress. The gentleman thinks this is not too large an expenditure of money. I think that just here and now it will establish a precedent which will make the expenditure of money for this purpose immense. This is like other misfortunes which come "not single spies, but in battalions."

The gentleman from Illinois has called my attention to the fact that this work is to be built by the Secretary of War, or, as I repeat, according to the eighth section, by contracts.

That section provides:

That the Secretary of War, if in his judgment it will be to the interest of the United States, may cause said work, or any part of the same, to be put under contract to the lowest bidder, and in such case he shall invite proposals for any work or any material or labor for any part of said work; and there shall be separate proposals and separate contracts for each work, and also for each class of material or labor for each work.

Now, sir, in the good State of New York we know what contracts are; and for one, in view of the experience that I have seen and know in that State in connection with canal contracts, I am not willing to assent even by indirection that this Government shall enter upon the building of canals by contract or otherwise.

But the gentleman from Iowa suggests that this is the method, substantially the only method, of solving the transportation problem. It seems to me that this is one of a series of measures calculated to complicate the transportation problem, calculated to invest money unnecessarily for the purpose of transportation. Essentially the remedy for the evils of excessive charges for freight must come from competition. The gentleman from Iowa has referred to the cost of transportation on the great line from Chicago to New York. What have we seen recently? He cites the fact that great corporations may combine. Yes; but great corporations may quarrel also, as we have seen in the breaking up of the Saratoga combination; and we see to-day freight transported from Chicago to the East at lower rates than in any previous winter, not by the competition of water-ways at all, for they are closed by ice, but by the competition of railroads.

Now, let me say to the gentleman, as he has illustrated the high rates from certain points in the West not having railroad competition, that such inequalities exist along water channels. We have experience on this point in New York. Although we have the Erie Canal, and although competition taken as an aggregate reduces the rates, yet the Erie Canal allows inequalities between localities not far distant from each other where railroad competition is not afforded; and such inequalities will always exist. It is absurd for gentlemen to think that they can remove those inequalities by building canals.

Mr. BURCHARD. I yield two minutes more to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, in view of my little remaining time, I must turn at once to the argument, which after all is the essential thing. I ask this House to read again the warning of the Secretary of the Treasury given in his report of last December—a warning that you must cut down your expenditures unless you want to increase taxation. This is his language:

Not only is rigid economy required by reason of the present condition of the public revenues, but fidelity to obligations and a just sense of responsibility to the people, to whom the Government belongs, and who contribute of their means to its support, demand it. Government cannot long exist in a prosperous condition without the confidence of the people, and that confidence will be given or withheld accordingly as the Government is faithfully, honestly, and economically administered, or otherwise. When it is understood that not a dollar is taken from the people by taxation beyond what is needful for the legitimate purposes of the Government, they will not withhold their confidence or refuse to support its financial measures. At such a time loans are freely taken and taxes cheerfully paid. It is essential to the proper strength of the Government at home, as well as to its credit abroad, that no greater taxes be levied than are required to carry on its necessary operations and to maintain the national faith and honor by prompt payment of all its obligations, and when such revenues are collected it is no less important that they be faithfully and exclusively applied to the legitimate purposes of Government.

While the indebtedness of the Government is large, and the maintenance of the national honor requires the collection of large sums by taxation to meet the accruing interest, besides other necessary public expenses, any appropriation for other purposes should be deprecated as likely to affect injuriously the public credit and increase the difficulties in the way of return to a specie basis.

I ask this House to consider again the words of the President of the United States in his late annual message, in which he says:

In view of the large national debt existing, and the obligation to add 1 per cent. per annum to the sinking fund, a sum amounting now to over $34,000,000 per annum, I submit whether revenues should not be increased or expenditures diminished to reach this amount of surplus. Not to provide for the sinking fund is a partial failure to comply with the contracts and obligations of the Government.

And I ask this House to consider again the message of the President to the Senate of the United States in which he urges the increase of the surplus revenue, and especially suggests that the duty on tea and coffee be restored and that the 10 per cent. horizontal reduction of the tariff on articles specified in the law of June 6, 1872, be repealed. Here are his words:

I respectfully call your attention to a few suggestions:

First. The necessity of an increased revenue to carry out the obligation of adding to the sinking fund annually 1 per cent. of the public debt, amounting now to about thirty-four millions dollars per annum, and to carry out the promises of this measure to redeem, under certain contingencies, eighty millions of the present legal tenders, and, without contingency, the fractional currency now in circulation.

How to increase the surplus revenue is for Congress to devise, but I will venture to suggest the duty on tea and coffee might be restored without permanently enhancing the cost to the consumers, and that the 10 per cent. horizontal reduction of the tariff on articles specified in the law of June 6, 1872, be repealed.

Other means of increasing revenue than those suggested should probably be devised and also other legislation.

I ask gentlemen to look at the debt statement for the month of January, showing that in that month this year we fell behind paying our current expenditures $1,387,870.27, and as compared with January of last year, when the debt was reduced $1,845,211.76, we are worse off in a single month by $3,233,082.03 than we were a year ago.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I must ask the indulgence of the House for a few moments to complete this point. I ask for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. WOODWORTH in the chair.) If there be no objection, the gentleman from New York [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS] will be allowed five minutes more, not to be taken out of the time of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. BURCHARD.]

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. More than that, the newspapers state that Congress is called upon to raise thirty-five or forty million dollars by additional taxation. Whether that may be true or not, the report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows that last year we paid of the sinking fund only $2,344,882.30, so that in that year we were deficient some $28,000,000. In seven months of this year we are $907,931.13 behind paying our current expenses, without paying a penny into the sinking fund. Now, my good friend from Iowa [Mr. WILSON] on the other side suggests one reason why the country is suffering is because labor costs too much. Why? Because our expenditures are too heavy, because our taxes are too burdensome. If you want to have labor cost less you must do two things: first reduce the expenditure of the Government, and in the next place reduce the taxation imposed by the Government. And I want gentlemen to understand this bill presents the issue squarely. Will you raise as much money as you appropriate for this purpose by increased taxation? You have no money in the Treasury; you are running behind on your current expenses; and let gentlemen understand that every dollar of additional expenditure means so many dollars of added taxation.

The gentleman from Iowa eloquently said if the East is to be prosperous the West must be prosperous. Heaven knows I want the West to be prosperous; I want all parts of my country to be prosperous; and because I am anxious for prosperity everywhere, I cannot do less than raise my voice of warning against entering on the policy which is involved in this bill. It means increased expenditure in every department. It means increased taxation in all the branches which legislation can reach; and I say therefore that every vote for this bill is a vote for increased taxation.

Mr. BURCHARD. Mr. Speaker, before proceeding to discuss the merits of the bill, I desire to say a word to the House in regard to an amendment I have suggested. If Congress is determined to complete a canal from the Illinois River to the Mississippi River, I desire and Congress should desire to construct it in such manner and to such points as will confer the greatest advantages with the least possible cost. I presume gentlemen are familiar with the course of the Mississippi River from Saint Paul to its mouth. It runs southeasterly from that city until it reaches Savanna, about forty miles below the Illinois and Wisconsin State line. There, after running twenty miles southward to Fulton, it again bends to the westward, so that Fulton is twenty-five miles nearer Lake Michigan than either Dunleith or Rock Island. Surveys have not been made from this point. Routes have only been surveyed and estimates made by the engineers for lines across the country to Rock Island and to the rapids of the Mississippi River above Rock Island. Those rapids are within a few miles, and have a fall of twenty feet. There is a fall of nearly forty feet between Fulton, one of the points on the easterly bend of the Mississippi River, and Rock Island. I have offered the amendment, as I think, in the interest of economy and in the interest of the men who desire cheap transportation from the upper Mississippi. Before the engineers proceed to locate a route to cost five millions, or four millions at the lowest estimate, for a canal ten feet narrower than this is proposed to be, (because the surveys of the engineers are sixty and this is proposed to be seventy feet at the water line,) and if a military, naval, and commercial canal is to be constructed which will cost from twenty to twenty-five million dollars, the best route shall be first determined. I say do not let us commit the Government to any route, either by indirection or by leaving it open to construction, but let the engineers select the best route before we commence the expenditure of any of the money.

Then, again, the routes required by this amendment to be surveyed have demonstrated by the report of the engineers surveying Rock River for its improvement that there is a depression between the Rock and Mississippi Rivers in a direct line between the summit of this canal and Fulton which furnishes a route by which this canal can be constructed probably as cheaply as by the route farther south. It is claimed that the route is feasible and economical, and would save, if adopted, twenty-five feet of lockage and fifty miles of river navigation, and the canal perhaps could be constructed more cheaply than across to Rock Island, as the land through which it would pass is low, swamp land, and less cutting would be necessary than upon any other route.

But independent of the question of further surveys and ultimate location, I am opposed to the passage of the bill at this time. If you will vote to-day that Fulton shall be the terminus on the Mississippi River, I should feel, in view of the considerations that have been presented by my colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS,] that I ought to vote against the passage of the bill at this time, and I should vote against it. And let me say here that if the great advantages claimed by its friends are to be realized by any portion of the State, they must accrue to that portion which I represent on this floor. I admit that Chicago might be benefited. If a portion of the grain that is now carried to Saint Louis and Milwaukee and other lake ports can be diverted to Chicago by this canal so as to give to Chicago the handling of additional millions of bushels of grain, thus enlarging its commerce, Chicago would be benefited to that extent. But Chicago ought not to come here, and does not I believe come here, asking that the General Government shall construct this canal or make appropriations in order to divert trade from the natural or artificial channels of commerce by railroads or by water routes for the sake merely of building up Chicago at the expense of other towns and other cities on the lake or on the Mississippi River.

This project has no claim to consideration unless it can confer benefits without inflicting injuries. The people of the western country asking for cheap transportation, on whose behalf some gentlemen from the West have been speaking, urge that this will give cheaper transportation from the Upper Mississippi. If any part of the country is to be benefited, it is the district directly within the basin of the proposed canal and of the Mississippi River above its terminus and the country contiguous to it, extending perhaps twenty or thirty miles on each side of the canal and Upper Mississippi. This proposed canal with its navigable feeder will pass through the district that I represent. It will cross its southern part or skirt it within a few miles of its southern boundary. The Mississippi River above for nearly eighty miles bounds the district on the west. If the canal will afford cheaper transportation for the products of any part of Illinois, it is of that portion only represented by my colleague from the Rock Island district and by myself. It cannot possibly affect freights south of the Illinois River or north of it away from its own basin or western water connections. The southern and extreme northern portions of the State could not be locally benefited by the canal, and cannot feel and never have manifested any interest in its construction by the State.

If this bill has merits and ought now to be passed, it is not on account of the great benefit and cheaper transportation it will afford to the people of the State of Illinois, but to the advantages, if any, that must accrue to the producers adjoining and west of the Upper Mississippi. I know it is urged and supported by some as an Illinois measure.

It may be claimed that I am not speaking the sentiments of the State of Illinois or perhaps the sentiments of the district that I represent. The extension of the Illinois and Michigan Canal is no new project. It was proposed years ago that the State, in conjunction with the General Government, should construct the canal from the Illinois River to the Mississippi River. At one time the Legislature of Illinois so far favored this project as to pass a bill providing for an annual tax upon the people and appointing commissioners, and directed them to go to Congress and ask for an appropriation of half the amount necessary to enlarge and extend the Illinois and Michigan Canal to the Mississippi River. Those commissioners were appointed, and my distinguished colleague, the member of the Committee on Railways and Canals who reports this bill, [Mr. HURLBUT,] was one of those commissioners; and in an able memorial, which has been printed and which is upon our files, they explain the advantages of that improvement. They asked that Congress should make an appropriation of $7,000,000. That was in 1867 or 1868. And Congress then, although it was urged to do it, and although there was a surplus of nearly $100,000,000 in the Treasury, nevertheless failed to make an appropriation. Is this an opportune time when, in order to keep up the credit of the Government and to meet our current expenditures, we will find it necessary to put on additional taxation? Congress was then unwilling to aid the enterprise when Illinois offered to defray half the expense.

After that memorial was presented and after the law authorizing the State to aid in constructing the canal had passed, a constitutional convention was called in Illinois, meeting in 1870, and again the canal question was brought up for consideration by the members of the convention, should the State sell the canal, or should it extend, enlarge, and complete it? Why was not the State permitted to proceed to build this, if it be such a grand enterprise; if there be $5,000,000 of profit in it, as gentlemen have said? Is there not private enterprise enough in the State of Illinois, having its $2,000,000,000 of taxable property, under the true valuation, to build it? With all the capital that is in that State, is there not money enough to build a canal if it can pay for itself, as is asserted, in one year?

The whole merits of the enterprise were discussed in that constitutional convention, and after they had concluded the debate it was first proposed to allow the Legislature to vote appropriations. After lengthy debate an amendment was proposed and carried in the convention, by 49 yeas to 11 noes, prohibiting the State of Illinois from ever voting to loan its credit to build this canal, and by a vote of 35 yeas to 25 nays prohibiting it from appropriating a dollar for the purpose.

And let me here refer to some of the men who took part in the proceedings of that convention, men who are distinguished in the history of Illinois. There was John Dement, who represented the county of Lee, a man who had been treasurer of the State of Illinois, who was a member of the second constitutional convention, and again a member of this constitutional convention, running at his election fifteen hundred above his party, and elected because of his ability and integrity. He made a speech in favor of the constitutional amendment prohibiting the loan of the credit or the appropriation of the money of the State to construct railroads and canals. I will read a few words from what he said and commend it to my colleagues from the State of Illinois, and to other members of this House.

Mr. Dement said:

I would not in the embarrassed condition of the treasury of the State, at this time, and while the taxes remain so oppressive, vote an appropriation to commence work of such magnitude, as it is plain that the gentleman's plan would necessarily have to carry numerous other objects, the cost of which no one can foresee or provide for. I would not tax the people in the present embarrassed condition of the treasury to commence what must become an extensive system of canals.

No one voted against that proposition but delegates to the convention living along the line of the canal or its proposed extension. I might read to you the remarks to the same effect of Mr. Turner, who represented another county of the district. Every delegate from the counties north of the proposed canal from the lake to the Mississippi River voted against it. The State of Illinois as a State has not been clamoring for the construction of this canal by the State.

The amendment to the constitution to which I have referred was submitted to the people with the constitution as a separate article, and was adopted by a vote of 142,540 yeas to 27,017 nays, and provides that—

The Illinois and Michigan Canal shall never be sold or leased until the specific proposition for the sale or lease thereof shall have first been submitted to a vote of the people of the State, at a general election, and have been approved by a majority of all the votes polled at such election.

The General Assembly shall never loan the credit of the State, or make appropriations from the treasury thereof, in aid of railroads or canals; Provided, That any surplus earnings of any canal may be appropriated for its enlargement or extension.

I have the estimates made in regard to the cost of this canal. The cheapest plan would not be less than $4,000,000 for this canal, and for the large canal over $12,000,000. I have here the report of the engineer in charge, I wish I had time to read it. He says in that report that the estimate for the completion of the work and improvement of the present canal and Illinois River on the enlarged plan would be $20,000,000; and he says that the construction of this canal would be useless unless the eastern portion of the canal be enlarged upon the same general plan. This bill proposes a canal of not less than seventy feet in width, with locks of not less than one hundred and fifty feet in length.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I do not want to waste time, but I should like to ask my colleague whether the demand made in this bill is not a very small one considering the magnitude of the work.

Mr. BURCHARD. My colleague claims that this is a small demand, but the engineer in charge is not limited by the bill to the smaller canal. The purpose of the canal as defined by the bill is for "military and naval" as well as commercial purposes. In his report the engineer recommends the enlargement of the canal above La Salle on the same scale as that on which the State of Illinois is now carrying on the work of improving the Illinois River below La Salle; and last year Congress appropriated over $100,000 for dams and locks in the Illinois River; and now it is proposed to continue that work at an expense of not less than $2,000,000, so as to make a passage from the Mississippi River to Chicago of seven or eight feet in the Illinois River.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Does the gentleman say that the State of Illinois proposes to abandon those improvements?

Mr. BURCHARD. I do not say that it is intended to abandon those improvements, but here is a proposition to extend the same system of improvements so as to accommodate gun-boats and military operations as well as navigation, and your engineers have made a survey for the purpose indicated. In the report which I hold in my hand, of constructing a large canal across to the Mississippi River, is the following language:

The most important and costly part of the route across this section of country is the portion between Hennepin and Chicago, for this part is essential as affording an eastern outlet for the Hennepin Canal traffic and for perfecting the navigation to Chicago from the Lower Mississippi River through the Illinois River, which is now being improved for steamboat navigation from Hennepin basin down to the Mississippi River. Indeed, the Hennepin Canal, without the improvement of the Upper Illinois River and the enlargement of the eastern portion of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, would be useless as an outlet for the freights of the Upper Mississippi River.

Colonel Macomb concludes his report as follows:

It will be seen by the report of the assistant engineer that the estimate for the route above sketched out for a navigable water-way from the Mississippi River, near Rock Island, to Chicago, on Lake Michigan, is $19,780,535, to which should be added the amount of increase in estimate for locks of proper size on Hennepin Canal, $641,284; making a grand total of $20,421,819.

It has been claimed that an immense amount of grain will be transported through this canal if it be constructed. The whole amount of grain that was received in Chicago in 1872 was 26,266,000 bushels of wheat and about 38,000,000 bushels of corn. That was the amount received from the Illinois and Michigan Canal and all the railroads running into Chicago, not only on the southern side and stretching away hundreds of miles from the course of this canal, but on the northern side. The Chicago and Northwestern Railroad, which is the only one perhaps which would come in competition with this canal for freight to Chicago, carried to Chicago in 1873 only twelve million bushels of wheat, and the remainder of the wheat received in Chicago was carried by other roads. If the tolls are fixed at the rate of three mills per ton per mile on this canal, as now charged on the eastern portion and on the Erie Canal, all the grain actually transported to Chicago from the region north of the canal would not pay the interest on the cost of the investment after taking out the expenses. At the rate of three mills per ton per mile to obtain 6 per cent. interest on \$4,000,000 there must be carried yearly over the canal forty million bushels of grain, and to pay expenses of maintenance as much more grain or freight of other description. Forty million bushels is more than was actually transported during the year 1873 in every direction in wheat or flour from all the territory that pours its trade into Chicago. At present we have a canal over one hundred miles long, which has cost the State from eight to eleven million dollars, as estimated by the State commissioner and the engineer in charge, and the State is now only receiving \$144,000 a year in tolls, and half of that is expended in the cost of keeping up the canal; giving an actual net return of \$70,000, or less than $\frac{1}{10}$ of 1 per cent. on an expenditure of \$8,000,000. The small canal of seventy feet in width I verily believe, constructed at the lowest estimate, would not pay 1 per cent. on the cost of its construction.

Well, now, Mr. Speaker, it is said that the construction of this canal will bring down the cost of the transportation of grain. I have here the statement of competent engineers, published by the Cheap Transportation Committee of the Senate, in which they say that the cost of transportation on an all-freight line for transportation of grain can be reduced to 5 mills per ton per mile. I have a report to substantiate the statement that the cost of transportation on this canal would be 10.2 mills per ton per mile. Upon the New York Central Railroad it costs for through as well as local transportation 16.9 mills per ton per mile. I have here an estimate showing this fact, and I wish I could stop to read it. I have also an estimate from Mr. Finck, vice-president of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad, in which he says that by an estimate of cost he knows that the transportation of grain on a double track railroad can be reduced to 24 mills, with a half mill added for interest, making 3 mills in all per ton per mile.

The following table shows the tonnage and cost of transporting freight on the Erie Canal and Erie and New York Central Railroads for the years indicated:

New York canals and railroads compared.

Now, a double-track railroad could be built for less money than would be required for the construction of this canal between Chicago and Rock Island. The Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad, parallel with this proposed canal, now carries as much freight as is carried on the canal. That road transports as much grain and more coal than the canal. The road alone, both striking the coal region at La Salle, carried eighteen thousand tons during the year 1873, while the Illinois and Michigan Canal only carried seventeen thousand tons during the same time. The following will show the comparative business of the railroads and canal terminating at Chicago for 1873:

I promised to yield a portion of my time to several other gentlemen, and must conclude my remarks. This measure will injure rather than benefit portions of the State of Illinois which I represent. The large canal, should it be built, will take from Rock River a large per cent. of the water of that river now used for manufacturing purposes. The engineer's lowest estimate shows at least nine hundred and one cubic feet per second of the water of that river, estimated by him to be twenty-four hundred and forty-six cubic feet per second. The estimates of other engineers are much higher, and in low water it is claimed that the canal would take over half the water of the river. The small canal he estimates would take 10 per cent. of the water. That noble river in an ordinary stage of water furnishes more manufacturing power than any other river west of the Alleghany Mountains. In the driest season of the year there is not now sufficient water to move the manufacturing establishments that have at different points been erected upon it. In the county of Whiteside, through which this canal is to be built, six or eight of these dams could be constructed for manufacturing purposes, and the canal would largely injure those structures. You have said to us again and again, "Build up your manufactures in the West." This canal would injure and almost destroy some of them; would not confer the general benefit which is claimed for it; the Treasury cannot spare the money for it at this time; and for these reasons I hope the House will not pass the bill.

I now yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. TOWNSEND.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. The time has now arrived when the people of the United States, through their Representatives in Congress, must determine whether or not they are willing to embark in a great scheme of internal improvements. I trust that we will write upon our records to-day the sentiments of old Father Ritchie, who in former times, in the height of his power in Virginia, inscribed at the head of his journal, the Richmond Inquirer, the sound Latin sentiment "obsta principis"—resist beginnings.

I call upon the Congress of the United States to decide whether or not they will, by passing this bill, enter upon a system of internal improvements the like of which for magnitude has never been known in the world before. This bill is supported by some gentlemen who are in favor of this great system, and it is but the entering-wedge, but a feeler of the temper of the people. It is simply to ascertain whether or not we shall undertake the great project which has been laid out before us by sanguine projectors, of a canal from the Ohio to the James River, and another from the Mississippi to the Savannah, and others from the lakes to the Saint Lawrence. This bill is but a small one, involving at first but the expenditure of $1,000,000, and some $3,000,000 hereafter. Yet if it shall be adopted, its consequences will be felt for all time to come. It is brought before you now, with an endeavor to secure for it the support of the great West, under the guise of cheap transportation. It is a plausible disguise, and one that in all probability will command support from a portion of the members from the Western States, and from some of the members from the Southern States as well, who may wish for support of similar measures of their own.

It is the old whig doctrine of internal improvements that was advocated during the time of Henry Clay and the statesmen of that day, and which was good enough when the country was poor and capital limited, but which is now obsolete and unnecessary because of the abundance of capital unemployed. It received an emphatic rebuke from the democratic party through General Jackson's veto of the Cumberland and Maysville military road bill. I commend to the democratic party of this House the argument of that President, the great oracle of democracy. His objection to that bill was placed upon grounds which are just as good to-day as they were on that occasion; nay more, they are still stronger now. He vetoed it because he considered that the public debt of the nation was a sacred trust which had to be discharged in full faith; that while that debt remained upon the people it was a betrayal of that trust for the Congress of the United States and for the executive power to add anything in the way of burdens on the nation. That argument, potent as it was with the democratic party then, should be still more potent with us all to-day. We then had a debt of less than one hundred million dollars; now our debt, interest-paying and non-interest-bearing, exceeds twenty-two hundred millions.

That policy was abandoned at that time by the democratic and whig parties. It was measurably resurrected again by the democratic party when they began their land grants to railroads, commencing with the Illinois Central, and it extended through democratic and republican administrations down to the end of the Forty-first Congress. It was not so obnoxious then, because corporations and not the General Government prosecuted the great undertakings for which aid was given; yet the people of the United States arose in their majesty and earnestly pronounced against it. The policy, though thus ameliorated, was again abandoned, and from that time down to the present hour we have made no land grants, we have made no subsidies for anything within our borders. The only subsidy that we have made has been one that was to enable us to enter into commercial competition with foreign nations and to draw into our harbors that foreign commerce which with that aid was thought to be within our reach.

It is now proposed to reopen that policy in its most obnoxious form when we have an empty Treasury and the Secretary of the Treasury asking us so to legislate as to enable him to pay his daily expenses. It is to be carried no one knows where. It is to be extended from one end of the Union to the other, from the Mississippi to the Atlantic, from the lakes to the ocean, in various directions, involving the expenditure of hundreds of millions of the public money. There is no policy that a government, whether State or national, can inaugurate so destructive of the best interests of the people as the policy of undertaking great works of internal improvements when the capital of the people is sufficient for that end. We have that capital now. Our banks and savings institutions are loaded down with unemployed deposits abundantly sufficient to compass any profitable, not speculative, enterprise.

We in Pennsylvania have gone through that torture of an internal improvement system managed by the State. We undertook to make a railroad at public expense from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh. We built it with the State treasure. We had it officered with men appointed under the authority of the State administration. The expenditures of Pennsylvania went on increasing, never decreasing, but with the increasing horde of office-holders and dependents, and hangers-on of the public works, until the whole State became as it were a hospital for political bummers, a mere appendage to the administrators of the public works. They ruled the State, they ruled elections, they carried everything with a high hand, squandering money in every direction, until a disgusted people demanded the sale of the public works and let them go at half their cost. From a remark that was made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS,] I have very little doubt that the experience of the great State of New York was not less unfortunate than our own.

This scheme that is got up and is before us to-day is a Government work. It does not come in the guise of a subsidy or loan of credit or direct aid to a corporation; but it comes before us as a work to be undertaken by the General Government inside of State lines, and therefore obnoxious to the same constitutional objection that was made by General Jackson with regard to the Maysville road. It is to be managed from one end to the other by engineers appointed by the Government, by managers, by look-keepers, and employes of all kinds that are to be appointed by Executive power and to add to the immense official patronage which the General Government holds to-day hundreds, nay thousands of hungry dependents willing and anxious to serve whatever administration may be in power.

All these great public works, of which this is merely a forerunner, will tend to the great demoralization of the people. We have had notice that this bill is but the entering-wedge of a grand system of internal improvements that is to be carried on in every direction, north as well as south, not merely in the shape of aid to these works, but in the shape of works created, owned, and worked by the Government itself. It will then, as I said before, multiply immensely the office-holders and dependents of whatever administration that may be in power. In fact, if the schemes that have now been concocted and which will be pressing upon Congress in course of time, probably at the next session, should be carried out, they will provide for over ten thousand office-holders of one kind or another to build and manage the canals which are intended to be created at the expense of the people.

My friend from New Hampshire [Mr. PARKER] says there will be no chance for that at the next session of Congress. I trust that he is right. But more than all, and worse than all, these vast expenditures of public money, these hundreds of millions of dollars which will be necessary to carry out the works projected, will be vast corruption funds, jobs greater than ever were concocted by the Credit Mobilier, greater than ever were got up by men professing to work for the Pacific Mail subsidy, greater than any ever suggested in the Memphis and El Paso Railroad that was spoken of the other day in the newspapers, in which millions of stock were said to have been distributed among the adherents of the measure and those whose support was intended to be purchased.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in addition to this demoralization of all those that are immediately connected with it by the vast expenditure of these immense sums, it will lead to great extravagance among the people, as all vast expenditures inevitably do. It will add to the public debt which we are endeavoring now to pay off hundreds of millions of dollars—an amount which no man here to-day can foretell. It will impose upon the people additional burdens and taxation in order to defray the interest that will be incurred and continually running upon the bonds that will have to be issued to carry out these schemes. It will increase the public debt to so great an extent, that the burdens will become too great for the people to bear, and will eventuate in repudiation, as in some of the States much more lightly burdened in the erection of public works has happened heretofore.

There is nothing to my mind so terrible in the future as this vast project which is opening here to-day in this little bill. As I look down the vista of time, as I look along the first half century, I cannot but see vast jobs, great corruption, wide-spread demoralization, and, above all, an infraction of the spirit of the Constitution; for I do not believe that there is power in the General Government to go into the States and take up land, as is provided by this bill—to usurp the authority of the State—unless the State shall first grant that privilege through and by its Legislature.

Mr. HURLBUT. The gentleman will permit me to say that the State has done that.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I end as I began, with the hope that Congress will "resist beginnings" and defeat this bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURCHARD. I yield for a few minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. DAWES.]

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Speaker, I have not sought the floor for the purpose of discussing the merits of this bill either as a particular measure or as part of any plan of internal improvements proper to be entered upon at any time by the Government. But it has impressed itself upon my mind that the Committee on Ways and Means, of which I am a member, would not be entirely true to their duty to this House if they should sit here and permit this bill to pass without communicating to the House, so far as it is in their power, the relations of the Treasury at this time to this measure.

I shall not discuss whether at some time or other this may not be a proper measure; but I shall ask the gentlemen having charge of this measure, in view of what I may state, to postpone action upon it at least until they shall see the temper of this House upon another question.

The House will recollect that at the commencement of this session the Secretary of the Treasury called our attention to the fact that upon the estimates of receipts and expenditures it would be necessary for us to raise by additional taxation more than $20,000,000. I have to state to the House that during the last forty days the receipts have fallen short of that estimate by $3,800,000; so that we must add to the estimated $20,000,000, $3,800,000 for the increase in the deficit within the last forty days. If that deficit should continue during the remainder of the year, $50,000,000 would not meet the obligations of the Government between now and July. Therefore it would not be becoming that the Committee on Ways and Means, preparing as they are to present to the House within the next few days the condition and the demands of the Treasury, should sit silent here and without calling attention to these facts permit this debate to go on upon a bill which upon its passage takes $1,000,000 out of the Treasury of the United States, which altogether by the lowest calculation of its advocates will cost $4,000,000, and by the estimate of those of its opponents who live in the vicinity of the proposed work, will ultimately involve an expenditure of nearly $20,000,000. When I have called attention to the condition and needs of the Treasury as bearing upon this measure, I shall have done all that I propose to do.

I am not here to say whether this is a wise or an unwise measure. I say if you insist on passing it now, attach to it one of two sections; one authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue bonds of the United States to meet the exigency created by this bill, or another revenue measure to impose taxes to the amount of expenditure involved in this measure. But when the Treasury is running into debt every day, when the last month added to the public debt of the nation $1,300,000, and when the receipts have fallen off within the last forty days almost $4,000,000—I say when we discuss such a measure as this, whether involving $1,000,000 or $4,000,000 or $20,000,000, it is our duty to carry along with it some provisions which shall meet the exigency of the case.

Sir, I do not desire to interfere in the discussion of this measure. My attention has been drawn elsewhere during the winter. I am not prepared to say it is not in itself a wise measure; I should however hesitate very much before I gave it my vote under any circumstances. But I am not here to discourage this measure. I am here asking that its friends shall postpone further action on it until the sense of this House has been first taken on a greater and more important question, which will be presented as soon as the Committee on Ways and Means can obtain the floor, and that is whether we will meet our present obligations by increasing the present burdens upon the people.

[Here the hammer fell.]

[Mr. HOLMAN addressed the House. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. WOODWORTH in the chair.) The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAWLEY] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. SPEER. I would like to learn from the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAWLEY] what arrangement he proposes for the further consideration of this bill?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. It has not yet been fully determined by the Committee on Railways and Canals what course shall be pursued.

Mr. SPEER. I would be glad to hear what is proposed by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HURLBUT] who has charge of this bill.

Mr. HURLBUT. It is proposed to allow the present hour for debate to run out, and then let the House determine what shall be done.

Mr. SPEER. There are several gentlemen who desire to be heard on this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. They will have an opportunity.

Mr. SPEER. I hope the gentleman in charge of the bill will not call the previous question this evening.

Mr. HURLBUT. There will be time for all reasonable debate.

Mr. SPEER. You do not propose to call the previous question to-day?

Mr. HURLBUT. I think not; there would hardly be sufficient time for debate on so important a question as this if that were done.

Mr. SPEER. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HAWLEY] yield now for a motion to adjourn?

Mr. HURLBUT. I trust not; let this hour for debate run out.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, it has ever been a matter of surprise to me, since I have been a member of this House, that upon every occasion when a measure has been brought forward here in relation to the subject of transportation, proposing an alleviation of the burdens now resting upon the people, calling upon Congress to do something to improve the means of communication between the different sections of the country, it has uniformly met with more bitter opposition than any other measure brought to the attention of the House. I say this deliberately, and the history of every measure of that character that has been brought before the House proves the truth of what I say.

It is a matter of surprise to me that my colleague, [Mr. BURCHARD,] from a district adjoining my own in the State of Illinois, should feel called upon to take the floor to-day, and with more earnestness and vigor than I or any of you here ever have known him to manifest before, oppose a measure which has received the indorsement of the people of the Northwest with more unanimity than any other measure connected with the subject of transportation that has been discussed before or presented to that people.

He says that a certain constitutional convention of the State of Illinois adopted a provision in the constitution forbidding the State of Illinois from constructing this or any other canal. Does he mean to say that the people of the State of Illinois are opposed to this or like improvements? I hold in my hand a telegram from the governor of Illinois, containing resolutions passed by the State Legislature day before yesterday, instructing their Senators in Congress and requesting their Representatives not only to vote for but to use all their influence to secure the passage of this bill. I will ask the Clerk to read that telegram as an answer to what my colleague has said.

SPRINGFIELD, ILLINOIS, February 4, 1875.

Hon. JOHN B. HAWLEY:

I am requested to telegraph you the following resolutions passed this day by the Illinois Legislature:

"Whereas a bill is now pending in Congress providing for constructing a canal from the Illinois River, at Hennepin, to the Mississippi, at or above Rock Island: Therefore,

"Be it resolved by the senate, (the house concurring therein,) That our Senators in Congress be, and are hereby, instructed, and our Representatives be requested, to vote for and use their influence to procure the passage of said bill known as the Hennepin Canal bill.

"Resolved, That the governor is hereby requested to telegraph the same to Hon. JOHN B. HAWLEY Representative in Congress from the sixth district of this State."

JOHN L. BEVERIDGE.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Now, that telegram contains the resolutions passed by the Legislature of the State of Illinois upon the 4th instant. That Legislature was elected in November last, and must be considered as giving a fair expression of the will and wish of the people of the State of Illinois upon this subject. A year ago the State Legislature of Illinois sent a memorial to Congress, almost without a dissenting vote, as this resolution was passed, calling upon Congress to aid in the construction of this work.

The State Farmer's Association for the last three years, I believe, at each annual meeting fully indorsed this measure.

Then go to the State of Iowa on the west. That State last winter, through its Legislature, memorialized Congress in favor of this work. Petitions of thousands of citizens have been sent here; petitions and memorials have been sent here by many corporate bodies throughout the Northwest, and so far as I know to this day not a remonstrance has been sent here against this measure, nor has a man been found to stand in his place here and oppose this measure.

And because, forsooth, one county in the district of my colleague is opposed to this measure, because it is thought that the people of a town in my district or that the people of my district may be favored by this bill more than some of the people in my colleague's district, this bill is opposed by my colleague to-day. In one breath he tells you that it is an advantage to his district, and in the next he tells you it is against the interests of his district.

And finally, in winding up, he tells you as an apology for his opposition to this bill, that it will take too much water from Rock River. Will it not take as much water from Rock River if the canal goes to Dixon as if it went to Sterling? Every drop of water must come from Rock River in either case, and consequently every drop taken from the river must damage Dixon as much as Sterling, if it is a damage at all. I say that is too low a view to take of a great subject like this.

It is said by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS] that this is not a national work. My colleague [Mr. BURCHARD] says it is not such a work that Congress ought to do anything to help it; that it is located in the State of Illinois. My colleague [Mr. BURCHARD] says, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] says, why does not the State of Illinois do this work? I will furnish you the answer. There is a canal in that State from Lake Michigan, extending west, connecting with the Illinois River at La Salle, a distance of one hundred miles, upon which nearly $12,000,000 have been expended. The State of Illinois has expended upon it within the last five years, I believe, nearly or quite $3,000,000. That State does not receive one cent of profit from the canal. After the State has paid the cost of operating it, every additional dollar received goes for the improvement of the Illinois River, which is itself a navigable river, and for the improvement of which Congress has time and again made appropriations. But further, within the last four years the State of Illinois has not only taken all the net earnings of the canal, amounting to some $417,000, but has taken $400,000 additional out of the State treasury, and appropriated it to the improvement of the Illinois River, making $817,000 taken by the State and expended upon that river within the last four or five years.

Illinois is less interested in the continuance of this canal to the Mississippi River than the country west or north or even the east, for this canal is only for the distance of about sixty-five miles upon the western border of that State. The great body of that State lies south and north and east of this proposed work. There is but a small part of the State of Illinois comparatively to be directly affected by it. Why the eagerness of gentlemen on this floor from Iowa, from Minnesota, from Nebraska, and Kansas? Because to them it is deliverance; because for every State that borders upon the Upper Mississippi River and its tributaries it furnishes the only outlet to the East by water. If the State of Illinois is to do the work, she must charge tolls upon it to compensate her for her expenditure. The work is of a national character, and not local, and therefore should be constructed by the Government.

Now, I submit to the gentlemen of this House in all candor and sincerity, can it make any difference upon the question of the power of Congress over this subject whether this canal lies in a single State or whether it runs through several States? The question simply is, will the commerce of States pass through this canal? That is the question; and it is the only question so far as the point raised by the gentleman from Indiana is concerned. Is this a national work? Is it such a work that when completed other States will participate in its benefits? I shall endeavor, Mr. Speaker, to show that it is as important and as much a national work to construct this canal as it is to improve the great rivers and harbors of this country. What does it do? It connects for the first time the great chain of lakes of the North with the Upper Mississippi River. There is a great inland system of water communication which nature herself has placed in the heart of this country. What is lacking to complete this line? Simply that this canal shall be extended westward from the town of Hennepin to the Mississippi River. When that is done the waters of all the lakes of the North, the waters of the Illinois River, the waters of the Mississippi River and all its tributaries will be connected for the first time. Now, where is the gentleman who will rise in his place and tell me that this is not a national work, that it is a local work?

If this canal was completed, canal-boats would be loaded at different points on the Mississippi River, and would be towed to and through the canal to the lakes, and their freight reshipped on steam-barges, and sent East. The water way to the East would be complete.

Now, my colleague [Mr. BURCHARD] has sought to belittle the enterprise by saying that but little benefit would accrue from it to the Northwest or to the East or any portion of the country. Mr. Speaker, I shall endeavor to show the necessity to the whole Northwest of the construction of this work and the improvement of the Mississippi River. These two great works, one to the south and the other to the east, are not only in the interest of the Northwest but in the interest of the East and the South; and the day is not far distant, I may say to gentlemen of this House, when these two works will be accomplished. If you will not do these two things, the day is not far distant when others will come here who will execute them. Such is the demand of this country; the voice of the people is a unit upon this question, and they will be heard.

It is said that this work costs money. Certainly it does. It costs money every year to make an appropriation of five or six million dollars for our rivers and harbors. Yet we make that appropriation. We have not stopped simply because it costs money. The question is shall we spend enough to accomplish some new results. We have gone on digging the sand-bars for a mere temporary purpose. We must go to work now and make some improvement at the mouth of the Mississippi, either by the jettee system or by a canal that will enable sea-going vessels to come up to New Orleans. We must improve that great river so that we can go out and come in by way of it. We must open water communication East, which we have not done. The great body of our commerce is internal, not foreign. Why, sir, of all the grain raised in this country only about one-thirtieth part goes abroad. We of the Northwest raise the grain—the corn, the wheat, the rye, the barley, and the oats, and ship them to all parts of the country. The same is true with regard to pork, beef, and other meats. It is the interest of the South, it is the interest of the East, it is the interest of the whole country, that there shall be cheap transportation between you and us. We desire to have cheap transportation in every direction; and it will be profitable alike to you and to us. What advantage is it to you or to us that our section of the country is everywhere filled with plenty and to spare, if the prices of transportation are so great that we cannot sell and you cannot buy our surplus?

In our portion of the country there is greater demand for cheap transportation than anywhere else. Ours is not only the great producing section, but it is farther removed from market than any other section, and hence the greater reason why something should be done to enable the people of the Northwest to transport their products to the markets of the country. It is to our mutual advantage that we should interchange at the cheapest possible rates the products of the different sections.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I propose to indulge in some figures to show how my colleague misled the House in regard to the advantages of this proposed work. He stated to the House in his remarks that there would be but a few mills per bushel saved in transportation by the construction of this work to the Mississippi River. I hold in my hand the report of the Senate Select Committee on Transportation to the Sea-board. It will be conceded by every gentleman who has ever given it any attention to be the ablest production of the kind, the most comprehensive, the most complete and accurate ever presented to the country. It is the report of an able committee of the Senate of the United States which occupied I believe nearly a year in gathering the information upon which it is based. It has been everywhere approved, and is all that could be desired on the subject. Let me call attention to a few facts as to the cost of transportation from the East to the West and what is to be effected by this improvement. I read now from page 247 of that report:

From all points on the Mississippi River between Minneapolis, Minnesota, and Quincy, Illinois, the average railway rate to lake ports in 1872 was 17 cents per bushel of sixty pounds. From Chicago to New York, by rail, the average charge during that year was 33½ cents per bushel, and the average rate by water was 26½ cents per bushel, making the all-rail charges through from the Mississippi to New York 50½ cents, and the rail and water charges, exclusive of terminals, 43½ cents per bushel.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it will be apparent from subsequent figures and statements that the great burden upon the people of the Northwest is found in the fact that transportation is so high between the Lakes and the Mississippi River. It is true that to-day between the Lakes and the Mississippi River the charges for the transportation of freight are nearly as great as the charges from Chicago to the city of New York. I cannot better show what improvements have been made in the cost of transportation from Chicago to the East, and the advantages now derived by the country from new appliances upon the lakes and in canal navigation, than by having read two short extracts from the remarks of Mr. D. P. Dobbins, of Buffalo, made at the national cheap transportation convention held at Richmond early in December last.

The Clerk read as follows:

But a short time since our lake vessels were mostly small sail-vessels, carrying a cargo of from twenty to thirty thousand bushels of wheat or corn, and making the trip from Chicago to Buffalo in from eight to ten days. Now we have large steam-barges, carrying from fifty to eighty thousand bushels, and towing a consort barge or two, each carrying as much or more than the steamer, and making the trip in from four to five days. The rate of freight paid the former vessels was from ten to fifteen cents per bushel. The rate of the latter during the year 1874 averaged four and a half cents per bushel on wheat. Here we have a great increase in speed and a great reduction in the rate of freight, and all of this by the introduction of steam within the last three or four years.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. No w, Mr. Speaker, to show how transportation has been cheapened on the Erie Canal by the adoption of the Baxter steamers, as compared with mule or horse power in towing canal-boats, I ask the Clerk to read what Mr. Dobbins says upon that subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

These Baxter steamers have repeatedly made the trip from Buffalo to New York in less than six days, as against fourteen days usually consumed by the horse-boats, and have done it at the rate of ten cents per mile for steam-power, as against thirty-five cents per mile, the usual cost of towing a boat by horse or mule power, and that the rate of freight has been reduced from twelve and fifteen cents per bushel to eight and ten cents per bushel. Here is cheap and rapid transportation in actual operation, and now that steam has proved a success the Legislature will most assuredly reduce the tolls two or three cents on the bushel of wheat, will bottom out the canal to seven or eight feet of water, lop off the lateral, useless canals from the main trunk, and do away with the useless and costly weighlocks, and by so doing enable steamers to increase their speed with the same power, and transport wheat from Buffalo to New York at from five to six cents per bushel at a profit. We thus will bring New York within ten days of Chicago by water, and give you transportation at about ten cents per bushel on wheat.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. It will be observed that great improvement has been made in the last three years. Transportation is now only about 10 cents a bushel from Chicago to New York by water, whereas three years ago it was 26 cents by water and 33 cents by rail. Observe they carried last season from Chicago to New York for about 10 cents a bushel, while during the same time it cost to carry from the Mississippi River, an average distance of about two hundred miles, 17 cents a bushel. It is necessary that the same advantage should be enjoyed by the people of the Northwest which is now enjoyed by the people farther east. I call upon every gentleman to mark what a great change has taken place in this respect. See what a change there is in the cost of transportation between Chicago and New York, while from Chicago to the Mississippi River there is no perceptible change. If this work can be completed as is shown in the Senate report we can transport from the Mississippi River to New York by water at a cost not greater than 15 cents per bushel on wheat. That is to say, the price will not be more than five cents per bushel on wheat from the Mississippi River to Chicago, and not more than 10 cents from Chicago to New York.

Sir, is it not to the interest and advantage of the people of this country to accomplish such a result? Are we to be met by gentlemen on this floor who tell us that it costs money—gentlemen who sit here session after session, and join in appropriating millions of money to erect fine public buildings that will cost from five to seven millions of dollars each? It seems to me that when this question of economy or expense is to be discussed, it would be a better time and a better place to raise such an objection on some other subject than when the subject of internal improvements is presented to Congress. But, sir, it is upon such an occasion as this, and it has always been upon such occasions since I have been here, that the cry has come from the members of the Committee on Ways and Means and from other gentlemen that nothing can be appropriated from the public Treasury for such a purpose, because the Treasury cannot afford it.

Mr. Speaker, my colleague in his remarks, as I have already said, stated that the cost of transportation between Chicago and the Mississippi River would not be materially diminished if this canal were completed, and he sought to illustrate that statement by citing some figures to show, as he supposed, the comparative cost of transportation by the present canal and by the railroad; and he stated to the House that the canal now constructed for one hundred miles from Chicago to La Salle he did not believe carried as much as the railroad. I ask the Clerk to read from the Senate report, under the head of "Rock Island and Hennepin Canal," what I have marked on that subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

The general effect of the construction of the Hennepin Canal in reducing the cost of transportation from the Mississippi River and the territory west of that river may also be inferred from the actual result of transport on that part of this water line which has already been constructed from Chicago to La Salle. The Illinois and Michigan Canal competes with the Rock Island and Pacific Railroad for the transport of grain from La Salle to Chicago—one hundred miles.

The following statement gives the average rail-freight charges from this point to Chicago, and also from points on the railroads equally distant from Chicago to that city. This statement is computed from data furnished by Hon. Joseph Uley, president of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, which may be found on page 93 of the appendix.

Comparative charges for the transport of grain to Chicago by rail from points one hundred miles distant on five different railroads:

	Average charge.
Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific.....per 100 pounds.	8 cents.
Chicago, Burlington and Quincy.....do.	14 cents.
Chicago and Northwestern.....do.	18 cents.
Chicago and Alton.....do.	12 cents.
Illinois Central.....do.	16 cents.

The rate on the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad, which competes with the Illinois and Michigan Canal, appears to be only 53 per cent. of the average charge for the same distances on the other roads.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Now, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of calling the attention of the House more distinctly to this subject, I read from the memorial of the Rock Island convention held over a year ago, a convention at which more than one thousand delegates were present. In memorializing Congress upon this subject, and in referring to the business done on the canal already constructed one hundred miles from Chicago to La Salle, they use these words:

The tonnage to and from Chicago on this canal for the year 1873 was 688,929 tons. The cost of transporting this amount of freight on the canal was about $600,000.

The cost by rail at the ordinary rates west of Lake Michigan, away from water competition, would have been $1,722,323. This makes a saving to the people of more than $1,000,000 in one year by one little sectional canal.

It will be seen that the price of freight upon the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Road was only 53 per cent. of the prices upon the other four roads named. Now, I ask, why was that true? Simply because that railroad ran alongside the canal and the others did not compete with any water line.

Now, suppose the canal could be extended to the Mississippi River; the advantage which the people enjoyed along that line of canal at that time would be enjoyed by the great body of the people in the Northwest. We legislated upon the subject of transportation at the past session. We sought then by law to regulate the price of freight, or at least to provide a commission that should regulate the price of freight transported by railroad. We have been met by a series of objections at every step in the progress of that bill or any similar measure. Now, if this measure could be carried, it would not only be of great benefit in the way of cheap transportation, so far as everything which was carried over this canal was concerned, but gentlemen will observe that it comes in competition with every railroad that crosses the whole Northwest. And what is the tonnage of these roads? I read from the same memorial:

The commerce between Lake Michigan and the Upper Mississippi is already immense. The business of the Illinois and Michigan Canal for the year 1873 amounted to nearly seven hundred thousand tons.

That of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad for the year 1873 to nearly two million.

That of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad to nearly one million tons. That of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy to more than one million five hundred thousand tons.

The tonnage upon the three railroads and the canal was more than five million tons for the year 1873. There are other railway and water channels which share the business of the Northwest. The aggregate tonnage cannot have been less than seven million tons for the year 1873. What it will be ten or twenty years hence, in view of such facts and the capacity of this section of country for development, becomes a very important question.

The charges upon the railways west of Lake Michigan are about double the rates east of that lake, except when influenced by the canal.

The very best evidence of urgent demand for the extension of the Illinois and Michigan Canal to the Mississippi is furnished in the reports of the business and effect of that portion now in operation.

Mr. Speaker, I have shown you that the commerce of the Upper Mississippi Valley, carried almost exclusively heretofore to Chicago, by railroad amounted to nearly seven million tons annually. I have shown you that by the construction of this canal through that section of the country where this commerce passes the cost of transportation will be reduced one-half or two-thirds. There will be a reduction in the cost of transportation on all the railroads in that section.

Now, the question is raised whether the canal will do a large business. In answer to that I say you will find that it will furnish the means of competition with the railroads in that section of the country. What we want is competition. Between the railroads themselves there is no competition. There are three railroads from Chicago to Omaha; there is no competition. If you want to ship freight from Chicago to Omaha, it makes no difference to the railroads which road you ship on. They divide their earnings; but when you have improved your water-ways, which are the cheapest of all modes of transporting heavy freight, you will compel the railroads to reduce their rates; and this is the only way in which you can do it unless you compel them by law to reduce their rates. If you expect that the rates of transportation on railroads can be reduced by competition among themselves, you are mistaken; all the past history of the country shows that you will be disappointed.

Now, what is the necessity of this canal? There is the great north-western country, the development of which has but just begun. It is in its infancy. We cannot measure its future growth or guess what it will be in twenty or fifty years from now. It appears by the report of the Committee on Transportation of the Senate that the capacity of the canal would be 4,838,400 tons annually. The amount of business that may be done by it is more than could be done by one hundred trains of cars. You see the immense capacity of this canal. It may transport in a single year one and a half times as much grain as was ever received at Chicago in the same period.

But, Mr. Speaker, I come now to the question of cost, because that seems to trouble gentlemen. I should have no fear of this bill if it were not for that one question. I have confidence, however, that this House, in view of all the memorials that have come to it, in view of all the resolutions passed by State Legislatures and by corporate bodies in favor of this measure, in view of the platforms adopted by party conventions of all shades of opinion, and in view of its great importance, will see that even that objection is not sufficient to prevent the beginning of the work. My colleague [Mr. BURCHARD] told us that he thought the work would cost $20,000,000. How my colleague with a report of the engineer before him and the bill now pending before him can rise in his place and say as a member of this House that it may cost $20,000,000 is beyond my comprehension.

Mr. BURCHARD. Allow me to say that although the report made by the engineer on the 25th day of January limits the amount to $25,000,000, there is no limitation upon the expense in this bill. It does not say that the canal shall not exceed seventy feet in width or that it shall be less than that in width.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I do not stand corrected at all. My statement is correct. I do not care whether the amount estimated for some other canal is twenty or fifty million dollars. I have here before me the bill; it provides for the construction of this canal, a canal seventy feet wide, and I speak of it and the estimates for its construction.

Mr. BURCHARD. Not less than seventy feet wide.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Do you expect the Secretary of War will go beyond the limitation in the bill?

Mr. BURCHARD. What limitation?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Here is the estimate made in 1871, which tells the House that it will take less than $4,000,000. This estimate was made in 1871 when the price of materials and labor was higher than it is now. I am assured that responsible parties will give ample security to construct the canal as provided for in this bill for $3,500,000.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Certainly.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. Can you cite an instance in the history of similar enterprises, under the management of individuals or of the Government, where the estimates have not been doubled or nearly doubled in the execution of the work?

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I can, but I have not time to do it now.

It is proposed that this canal shall be constructed by the Government entirely, and that it shall not be more than seventy feet wide, with locks twenty-one feet wide and one hundred and fifty feet long. As to the question of expenditures exceeding estimates, I have to say that the expenditures for the improvement of the Rock Island Rapids only exceeded the estimates some $200,000, and that $200,000 was not really in excess of the estimates, but was for work afterward done and independent of the original estimates.

The expenditures for the improvement of the Des Moines Rapids, where some $3,000,000 have been expended, I believe, have not, as I am informed, exceeded the estimates a single dollar.

I remember very well that in passing by steamer up through the improvement of the Rock Island Rapids in company with General Wilson, one of the first engineers in the United States, I asked him why it was that he had exceeded the estimates in that improvement. He said that they had not exceeded the estimates one dollar, but that when they had completed the work, or nearly completed it, they found that some portions of the work which had been before completed were not quite good enough, and they thought a further expenditure advisable.

I have given the gentleman two cases where the estimates were not exceeded.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. This canal is about sixty-four miles long.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Yes, sir.

Mr. CHITTENDEN. No man who has ever had any experience in similar enterprises has failed to learn that in going sixty-four miles you will find obstacles that no engineer can perceive in advance.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I desire to show my good faith by the statement I am about to make. If this House is afraid of the question of cost, if it is afraid that the amount of estimates may be exceeded, I am perfectly willing that there shall be a provision put into this bill, in the most stringent terms, that the cost of this canal shall not exceed the estimates, and that if it cannot be constructed within the estimates, then the engineers may reduce the size of the canal to sixty feet.

Mr. BURCHARD. I want to say—

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I cannot yield any further now.

Mr. BURCHARD. The gentleman seems to impugn my motives to some extent, and I ask an opportunity to say a word.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. Very well.

Mr. BURCHARD. I want to refer to the report of the committee that accompanies this bill. In that report it is said:

It is now asked by the bill referred to us, by the memorials of the States of Iowa and Illinois, and the petitions of a very large number of citizens, to construct a canal from the Illinois River, at or near the city of Hennepin, to some point on the Mississippi River, and thus complete the system, embracing by this last-mentioned improvement the whole territory above Rock Island on the Upper Mississippi and its tributaries, as the main canal is proposed to do with that river and its tributaries below or near the mouth of the Illinois.

That proposition is to have locks three hundred and fifty feet long. There is nothing in this bill that limits it, but it says that they shall not be less than seventy feet in width.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I am amused by the remarks of my colleague [Mr. BURCHARD] in regard to this subject. I have just stated that he might insert a provision in this bill to limit these locks, as estimated by the engineer, to twenty-one feet wide and one hundred and fifty feet long; that is the estimate of the engineer, and the bill provides for locks of exactly that size. If the gentleman can put in the bill any language that can make it more certain and specific, I am willing that he shall do so. I will say further, there is the bill; any gentleman can read it, and I will leave him to say if it is not now entirely free in every particular for the engineers upon further survey to locate the canal where they please. If the English language can make it more plain than it is, I am willing that such words may be put in as will make it so.

I have before me the bill and survey. The bill follows the survey. My colleague [Mr. BURCHARD] is afraid that the termini of the canal are not left sufficiently transitory; that you cannot change them around enough. I say put in any words that are necessary in that respect. The bill now says that the canal is to be located upon the "surveys now made and hereafter to be made." I never supposed for a moment that, if this bill should pass, the surveys already made were to be a finality upon that subject. I had supposed that if Congress should make an appropriation for this work the engineers would need a more accurate survey of it. I should think they would neglect their duty if they failed to make it.

I say that this canal cannot cost more than $4,000,000; that it may be limited by law not to exceed that amount. These estimates were made at a time when labor and material were more expensive than they are now. Men are now ready to take a contract as the bill provides for $3,500,000. Then why should gentlemen rise in their places here; why should my colleague, [Mr. BURCHARD,] coming from my section of Illinois, rise in his place and endeavor to defeat a measure which every portion of the Northwest except the county of Whiteside demands?

I think my colleague has failed in his duty to-day. I cannot believe it is his duty to oppose this bill, or that he represents the people of his district—he, and not I, is responsible for that, when he stands here and opposes this measure by such arguments as he urges to-day, by seeking to show this House that this canal will cost $20,000,000, when I have demonstrated, if anything can be demonstrated, that it cannot cost $4,000,000. And I am willing to have it limited by law to that amount. I do not know any other statement I can make to answer the objection which gentlemen have made against this bill, or to show its feasibility, and how much it is needed by the Northwest, or to show what will be the cost of this work; I do not know what more I can say than I have said. But that I may answer finally, once for all, the objection which my colleague makes and which is his most serious one, the one upon which his opposition hinges, I call the attention of the House to the report of the engineer making this survey as to the amount of water that will be taken out of Rock River by this canal.

A great many gentlemen on this floor have been told publicly and privately that if this canal be constructed it will ruin the water-power of Rock River; that the river will then be worthless for navigation, for milling, or for any other purpose. Now, I read from the report, in which the engineer says:

We were fortunate in making a careful measurement of the amount of water flowing in the Rock River at a time, October 11, 1870, when, according to the residents of that city, the river was at its lowest known stage. The amount of water at that date was found to be 2,446 cubic feet per second, which, under the present available head of seven feet, gives theoretically 1,943 horse-power.

I turn to another portion of the report where the engineer speaks of the amount of water necessary for the purpose of operating this canal at its fullest capacity. He says:

The amount of water required for this canal is estimated as follows: For evaporation and leakage, 1.33 cubic feet per mile per second, or 130 cubic feet per second for canal and feeder; for 200 lockages in twenty-four hours, 87 cubic feet per second, making a total demand from Rock River at Dixon of 217 cubic feet per second.

Thus it will be seen that less than one-tenth of the water is to be taken from Rock River at its very lowest stage, for the engineer states that it was at its lowest stage when he made the survey; and not only that, but it will take less than one-tenth when the canal is operated to its fullest capacity. How often could that occur? It is not probable that in the history of this work, if it should be completed, it would ever occur that the river would be so low and the canal at the same time be operated to its fullest capacity. I regard this objection therefore as simply trivial, as entirely frivolous.

I do not think my colleague is justified in seeking to defeat this measure upon the ground that some of the people of Whiteside County may be injured by this work. I have the highest respect for the people of Whiteside County; I have the highest respect also for the people of the city of Sterling. I would do nothing to interfere with their rights. But I cannot think that their rights are to be injured by this measure; nor do I believe that such an argument ought to be presented to this House as a reason why this bill should not pass.

I believe this to be a measure of great merit. It is demanded by the people, if anything was ever demanded. Of all public works that have been presented to Congress, I know of no measure that promises so great results for so small an expenditure of money. Sir, there can be no "job" in this; it is no subsidy. No private corporation is to be created or benefited by it. Nobody is to be benefited but the people. The work is to be executed by the Government itself, to be carried out under the direction of the War Department; and if in this country there be honest men, if our history gives any guarantee for the honesty of anybody, it certainly goes to prove that among our Army officers there is honesty and integrity. No body of men in all the world have ever shown a better record than they. Do gentlemen mean to say that they are afraid to trust the Engineer Corps or the War Department in the expenditure of this money?

It is very unfair, I submit, for gentlemen to talk here about the "Pacific Mail" and the "Credit Mobilier" and the Union Pacific Railroad and the Central Pacific Railroad. Sir, these have nothing to do with the question, and they are introduced, I must believe, simply to prejudice this bill and prevent its passage. I hope the bill will pass; I am sure it ought to pass. I am sure this House will not do its duty if it fails to pass the bill as it is now presented.

If I have any time remaining I yield it to the gentleman from Tennessee, [Mr. MAYNARD.]

Mr. MAYNARD. Mr. Speaker, I sought the floor in the first place for the purpose of presenting a single question; but after listening to some gentlemen around me one or two other ideas have suggested themselves in connection with this bill. My excellent and distinguished friend, [Mr. DAWES,] the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, reiterates an argument which we have often heard here, that we have no money for a work like this. I am sorry to see a gentleman occupying his position in this House take that ground upon any question. The people of the United States have money for anything necessary for them to do; they have no money for anything that is unnecessary to be done. In our experience since he and I have been members of this House we have seen the people of the country rally with marvelous spirit and purpose, and submit to taxation far beyond anything that the most sanguine in the early days of our history would ever have dreamed. The question, then, it seems to me, is whether this contemplated work be necessary, using the word "necessary" as it is always used and understood by statesmen.

This bill is opposed here on the ground that it looks to a system of internal improvements by the General Government, and such a system gentlemen object to. I confess, Mr. Speaker, that I should have listened more patiently, probably more respectfully, to objections coming from almost anywhere else than from the two populous, powerful, and wealthy States of New York and Pennsylvania. Those two prominent members of the sisterhood of States have their systems of internal improvements completed to their satisfaction.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Not by the National Government.

Mr. MAYNARD. "Not by the National Government," says the gentleman from New York—precisely the response that I anticipated and was waiting to give him an opportunity to make. "Not by the National Government." Very true, sir; but what have those States done? They have from their own resources, by their credit and other means, constructed their system of public works, and then taxed the people of the United States to pay for them. In looking over the report of the Board of Trade of the city of New York for the last year, I discover that New York's system of canals has been fully paid for by the profits derived from her tolls. How were those profits made? From the transportation of the grain and produce of the West.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Has not the Erie Canal tended to reduce the cost of transportation? Is not that one of the arguments here to-day—that the State of New York by its internal improvements has reduced the cost of transportation from the West?

Mr. MAYNARD. Undoubtedly.

Mr. HOSKINS. Is not that canal the only check upon excessive charges by the railroads?

Mr. MAYNARD. Undoubtedly; but I ask gentlemen to hear me. The State of Pennsylvania, if I mistake not, imposes no direct taxation upon the property of her people, but supports her government altogether from the income derived from her transportation companies and perhaps some others. Now, I venture to say (if I am not mistaken in my estimate of the character of this contemplated improvement) that if the State of Illinois should build this canal from her own treasury, and for the next twenty years hold it as the State of New York has held her public works, taxing all the trade from the West, including Iowa, a portion of Missouri, Kansas, and Nebraska, she would then own the canal, and could thenceforward impose just such tax as she might please for the support of the government of her State. My object in the construction of these works by the National Government would be that Illinois should not have it in her power to do that; so that she could not by her legislative voice impose such taxation as she might please upon the trade that would be obliged, commercially obliged, to pass through this canal. If those great works of the State of New York were owned by the General Government instead of the State, so that we could reduce the tolls so as to cover merely the expense of operating those works and keeping them in order, then, if I am not altogether misadvised, the commerce of the West would be in a better condition even than it is now; and I admit that its present condition is infinitely better than it would be if those works had not been constructed.

Mr. MAYNARD. I hope I may be permitted to say a single word further.

Several MEMBERS. Go on.

Mr. MAYNARD. The purpose for which I rose was to call the attention of the gentlemen having charge of the bill to a communication which I found in a Chicago paper of the other day—a very well written and well-considered article—touching the practicability and the expediency of this particular work. The Chicago Inter-Ocean of the 1st of February contains the following, which I incorporate as a part of my remarks:

CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, January 30, 1875.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE INTER-OCEAN:

As articles have lately appeared in the columns of your paper in advocacy of the Hennepin Canal scheme, I desire to present to your readers a few reasons why that work should not be undertaken unless careful surveys prove that it can be supplied with sufficient water without taking a supply from Rock River at Dixon or any other point above the lowest water-power upon that beautiful stream. In the outset I tender the Inter-Ocean my hearty and sincere thanks for its able advocacy of the general system of improving our rivers and harbors by the General Government, believing as I do that if our Government expended $50,000,000 a year upon such works the nation would be greatly enriched thereby.

The investigation which I have given this subject has satisfied me that if Rock River is tapped at Dixon to feed the proposed canal, it will immediately greatly lessen the value of the water-powers below that point, and in time almost destroy them, except in the winter season.

If Rock River took its rise within a vast range of primeval forest, and many years would elapse before the woodman's ax should make much impression upon it, there would be much less danger to be apprehended by serious injury resulting to the water-powers on that stream by the construction of the proposed canal; but unfortunately it does not, as the forests about its head-waters are of very moderate extent and melting away like dew before the sun, and the area drained by it being brought under higher cultivation each succeeding year.

The experience of every country proves that as lands are denuded of forests and brought under careful cultivation the freshets in streams become more violent, waters flowing from the well-drained lands much more quickly, and the volume available for use as power lessening each succeeding year. For several years past, for two months or more in summer, every quart of water at Sterling has passed through the canals, and made to do duty in propelling her machinery before it went further, and the supply insufficient to carry all the works, so that many of her manufacturers in order to turn out full work have been obliged to employ extra hands and run nights. Lyndon, some fifteen miles below, has only lately completed a costly dam, and if undisturbed in her power will in a few years gather thousands of the most thrifty and enterprising people about it, and a beautiful city of happy homes will arise.

If the power should be undisturbed, I venture to say that within two years from the date of a return of prosperity to our county some of the manufacturers at Sterling will be obliged to supplement their power by adding steam. Go up and down the New England valleys to-day, and what do you find? Nothing less than thousands of steam-engines supplementing the declining water-powers, and the number being increased every year. Waterbury, Connecticut, is the seat of the manufacture of brass goods of the country, and some of the establishments are very large. In the rolling-mills it has repeatedly happened in the dry season that the water-wheel would cease to move at a critical moment when large plates were passing through rolls, and the costly train of rolls would be snapped like pipe-stems.

It is simply a question of time when every manufacturer at Sterling, Rock Falls, and every other power below upon that stream will be obliged to supplement their power by steam. But the water-powers they have bought and paid for, and if the present Congress votes for a measure that shall despoil them of their property, future Congresses will be compelled to vote large sums to compensate them, in part at least, for such spoliation, and by the time the accounts are settled the people will find the Hennepin Canal one of the most costly ever built.

Every person who has ever given these questions any investigation knows that a stream or canal passing through a sandy region of country loses water by evaporation with amazing rapidity. That Dixon feeder, if constructed, will pass for miles through a sandy section of country, and the drain upon Rock River by the rapid evaporation of water would be great. Look at the streams that flow from the western slope of the Humboldt range of mountains and run through a sandy region to the valleys below, some of them that in spring while the melting of the snow is going on run a long distance, in mid or late summer scarcely run ten miles.

Sterling and her twin sister across the river, Rock Falls, last year turned out manufactured goods and wares exceeding $4,000,000 in value, and many thousand dollars' worth of raw materials for her manufactures are purchased in Chicago; and when converted into finished products, many thousands of dollars' worth are returned here for sale and distribution, and that on a rapidly increasing scale. Some of the merchants of Sterling do a very heavy business, and the aggregate of merchandise we send there and Rock Falls counts by hundreds of thousands. The Williams & Orton Machine Works have a warehouse of their own on Canal street for the sale of machinery, and doing a most prosperous business. Several of our largest school-houses have been filled with the superior furniture and seats made by the Sterling School Furniture Company, and it is only a few weeks since they furnished a large school-house in Fall River, Massachusetts, and their business now extends from Maine to California. Sterling, Rock Falls, Lyndon, and other points below upon Rock River, if their water-power is undisturbed, will continue a perennial source of prosperity to Chicago, and let our members of Congress beware how they vote to dry up these important sources of revenue to our community and at the same time prepare to levy a tax upon all our citizens to compensate those communities for the spoliation of their property.

Let our members labor in season and out of season to secure an appropriation to carry forward the improvement of the Illinois River, and hasten its completion, and the Wisconsin improvement also. These two grand improvements when completed will act as great regulators and balance-wheels, and our railroads will then be compelled to lower freights for all time; and when completed, it will probably be found that the Hennepin Canal will not be needed, but if it is, and it can be supplied with water from sources so as in no way to interfere with the water-powers on Rock River, no one will be more gratified to see it built than myself.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. Will the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MAYNARD] allow me to have printed in the same connection an article from the Chicago Tribune about the same thing?

Mr. MAYNARD. I have no objection to the gentleman printing any number of articles he pleases. This article, however, is in the line of the argument of the gentleman from Illinois. If the writer of the article is not mistaken, it presents, I submit to my friend from Illinois, a very serious question; whether whatever we may think of the general system of internal improvement, whatever we may think of communications between the lakes and the Mississippi River, this expenditure, be it three and a half million dollars or twenty million dollars, is expedient and wise; and it was for the purpose of directing his attention to that and to an argument coming from his own locality that I sought the floor.

Mr. GUNCKEL, Mr. HAWLEY of Illinois, and Mr. WILLARD of Vermont, rose.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. WOODWORTH.) The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] is recognized.

Mr. HAWLEY, of Illinois. I sought the floor to say a single word in reply to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I believe I have the floor. I move that this bill do lie on the table.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I hope that motion will not be pressed now. I rose to obtain the floor and to yield for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I think we have consumed time enough upon this bill.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I think, many gentlemen having gone away, we should not vote to-night.

Mr. McCRARY. I understood that some gentleman in favor of this bill was prepared to make the motion to adjourn. A good many gentlemen have left with the idea that there would be no vote to-night. I desire now to make that motion.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Mr. Speaker, I rose immediately upon the conclusion of the remarks of the gentleman from Tennessee, understanding that I was to be recognized next, and addressed the Chair. So I suppose I am entitled to the floor; and if so, I yield for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. McCRARY. I move that the House adjourn.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I believe I was recognized. I will yield for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. HURLBUT. I desire to say as a matter of good faith that I promised a good many gentlemen that the bill would not be brought to a vote to-night.

Mr. MCCRARY. I appeal to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GUNCKEL,] if he has the floor, to withdraw his motion for the present. Mr. GUNCKEL. I yield for a motion to adjourn.

Mr. MCCRARY. Then I move that the House adjourn.

BUSINESS OF COMMITTEE ON PATENTS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. According to the order of the Senate, the Committee on Patents have the residue of the morning hour.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. I ask permission to sit while I am presenting the business of the Committee on Patents.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, the Senator will retain his seat.

JOHN HAZELTINE.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. I call up the bill (S. No. 620) authorizing the extension of the patent granted to John Hazeltine for a new and useful water-wheel. I ask to substitute for that House bill No. 4335, which is precisely the same.

The bill (H. R. No. 4335) authorizing John Hazeltine to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of his patent for a new and useful water-wheel was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Commissioner of Patents, upon due application made to him therefor, and upon the same evidence and rules of law as in ordinary extension cases, is by the bill authorized to extend the patent of John Hazeltine for a new and useful water-wheel, issued to him March 25, 1856, for the further term of seven years from and after the passage of the act. The patent so extended is to have the same effect in law as if originally granted for the term for which it shall be so extended; but no person shall be liable for infringing such extended patent by reason of any manufacture, use, or sale subsequent to the 25th day of March, 1870, and prior to the passage of the act.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. I wish to state that the bill is merely to enable Hazeltine to make his application to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension, he having by a mistake failed in presenting his application at the expiration of the first term of his patent to the Commissioner in time, so that there were not ninety days left in which to give the requisite notice. The committee find that it was without any laches on the part of Hazeltine, and it is one of those cases in which by the practice of the committee we have always given the relief which is proposed to be granted by this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senate bill No. 620 will be postponed indefinitely, if there be no objection, so as to get it off the Calendar.

ANN JENNETTE HATHAWAY.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. The next bill I call up is Senate bill No. 544, relative to the case of Hathaway. In that case also the House bill has been placed in my hands with the request to have it substituted for the Senate bill.

The bill (H. R. No. 1317) to enable Ann Jennette Hathaway, executrix of the last will and testament of Joshua Hathaway, deceased, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of letters-patent for improved device for converting reciprocating into rotary motion was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill (S. No. 544) to enable Ann Jennette Hathaway, executrix of the last will and testament of Joshua Hathaway, deceased, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of letters-patent for improved device for converting reciprocating into rotary motion will be considered as indefinitely postponed, so as to get it off the Calendar.

REYNOLDS'S PATENTED BRAKE.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. I call up next Senate bill No. 537. The bill (S. No. 537) for the extension of the patent known as Reynolds's patented brake for power-looms, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It grants to Henry S. Van De Carr and Elsie M. Reynolds, administrators of the estate of Rensselaer Reynolds, deceased, and Gordon B. Reynolds, all of Stockport, Columbia County, New York, leave to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of the letters-patent granted to Rensselaer Reynolds and Gordon B. Reynolds for improvements in brakes for power-looms, under date of June 21, 1859, for the term of seven years from and after the expiration of the original term of fourteen years for which the letters-patent were granted; the application to be made in the same manner and have the same effect as if the same had been filed not less than ninety days before the expiration of the original term of the patent; and upon such application so filed, the Commissioner of Patents is to consider and determine the same in the same manner, upon giving the same notice, and with the same effect as if the application had been duly filed within the time prescribed by law, and as if the original term of the patent had not expired. No person is to be held liable for the infringement of the patent, if extended, for making use of such invention since the expiration of the original term and prior to the date of the extension.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

JOHN W. MARSH.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. I ask for the consideration of House bill No. 3170.

The bill (H. R. No. 3170) for the relief of John W. Marsh was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Commissioner of Patents, upon due application made to him, is by the bill authorized to extend the patent of John W. Marsh, of Oxford, Massachusetts, for a trimming attachment to sewing-machines, issued to him October 27, 1857, and reissued on the 6th day of September, 1859, and numbered in the reissue 809, for the period of seven years from the passage of the act, upon the same evidence and principle as if application had been made to him by the patentee in due time prior to the expiration of the patent; but no person or corporation is to be held liable for the infringement of the patent, if extended, for having made use of the invention therein patented since the expiration of the original time of the patent and prior to the date of the extension; and the extension, if granted, is not to impair in any manner the rights acquired by contract with the patentee prior to the extension, of any person or corporation, to use the invention.

Mr. SCOTT. I notice that the bill is for the extension of a sewing-machine patent. I should like to hear the report, if there is one in the case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The report will be read.

Mr. DAVIS. I understand it to be a shaving-machine.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. A trimming-machine. The Chief Clerk read the following report submitted by Mr. WADLEIGH on the 6th of January:

The Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3170) for the relief of John W. Marsh, having had the same under consideration, report:

This bill authorizes the Commissioner of Patents to extend, for the period of seven years from its passage, the patent of John W. Marsh, for a trimming-attachment to sewing-machines, issued to him October 27, 1857, and reissued September 6, 1859. It also provides that no person or corporation shall be held liable for the infringement of said patent, if extended, for having used the invention after the expiration of the patent and prior to its extension, and validates the contracts made by the patentee for the use of said invention.

The invention forms no part of the sewing-machine itself, but consists of a knife which may be attached to the machine and operated in connection with the needle. It is not adapted for use on the ordinary family sewing-machines, but only on the heavy machines for manufacturing certain kinds of ladies' and misses' boots and shoes. That its use cheapens the cost of manufacturing such goods is shown by the affidavits of leading manufacturers. The applicant is a mechanic in humble circumstances, with a family dependent upon his daily labor for support. His poverty and obscurity, with the discouraging opposition which he encountered, prevented his making application for an extension of the patent within the time limited by law. Your committee believe that he used all the means in his power to put his invention before the public and render it profitable, but that he has never realized any substantial benefit from it. No opposition has been made to the bill so far as your committee know, and the evidence shows that the applicant has made no assignment of the invention.

Under these circumstances your committee recommend the passage of the bill without amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. That brings up a class of extensions to which I think there is quite general opposition. I understand that this patent, while it is said to be no part of the sewing-machine, is yet an attachment to the sewing-machine; and thus by the successive renewals of the improvements which have been made to sewing-machines, the original patent having expired, the proprietors are enabled to keep up the monopoly and keep up the price of sewing-machines. I do not exactly understand why, if this invention was of importance enough to make it desirable to the boot and shoe trade, it was not profitable to the inventor during a period of some sixteen or seventeen years which it has run. If it was profitable, then the patent ought not to be extended. If it is not profitable, then it does not deserve an extension, for it is not very useful. I should like to have some explanation before I consent to the extension of a patent for anything connected with a sewing-machine.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. Mr. President, the Senator from Pennsylvania is under a misapprehension, I perceive, as to the character of the bill. All patentees at the expiration of the first term of their patent, which is for fourteen years under the law applicable to this particular patent, are entitled to make an application to the Commissioner of Patents for a seven years' extension. This patentee, through mistake, did not make that application in time to allow ninety days, which the law requires for notice to be given so as to have the Commissioner have jurisdiction. The bill permits him, notwithstanding his failure to present his application so as to give the requisite ninety days of time, to make it now, and then the Commissioner proceeds under the ordinary rules. So much for the character of the bill. It is not an extension in any shape.

In the next place, as is said in the report, this little invention is a knife, a cutting implement which can be attached to the sewing-machine in the manufacture of boots and shoes. It is good for nothing else. Like most other improvements, it failed during the first term to bring any remuneration to the inventor; and even if it had brought remuneration to the inventor during the first term, he had under the statute the right to go to the Commissioner and make an application and let the Commissioner decide upon that question. We decide nothing about it; we simply say, "For this mistake into which you have fallen with regard to the length of time in which you should make your application to the Commissioner you have been guilty of no negligence, no fault, and we allow you to go and make your application, and we give the Commissioner jurisdiction." That is all the bill does. The only misfortune in the case is the prejudice attaching to anything connected with the sewing-machine.

Mr. SCOTT. I did not misapprehend it. I understood that this was a bill granting to this party a right which he has lost by the failure to make the application which the law permitted him to make. There may be circumstances which would account for the failure; but if it be a valuable invention, certainly the attention of the proprietor would have been directed to the importance of renewing his patent within the time allowed him by law. It seems he had not his attention directed to it; he permitted the time to go by; and we are now simply relieving him from the consequences of his own negligence, for the purpose of perpetuating another of these patents which are attached to sewing-machines. It is just as important to relieve the boot and shoe business from the monopoly of this invention as it is to relieve the homes of the country from the monopoly for the other improvements which have been made on sewing-machines.

I simply wished to arrest the attention of the Senate a moment to the fact that they are making another extension, or permitting application to be made for another extension of one of the monopolies on sewing-machines. I shall vote against it myself.

Mr. WADLEIGH. Mr. President, this is not an attachment to a sewing-machine in any such sense as the Senator from Pennsylvania has intimated to the Senate.

Mr. SCOTT. Then I will ask, is it of any use unless it is attached to a sewing-machine?

Mr. WADLEIGH. It is of no use unless it is attached to a sewing-machine, because it is only used with certain sewing-machines for certain kinds of work in making boots and shoes. It is good for nothing else. It can be used with sewing-machines or can be used without. It can be attached or not attached. It is not a part of the sewing-machine at all. This is a case where a poor man made the invention; on account of his poverty he was unable to procure any remuneration. He is justly entitled to it; and I think in conscience, in good faith to him as an inventor the Senate should pass the bill. There was no opposition to this bill from any quarter. Quite a number of leading manufacturers testified that the invention was a valuable one. It is a case such as often occurs, where a poor inventor has been unable to procure any remuneration for his valuable invention, and in this case his poverty was one of the reasons why he did not make the application in season.

Mr. HAGER. How long has the patent run?

Mr. WADLEIGH. Only fourteen years.

Mr. WRIGHT. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire, who has the bill in charge, a question. He says there was a failure to apply within the ninety days, and he now asks to be relieved from the difficulty arising from the failure to apply within that time. Why did he not apply?

Mr. WADLEIGH. The main reason why he did not apply was on account of his poverty and his inability to comply with the law by furnishing the necessary funds. It is a case of extreme poverty where a poor man should be entitled to an extension.

Mr. WRIGHT. How long since that time has expired?

Mr. WADLEIGH. I do not recollect the time, but the report will show.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. A very short time. All these cases are short.

Mr. CAMERON. I trust we shall not grant this request. It is only another means of extending the patents for sewing-machines. If this thing is so valuable as the Senator from New Hampshire says it is to this very poor man, why cannot the rich owners of the patent-right for sewing-machines pay him for his invention? They cannot use it without his permission, and if they will pay him a fair price for it, it will become a part of their property; but on the other hand, if you give him a patent-right now for that, it makes the monopoly of the original machine live as long as this patent-right, if it is reissued, lives. In other words, those people who have had fourteen years exclusive right to the use of their machine, will, by patenting this little knife as it is called, get it for twenty-eight years—fourteen years more.

It is time the Senate and Congress should stop this system of giving patents for portions of this machine which operate so strongly against the interests of the poor. Sewing-machines are used almost entirely in the houses of the poor, generally in the houses of the very poor, and they cost from seventy to eighty dollars and sometimes more for a single machine. You can buy a sewing-machine for twenty dollars in England. They can be made in this country without the ornaments which they often have upon them for fifteen dollars. Immense fortunes have been made already, and it is time the public should have the benefit of this machine for which the public has already paid so much money. I shall never vote, as long as I am here, for any bill which goes to give any further life to a patent-right connected with sewing-machines.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I think there is a misapprehension about this attachment applying to the ordinary sewing-machine. It does not, so far as I am informed, apply to anything except the machines that are used for making shoes and boots; and it has so much of merit that I understand the manufacturers of leather make no protest whatever against this poor man's having this extension of his patent.

Mr. CRAGIN. This attachment does not apply to the general manufacture of boots and shoes, but only to those ladies' shoes which are foxed or have enameled leather put on over cloth and stitched with white stitches, and this follows right around the needle and trims the leather, instead of doing it by hand. It is good for nothing else. It applies to no sewing-machine for any other purpose whatever. It is just simply for manufacturing a certain class of ladies' shoes that it is necessary to trim around the stitches in scalloped form.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask for the yeas and nays on ordering the bill to a third reading.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. If I understand the chairman who has reported this bill, the right which is proposed to be given to the inventor of this knife gives no right whatever to the sewing-machines.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. Not the least. It is just what the Senator from New Hampshire said.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. It is simply an attachment. If the right of any owner of a sewing-machine is affected, I cannot see it. If an owner of a machine uses this attachment, the right to it is a privilege the owner may exercise in ordinary circumstances. It gives him no additional right. I do not understand this to be giving additional life to any sewing-machine patents now in existence. I shall therefore vote for the bill.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I think there is a misunderstanding about this bill. It is not about sewing-machines. This is a clipping-machine. I voted against the sewing-machine patents last year.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 14, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Clayton, Cooper, Cragin, Edmunds, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Goldthwaite, Hamilton of Maryland, Hitchcock, Howe, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Sargent, and Wadleigh—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Boggs, Boreman, Cameron, Chandler, Davis, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, Ingalls, Kelly, McCreery, Merriam, Mitchell, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Scott, Sprague, Thurman, Tipton, West, and Wright—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Boutwell, Brownlow, Carpenter, Conkling, Conover, Dennis, Dorsey, Fenton, Gordon, Hamlin, Harvey, Johnston, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Oglesby, Pease, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Schurz, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Washburn, and Windom—33.

So the bill was rejected.

Mr. PRATT subsequently moved a reconsideration of the vote by which the Senate refused to order the bill to a third reading; and the motion to reconsider was entered.

THOMAS AND WILLIAM L. WINANS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning hour having expired it becomes the duty of the Chair to call up the unfinished business.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. I ask for half an hour longer. I think in half an hour we can finish three or four more bills from the Committee on Patents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Connecticut? The Chair hears none, and the Committee on Patents will have an additional half-hour.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. I call up House bill No. 3424.

The bill (H. R. No. 3424) for the relief of Thomas Winans and William L. Winans was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the parties named to renew, at any time within six months from the date of the passage of the act, an application heretofore made by them on or about the 7th day of May, in the year 1866, for letters-patent of the United States for certain improvements in the construction of steam-vessels, and the Commissioner of Patents is authorized to hear, examine, and decide upon such renewed application as though the same had been made within the time now prescribed by law.

Mr. CAMERON. I wish to know whether there is any report in connection with that case.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following report, submitted by Mr. JOHNSTON on the 19th of June, 1874:

The Senate Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3424), adopt the following report by the Committee on Patents of the House of Representatives:

"To the House of Representatives:

"Your committee, to whom was referred the petition of Thomas and William L. Winans, asking that the Commissioner of Patents may be authorized to hear and act upon an application for letters-patent which was made on or about the 7th of May, 1866, and rejected on the 11th of August of the same year, for an improvement which the applicants believed they had made in the construction of steam-vessels, report as follows:

"It appears that on the 26th of October, 1858, Thomas Winans, one of the petitioners, and Ross Winans, obtained letters-patent for an improvement in the construction of the hulls of steam-vessels, the longitudinal sections of which were all arcs of, and the cross-sections of which were all true, circles. The vessel, the form of which was thus patented, is popularly known as the "cigar-steamer." The patentees, Ross and Thomas Winans, seem to have commenced actual experiments to test the value of this novel form of construction by building a vessel of upward of two hundred and fifty tons burden in Baltimore, not long after they had obtained this patent, and with this, trials, involving alterations in the length and outline of the hull, and in other respects, were made up to the breaking out of the rebellion, which put a stop to them in this country, and obliged them to continue them in England, where a large experimental vessel was built; another, also experimental, in France; and a third in Russia, also for experiment; making in all four vessels, whose only value consisted in the facility they afford for testing the merits of this most original principle of construction. The novelty of the idea, the change of all preconceived notions that it involves, made it necessary that the patentees should be at the expense of all experiments that were made, and, indeed, of every outlay connected with the invention. This outlay, thus borne by the patentees, amounted in October last to upward of $1,200,000, and has resulted in demonstrating, to the satisfaction, at all events, of the patentees, the success of this idea so far that they are said to be about commencing the construction at an early day, at their own cost, of two ocean-steamers for transit between Europe and the United States. The facts here stated are taken from copies of the testimony laid before the Commissioner of Patents, when, on the 26th of October, 1872, he extended the letters-patent here referred to.

"While these experiments were in progress, and before any definite conclusion had been reached by the patentees, Thomas Winans and his brother, the petitioner, William L. Winans, invented an improvement upon the invention so as aforesaid patented by Ross and Thomas Winans, looking to the best mode of constructing the decks of the spindle-shaped vessel. This was in the year 1866, when Thomas and William L. Winans, the latter being then interested in the original patent, were busily engaged with their English vessel near London. For this improvement the application was renewed for letters-patent, already mentioned, in 1872, when the petitioners were advised of said rejection; besides, being absent from the United States and engrossed in the experiments referred to, they were by no means confident that they would be able to surmount the difficulties and discouragements they met with, and, unless they did overcome them, there would be no occasion for any such improvement as the invention contemplated; unless the vessel were a success the deck must necessarily be valueless, existing only in the description of a specification to letters-patent.

"At this time, August, 1866, there was no limitation as to the time within which a rejected application for letters-patent might be renewed, and the applicants seem to have thought it unnecessary to press said application until the success of the steamer itself was more assured. At last, when this ceased to be longer doubtful, they renewed, within a few months past, their application, only to find that in the mean time the act of 1870 had been passed relating to patents, the thirty-fifth section of which provided that when an application has been rejected or withdrawn prior to the passage of the act, the applicant shall have six months from the date of such passage to renew his application or to file a new one.

"Looking to all the circumstances here stated, the committee had thought it not more than proper that the petitioners should be permitted to go again before the Commissioner of Patents and prosecute their application as though they had done so within the time limited by the act of 1870. Looking to the extraordinary expense incurred by Ross and Thomas Winans, with whom the committee have been informed William L. Winans is identified in this matter, it seems no more than reasonable that if an invention peculiar to the hull of the vessel has been made by two of the parties, an omission to conform to a change in the law of which they were ignorant should not deprive them of an opportunity of making good their claim to originality, should it be in their power to do so."

The committee therefore recommend the passage of the accompanying bill.

Mr. CAMERON. I know something about this matter, and I can see no objection to the bill. I know Mr. William L. Winans very well. He is a man of great enterprise and great fortune, and he is spending his fortune in making what he believes to be improvements in the hulls of steam-vessels. There is nothing here that can interfere with the interest of anybody, and a great deal that may be a public blessing if he succeeds.

Mr. William L. Winans was one of the first men I met in Europe after the beginning of our war who invested his money in our funds. In May, 1862, he took $500,000 of our bonds, and paid for them par in gold. He did so only because he had a great desire that the Republic should be sustained in its unity.

As to this machine of his, I have heard of it for several years, and I know that he has been paying great attention to the subject for the last eight or ten years. These gentlemen believe they can invent such a vessel as will enable them to go from Baltimore to Liverpool in from five to six days, or perhaps in less time. Certainly this extension can do no harm to anybody.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDUCTION-APPARATUS AND CIRCUIT-BREAKERS.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. I ask for the consideration of Senate bill No. 1149.

The bill (S. No. 1149) declaring the meaning of an act approved March 9, 1868, relative to a patent for induction-apparatus and circuit-breakers, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It declares that the act approved March 9, 1868, authorizing the issue of a patent for "induction-apparatus and circuit breakers" shall not be construed as authorizing the issue of a patent for any invention applicable to telegraphic apparatus; and any issue under color of that act of letters-patent for any such invention applicable to telegraphic apparatus is declared to be null and void, as contrary to the meaning and intention of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. CONKLING subsequently said: A few moments ago a bill passed on the report of the Committee on Patents which I supposed to be in charge of another committee of the Senate, and as to which I wanted to be heard. It is Senate bill No. 1149, proposing to construe the rights involved in certain judicial questions which may have arisen under an act passed in 1868. The bill is entitled "An act declaring the meaning of an act approved March 9, 1868, relative to a patent for induction-apparatus and circuit-breakers." I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill passed. I presume the Senator from Connecticut will not object to it, as I was misled, believing it was before another committee and not having my attention directed to it.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. O, no; I make no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. The bill now takes its place on the Calendar, I suppose, without my moving to reconsider the vote by which it was read the third time. I ask that it resume its place on the Calendar. I suppose the Senator from Connecticut would not like to have me exhaust the residue of his time, which has nearly expired now. Whenever it is to be considered, I want to be heard in regard to it.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. I should like to get that bill out of the way. I have no feeling at all in regard to it, but I have a perfect knowledge of the facts. Still it may go on the Calendar, if the Senator desires.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will take its place on the Calendar.

LUTHER HALL.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. I now call up Senate bill No. 993.

The bill (S. No. 993) for the relief of Luther Hall was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that the Commissioner of Patents, upon due application made to him therefor, and upon the same evidence and rules of law as in ordinary extension cases, may extend the patent granted to Luther Hall and S. S. Hemenway September 28, 1859, and numbered 25605, for a machine for shaping heels of boots and shoes, for the term of seven years from and after the passage of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT. I ask the Senator from New Hampshire who reported this bill and has it in charge to state to us some reasons why it should be passed.

Mr. WADLEIGH. In this case the patentee, as the evidence showed, has not received a sufficient remuneration for his invention. It was put into the hands of a corporation called the McCay Manufacturing Company or something of that kind, who used it and whom he was compelled to allow to use it, but the amount paid by them was not sufficient remuneration. In fact he has received nothing for his invention beyond his expenses. He made an agreement in writing with this company by which they were to apply to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of that patent. Either from design or mistake they did not make that application; and immediately upon his learning that they had not performed that contract he applied to Congress for leave to make the application which they had agreed to make, but which for the purpose of defrauding him, or for some other purpose, they did not make.

Mr. WRIGHT. I would like to have one further explanation, and that is, how long was it after this patent expired before the patentee found out that the company had not made the application? When did the time expire?

Mr. WADLEIGH. Immediately upon his learning that they had not made the application, as they agreed to do, he applied to Congress. It was some months after that that he applied for relief.

Mr. WRIGHT. That still does not answer my question. The question I asked is this: after the term of fourteen years expired, how long was it before he made his application?

Mr. WADLEIGH. The fourteen years expired I think in 1873. He made this application I think some nine months after the expiration of the time, as soon as he ascertained the fact.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. At the very next session of Congress?

Mr. WADLEIGH. At the very next session of Congress.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to ask one further question. Is the corporation with which he made this contract still entitled to the benefit of the patent if it be renewed?

Mr. WADLEIGH. Not at all. When he ascertained that that corporation had not performed their written contract with him, he made application to friends who assisted him in carrying on this application for leave to apply to extend the patent. That company has nothing to do with this application.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. They have been using it ever since?

Mr. WADLEIGH. They have been using it ever since.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. WRIGHT. Allow me to ask one other question. I understood the Senator from New Hampshire to say just now that this company with which he had the contract had been using this machine all the time and up to the time that this application was made to Congress, for nine months, without any patent. I should like to know how that is.

Mr. WADLEIGH. I suppose that this corporation have been using it. They were manufacturing this machine when they made this written contract with the patentee to apply for the extension of the patent, and as I understand they have been managing it ever since. The question for the Senate is whether this company is to profit by what seems to the committee to be a fraud on this poor man, the patentee; and if my friend from Iowa intends to further their plans in committing that fraud, he will vote against this bill.

Mr. WRIGHT. I do not propose to do that, but I propose to know and ascertain for certainty that this company will not get the benefit of the extension if it be made. I cannot see but that the company are to get the benefit of this extension. They have been using the patent ever since, and no doubt under some contract in writing as they suppose. Up to the time of the expiration of the patent and since that time they have been using it, doubtless because they supposed they had a right to do so under their contract. As far as I can see, if this extension be granted they get the benefit, and not this poor man.

Mr. WADLEIGH. That is the thing the committee have investigated, and they find, as I said before, that such will not be the case. This company have no right in extending the invention. To be sure they went on using the invention before the time expired under the contract with this patentee, which expired with the expiration of the patent, and since that time they have been using it because, there being no patent in existence, they neglecting to perform their contract and make application for its extension, they have a right of use against this inventor. Now, it is proposed to give him an opportunity to apply to the Commissioner to extend the patent which he had and which he lost by the neglect of this very corporation, the only party in this country that is making these machines. It is to allow him to apply for the extension they agreed to apply for the benefit of the patentee, and there is no contract under which that company will receive any benefit from this extension.

Mr. SCOTT. That induces one further question. Is this a responsible incorporation? Because if it is, then this patentee ought to proceed against them for damages upon that contract to recover from them the value of his patent for not having it renewed according to the contract.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. He is not worth six dollars in the world.

Mr. SCOTT. I am speaking of the corporation?

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. The truth is he cannot sue that corporation; he has not the means practically, and there is no relief except from Congress.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHRISTIANA L. WILLIAMS.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. I call up House bill No. 4202.

The bill (H. R. No. 4202) to enable Mrs. Christiana L. Williams, administratrix of the estate of C. W. Williams, deceased, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of letters-patent for improvements in canal locks and gates was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

It grants to Christiana L. Williams, as administratrix of the last will and testament of C. W. Williams, deceased, of Port Jervis, leave to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of the letters-patent granted to C. W. Williams for improvements in canal gates and locks, of date the 29th day of November, 1859, for the term of seven years from and after the expiration of the original term of fourteen years, for which the letters-patent were granted.

Mr. CAMERON. Mr. President, I think we had better not pass this bill. The State of New York and the State of Pennsylvania are perhaps the only two States in this country that are largely interested in canal-locks. I do not think there has been an invention in many years to improve the value of canal-locks, and all these extensions only give trouble to people engaged in the canal business without benefiting any persons except the patentees. This whole system of interference by Congress with patent-rights is wrong. By general laws I believe the officers of the Patent Office have a right to extend under certain regulations a patent for seven years.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. This patent has run fourteen years, and by a mistake of the attorney of the patentee, who was to apply to the Commissioner for an extension for seven years under the existing law, the application failed to reach the Patent Office in time; and the petitioner asks that she may present her application at the Patent Office for the seven years' extension that is provided by law.

Mr. CAMERON. That is a very plausible excuse; but if this patent is worth anything to the owners they would have taken care to protect their interests; their attorneys would have been there in time. There is no difficulty about getting a patent renewed under the existing laws at the Patent-Office. There persons are employed to investigate all these cases. They understand all the laws; they understand the merits of the applications. We come here without any time to investigate them. Generally we are governed by feeling, and often we are not informed on the subject at all. Bills are brought in as they are to-day without possibly anybody except the chairman of the committee having examined them at all. He possibly has not had time to look into the case thoroughly. I think the better way is to vote them all down; and let us rely on the laws, which are very liberal for the reward of inventors.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. One word. This bill is simply to rectify an inadvertence which could not have been prevented. I read from the report:

Within ample time, as prescribed by the law, said Williams forwarded to his attorney resident in the city of Washington his statement of facts and the proofs in the case, with instructions to apply to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension. The affidavit of the attorney submitted in the case states that owing to his absence from the city he did not receive the papers and instructions until the time for making said application for extension of said patent as required by law had expired some two or three days.

He asks, and the committee report in favor of letting this petitioner go to the Commissioner notwithstanding this mistake.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, and ordered to a third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

Mr. CAMERON called for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 14, nays 25, as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Boutwell, Ferry of Connecticut, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton of Maryland, Howe, Johnston, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Pratt, Ramsey, Spencer, Sprague, and Wadleigh—14.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Cameron, Clayton, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Gilbert, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, Ingalls, McCreery, Merrimon, Norwood, Ransom, Robertson, Sargent, Scott, Thurman, Tipton, West, Windom, and Wright—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Bogy, Boreman, Brownlow, Carpenter, Chandler, Conkling, Conover, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Jones, Kelly, Lewis, Logan, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pease, Saulsbury, Schurz, Sherman, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, and Washburn—33.

So the bill was rejected.

ARKANSAS BOUNDARY LINE.

Mr. CHANDLER. I now ask for the regular order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time allotted to the Committee on Patents having expired, the regular order comes up, which is the unfinished business of Saturday—the steamboat bill, so called.

Mr. McCREERY. I ask unanimous consent to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 679.

Mr. CHANDLER. I object, and insist on the regular order.

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the Senator from Michigan will allow us to take up this bill. I do not think it will take five minutes to pass it.

Mr. THURMAN. If the request of the Senator from Kentucky is that the pending order may be passed by informally so that we may call it up at any time we please, I shall not object to his application.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands such to be the application of the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. CHANDLER. With that understanding, I shall not object.
Mr. MCCREERY. It is the bill relative to the boundary line between the State of Arkansas and the Indian country.

There being no objection, the bill (S. No. 679) to establish the boundary line between the State of Arkansas and the Indian country was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SARGENT. I want an explanation of this bill. If this bill takes land from the Indian Territory, circumscribes the Indian Territory west of the Arkansas line, a liability of the Government to pay indemnity to the Indian tribes is created by this bill. If there is a doubtful question between the Indian Territory and the citizens of Arkansas which is settled by this bill, the liability still arises. Now, I wish to know whether, by the passage of this bill in this summary way, we are laying the foundation for a claim on behalf of the owners of land in the Indian Territory for large payments of money, hereafter to be settled by negotiation, by treaty, or by some other method, by which the United States will be burdened. I should like to know that there is nothing of that kind in this bill. If there is, I for one shall oppose the bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think I can give the necessary information. Some forty years ago a line was established by the United States between the State of Arkansas and the Indian Territory. Upon that line the Government surveys were made and closed, and the land thus surveyed to that line was settled by settlers and patents given to the settlers. The settlers have been in possession of the land from that day to this. Some ten or twelve years ago, I think, a new line was surveyed, which was intended to be a correction of the first survey. This new line varied very much from the original line.

Mr. THURMAN. Under what authority was the new line run?

Mr. CLAYTON. I do not remember whether by Congress or by the authority of the Secretary of the Interior. This is the condition of affairs. It will be readily seen that the line upon which the Government surveys were run and titles given to the lands ought to be made the line between the Territory and the State of Arkansas. It would lead to endless confusion if any other line were established. It would throw citizens of Arkansas into the Indian Territory; it would leave those citizens with a claim upon the United States for the lands that the United States has patented to them. It would lead to endless confusion. This proposition is to establish as the permanent line the line which was first established by the General Government, and upon which the surveys were closed and titles given to the lands. It does not give any claim at all to the Indians more than they now possess. The citizens of Arkansas are upon these lands, and it is merely to quiet their title and avoid confusion as to taxation and citizenship that this line should be fixed as the permanent line. I hope there will be no objection to the bill. It is a matter of considerable importance to the citizens of that State living on that line.

Mr. THURMAN. Does the State of Arkansas object?

Mr. CLAYTON. No, sir; the State has no objection. We desire it.

Mr. THURMAN. Has the Legislature petitioned for it?

Mr. CLAYTON. Frequently. I understand this bill was thoroughly investigated by the Committee on Indian Affairs and reported unanimously. I think if any person will look into it he will see the necessity of its passage.

Mr. SARGENT. It may be that the bill is very necessary; but it seems to me that some gentleman who has critically examined it should be able to explain to us under what authority the new line was run some ten or twelve years ago; what equities of the Indians led the Government to investigate that matter and order a new line to be run. I should like also to be informed on the legal proposition whether by running that line the Government became a guarantor for the Indians that they should be retained there, and consequently if there is a legal liability for the lands which, by establishing this line over again, we divest the titles of the Indians to.

Mr. CLAYTON. I will ask the Secretary to read the report from the Land Department.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CLAYTON. I hope the Senator will not do it.

Mr. CHANDLER. I must. The understanding was that this bill should not lead to debate.

Mr. CLAYTON. If the Senator will allow the report to be read, I will withdraw any further opposition if there is debate after that.

Mr. CHANDLER. This bill can come up after the passage of the steamboat bill.

Mr. CLAYTON. Will the Senator allow the report to be read?

Mr. CHANDLER. I call for the regular order.

STEAMBOAT LAW.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1588) to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to the security of life on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I regret the objection made by the Senator from Michigan—

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to make a motion to strike out?

Mr. CONKLING. Not at this moment. I will not interfere with the Senator at the proper time, but he interrupts me in the midst of a different suggestion. I had commenced to express my regret that the Senator from Michigan feels moved to object to the consideration for the moment of the bill pressed by the Senator from Arkansas, for the reason, among others, that the business the Chair calls up is too grave to proceed without a quorum of the Senate. There is, I think, no quorum present; and I question very much whether any great headway is to be made in the consideration of the steamboat bill in such a condition of the body. There are in the proposed bill seventy-three sections. I have amendments which I wish to offer to forty-odd of these sections. I think other Senators have other amendments; but to that point they will speak. I wish to offer two amendments to the first section of the bill; and I should like to have them passed upon by the Senate, not in the absence of the Senate. If Senators insist upon proceeding with the steamboat bill so called, and insist that the argument of those who distrust it shall be made in the absence of those by whom the votes are to be given, I think a time will come when we shall have a right to insist that we do not go on unless there be a quorum of the Senate. I do not believe it is an economy of time to attempt to proceed now with the steamboat bill. It is a contested matter, and it will occupy some time. There being a refusal virtually on the part of all those supposed to espouse it to make any explanation in its behalf, and those who distrust it being called upon to assign their objections to it, I for one shall have to wander blindfold; and although I need not assure the Senate that I shall not be guilty of the disrespect of addressing the Senate for the sake of consuming time, I shall be obliged, if I must proceed without explanation of the effect of the bill or the changes it makes, to go somewhat at large into the reasons which weigh with me against this proposed voluminous legislation. Having my copy of the bill before me, I have marked it section by section; and, as the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] will confirm me in saying, there is in the mode of proceeding to which we are committed no way for me except to take up the bill and point out step by step the defects and objections which I find. If there be no other way, I will proceed to do it; but, as I have already said, I should like the Senate to be here and not be absent when the subject proceeds.

Mr. CAMERON. I think we had better let this bill lie over for a day or so. I shall have some amendments to offer to it myself. I do not often consume the time of the Senate; but this bill is one in which my constituents have a great deal of interest, a great deal more than they usually have in measures considered here. It may affect them much more largely than the Senate now thinks. Therefore I should prefer to have the bill lie over for another day. Above all things, I would be unwilling, like the Senator from New York, to take up this important bill with so thin a Senate as we have to-day. I can see no harm to arise to anybody or anything by letting it lie over; and I move that the Senate pass it over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania moves to postpone the further consideration of the bill until tomorrow.

Mr. THURMAN. Has the Senator from New York yielded the floor?

Mr. CONKLING. I will state the facts to the Senator, and he can judge as well as I can. I wish, at some time when I do not incommode any other Senator, to address the Senate touching the bill now pending; but if I am compelled to proceed in the absence of I think nearly two-thirds of the Senate, as I have already said, I shall submit, as I always do, to the pleasure of the Senate; and yet I would very much prefer to have this bill acted on in a different way. I have no speech to make. I do not wish to do anything in regard to this bill except to discharge my duty in bringing to the Senate such information as I have; and I will say further, as I intended to do it before, that there are several Senators—perhaps I may be pardoned for referring to one—the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS]—peremptorily constrained this morning to be elsewhere, who would like to be here, who have something to say and suggest about this bill; and therefore, as well on their behalf as on my own, I should like to have it go over for a day or two until we can consider it under circumstances a little more favorable than those which present themselves now. Whether that amounts to a vacation of the floor the honorable Senator can judge as well as I can.

Mr. THURMAN. I inquired of my friend from New York whether he had yielded the floor. I confess that I am no wiser after having heard him than I was when I put the question. It results from the fact, I suppose, that he did not, to use his own language in reference to the Senator from Pennsylvania nearest me [Mr. SCOTT] yesterday emphatically take his seat. What "emphatically taking a seat" is, I confess I do not quite understand. The Senator said yesterday that the Senator from Pennsylvania nearest me "certainly did emphatically take his seat." As I did not know whether the Senator from New York took his seat emphatically or otherwise, I asked him whether he had taken his seat at all.

Mr. CONKLING. He has taken his seat de bene esse. [Laughter.]

Mr. THURMAN. Because if he had not taken his seat, then the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] had no right to make the motion to postpone the bill. But to leave all this, Mr. President, I do not care whether the motion to postpone be made or not. I am as desirous as any one to hear the Senator from New York. We all are. We all want to know everything that can be properly said for or against this bill. But I submit to the Senator that if he is to take the floor at two o'clock, which happens to be lunch-time, any day between now and the 4th day of March, he will very probably find that there is not a quorum of the Senate present; but he will not speak long before there will be a quorum present. It is a very disagreeable thing, I know, to speak when nearly all the seats in the Senate are empty. I recollect, the Senator will recollect, that I had to proceed once to address the Senate on the subject of the distribution of the Alabama award, involving fifteen and a half million dollars, with interest, when there was not one-third of the Senate present, and the men that were not present were the men who came in afterward and by their votes determined the question and determined it egregiously wrong, in my humble judgment. That is a fate that may befall us all. I know the Senate desire to hear the Senator from New York, and I think as soon as it is known that he is speaking on this bill they will all come flocking into their seats. The moment it is known that his flag is up and his sword drawn, they will all be here. He need not have the slightest fear that he will not have audience. He will sound the alarm-whistle, for it will be a matter of alarm, that there are breakers ahead of this bill and that it is necessary for everybody to be on the lookout. I hope, therefore, my friend from New York will proceed; he will never have a better hearing than he will have to-day.

We know this bill was lost before at the short session because there was not time to consider it. If that is to be its fate again I shall regret it exceedingly. It is a bill that is deeply interesting to a very large interest of this country, and it ought to be fairly considered. It is now before us. It has passed the House of Representatives; it is here for disposition; and there is little enough time to consider it and dispose of it. In a day or two the Senator from Maine [Mr. MORRILL] will be up here with appropriation bills, and then we know everybody has to get out of the way. You can no more stand in the face of one of those bills than you could stand in the face of a locomotive. You would meet about the same fate if you were to undertake to antagonize one of his bills as to undertake to throw a locomotive off the track with your head. We know therefore what is the fate of putting this bill off. I hope, then, the Senator from New York will consent to go on to-day, and I am quite sure he will have the audience of as large a Senate as he will any day that he may speak on this bill. I have not the slightest doubt about it. He knows that he is always listened to with attention, and he knows that he always draws a full house.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator from Ohio is unusually facetious this morning. He has proposed that we should blow a steamboat whistle. After hearing him I should prefer to blow a fog-horn. I feel like ringing my fog-bells after hearing my honorable friend. He says that lunch-time is two o'clock. That is a piece of news to most of us. I never find time to eat lunch myself, and especially not at two o'clock. I did not know that two o'clock was lunch time. I did observe that shortly after one the Secretary paused for a long time for want of a quorum on a call of the yeas and nays upon a patent bill; and finally, when the Senator from Texas [Mr. HAMILTON] happened to come in at that moment, that one unit made a bare quorum and enabled the Secretary to report the vote. But the Senator from Ohio tells us that the Senators are out eating lunch and that two o'clock is lunch-hour, and taking the whole facts together I judge that they retired half an hour in advance in order to prepare their minds for that interesting ceremony.

Now, Mr. President, the Senator relates as a part of his marvelous experience that he once addressed the Senate in the absence of two-thirds of the body and he charged me with remembering it. I remember no such thing. I remember nothing about the Senate on that occasion. My memory of the Senator's speech is so vivid that it is impossible for me to recollect anything in regard to the Senate or anybody else except the Senator himself. I did not suppose that it would be possible that such a thing as he alleges could have happened.

But, Mr. President, to be serious, I know as well as does the Senator from Ohio that it is a matter of very small moment whether I have audience, in the sense in which he employs that word, touching the bill before us. It is, however, of great consequence whether a majority of the Senate, whose votes are to decide this bill, know anything about it or not. Thus far, as I shall show I think when I come to that, it has received no consideration at any time in the Senate or in any committee of the Senate which would satisfy the requirement in the case of the most trivial measure of legislation. It was once discussed in the Senate at an evening session; it never has been considered at any other time; and I insist that a measure so important, before it becomes or fails to become a law, ought at some time to receive as much attention from the Senate as is given to a motion to adjourn or to go into executive session. It requires a quorum to go into executive session.

The Senator says that it is highly important to a large interest in the country; and then, as at other times, the Senator is pleased to utter himself as if there was something local, something sectional, something of geography in the residence of those concerned in this bill. I beg to say to the honorable Senator that I have the honor to represent in this Chamber more men interested in this bill than he does. I should like to know what State of this Union is interested in the navigation of this continent and the laws that govern it, if New York is not interested. The Senator speaks of western rivers, as if rivers prevailed wholly in the West. He seems to have blotted from his map the Saint Lawrence and the Hudson and other rivers of which some of us know, or else he seems to forget that he has here a measure applying not only to western rivers but to all the arms of the sea in the vicinity not only of New York but of all New England and of every State that touches the coast for three thousand miles of coast-line and every State which has internal navigation within it or approaching its borders. There is nothing therefore of section or locality in the measure before us. It appeals to the common interest of all, and to the interest of commerce and navigation wherever that interest is, from sea to sea, and from the Saint Lawrence to the mediterranean sea of Mexico. I believe that those whom I represent have an interest greater than that of money in this measure. They who are owners of steamboats believe they have; and no men are more earnest in their remonstrance against some of the provisions of this bill than men who have great sums of money embarked in steamboat ventures. Certainly, one thing that I shall not be called upon to do, is to say anything in disparagement of the class of citizens to whom I now refer. They are among my constituents in great numbers; "steamboat men," as they are called, are among my personal and political friends in great numbers; and I have nothing to say about this bill which I would not say in their presence and hearing, and as I have a right to say, with their approval and commendation, for steamboat men in the State of New York do not more than other upright men want anything done that is wrong, even though by dint of it they might put money in their purse. Therefore I hope that gentlemen on the other side will cease to treat this as if it was a war to be made upon some interest, and more especially upon some locality or an interest residing in some locality. It is not that, Mr. President; but it is a question upon which every Senator, regardless of party or regardless of residence, ought to be able to stand up or sit down and look at the real merits of the legislation itself. It is that to which I would invite the Senate. I cannot invite the Senate in its absence; but I leave the point by assuring the Senator from Ohio that the pleasure of having these seats filled while in the act of speaking is no part of my reason for the suggestion I made.

I shall vote for the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I say to the Senator from Ohio that any day when the Senate is disposed to take up this measure when the Senate is here, I will vote with him to take it up. I venture to make another suggestion to the Senator. If the friends of this bill will consent that it be committed to any committee of this body—they may select their own committee—which will undertake to give it one consideration in comparison with existing law, I promise the Senate that then when it comes back I will be exceedingly brief and sparing in the time I occupy in attempting to point out objections to it. If the Senator from Ohio will move a special committee of which he shall be chairman, undertaking to give this bill one consideration and report it back, I promise him that no time shall be lost by reason of that.

AFFAIRS IN ARKANSAS.

A message in writing was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. E. BABCOCK, his Secretary.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask to have the message read which has just been received from the President of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Chair will lay before the Senate a message from the President of the United States.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

Herewith I have the honor to send, in accordance with the resolution of the Senate of the 3d instant, all the information in my possession not heretofore furnished, relating to affairs in the State of Arkansas.

I venture to express the opinion that all the testimony shows that in the election of 1872 Joseph Brooks was lawfully elected governor of that State; that he has been unlawfully deprived of the possession of his office since that time; that in 1874 the constitution of the State was by violence, intimidation, and revolutionary proceedings overthrown, and a new constitution adopted and a new State government established.

These proceedings, if permitted to stand, practically ignore all rights of minorities in all the States. Also, what is there to prevent each of the States recently readmitted to Federal relations on certain conditions, changing their constitutions and violating their pledges, if this action in Arkansas is acquiesced in?

I respectfully submit whether a precedent so dangerous to the stability of State government, if not of the National Government also, should be recognized by Congress. I earnestly ask that Congress will take definite action in this matter to relieve the Executive from acting upon questions which should be decided by the legislative branch of the Government.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 8, 1875.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move that the message and accompanying report be printed and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. THURMAN. No—

Mr. CLAYTON. The Senator will excuse me. A memorial was introduced here a few days ago bearing on this subject which was referred to that committee. That committee I understand have the question now under consideration. These papers were called for by a resolution offered by myself intended to shed light for the guidance of that committee.

Mr. THURMAN. I move to amend by substituting the Committee on the Judiciary. This is not a question of elections. This is a question of the right of a people to change their constitution. It is not a question that belongs to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. The whole question is whether the constitution of Arkansas has been lawfully changed. If it has been, then there is a lawful government there. It is therefore a question of law and not a question of privileges and elections. This message should go to the Committee on the Judiciary; and let us see whether or not that change in the constitution of Arkansas has been made pursuant to law or not, or whether it has validity or not.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think the Senator from Ohio is mistaken when he says this is not a question of elections. I think, if he will recall his attention to the first portion of the message, he will see that it does relate to the election as well as to the validity of the State government there. The very language of the message itself refers to the election which took place in 1872 as between Brooks and Baxter; and I think in view of the fact that this question is already before the Committee on Privileges and Elections and under investigation, this information should go to it.

Mr. THURMAN. I call for the regular order. Let this matter lie over until to-morrow.

Mr. CONKLING. Is not this the regular order, Mr. President?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands this motion has been entertained by unanimous consent only, the regular order being the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] to postpone the steamboat bill until to-morrow.

Mr. CONKLING. I do not wish to wrestle with the judgment of the Chair; but I submit that a message being received from the President of the United States and entertained, although by unanimous consent, and on its being so entertained a motion being made to refer it to a committee, it is too late for any Senator to say that because business was pending when the message was received, it is now subject to a single objection. I do not think that has been the usage of the Senate; and although it is not very important in this case, I would not like to have the suggestion of the Chair (unless upon reflection he confirms it) taken as a precedent which may govern us in the future. I feel quite certain that the usage of the Senate has been otherwise.

Mr. THURMAN. The Chair is undoubtedly correct. This message was read simply by tacit consent. The assent of the Senate was not even asked to its being read.

Mr. CONKLING. Then a motion was made.

Mr. THURMAN. I know it was.

Mr. CONKLING. Then the Senator himself moved to amend that motion.

Mr. THURMAN. That is all very true; but no one thought of giving up the pending order, and when it was seen that this would lead to debate I had a right to insist upon the pending order. If we are to be put to such sharp practice as that, we shall have to be on the qui vive all the time, and not allow anything, however convenient it would be, to be read to interfere with the pending order. But we do it every day. On the Louisiana resolutions that have been introduced here, while the debate has been going on, again and again and again have messages been received from the House or from the President and for the time being we would occupy ourselves with them for a little while without anybody ever imagining that the pending order was displaced by any such proceeding. If we are to get on without that convenient and amiable—if I may use the word—mode of procedure in the Senate, and are to be held up to sharp practice all the time, then let us see what will come of that. But I hope never to see that day. We have not been accustomed to do business in that way in the Senate of the United States. Let this matter lie over. I know of no graver question than what is raised by this message. I confess that I am astounded by the message, and I want time to consider about it.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, without stopping—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Before the Senator from Delaware proceeds the Chair will take this opportunity to state that in the opinion of the Chair the question is upon the motion made by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] to postpone the steamboat bill until to-morrow. The rules are very clear that when a question is under debate the order of business can be interrupted only in the ways pointed out in the eleventh rule; and the consideration of the message of the President was by unanimous consent only, and this debate can proceed by unanimous consent only; and if objection is made the question will recur on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let us have the regular order, Mr. President.

Mr. BAYARD. As I understand the decision of the Chair, there is nothing before the Senate as to the message.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question before the Senate is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] to postpone the steamboat bill so called until to-morrow.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Evidently, I think, there is no disposition on the part of a portion of the Senate at least to proceed with this subject to-day. I do not rise to discuss the propriety of that one way or the other, but I rise to see if an arrangement cannot be made which will satisfactorily prevent delay and enable us in the mean time to go on with some business important to the Senate and to the country. I refer particularly to the bill reported by a select committee of Congress on the first day of this session, about the propriety of which and the possibility of action on which there has been some hesitation. I am satisfied that that bill could be passed at the present time, and it could be passed by general consent. I am satisfied that the sentiment in the District is almost entirely in favor of the passage of that bill. The numerous petitions presented here this morning praying earnestly for the passage of that bill satisfied me that outside the sentiment is almost universal in favor of the passage of that bill, and certainly Congress cannot entertain the idea for a moment of adjourning without passing some bill for good government in this District. Now, if it suits the convenience of gentlemen on both sides, I suggest that this steamboat bill go over until to-morrow, and I would like to take up the District bill this afternoon. I do not propose to antagonize it against the pending order, but if those who have charge of that are disposed to allow it to go over, the time can be occupied this afternoon profitably, I am satisfied, by taking up the District bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, it is hardly necessary to recall again the history of this bill for the purpose of showing the danger of postponing it for a single day. The Senator from Ohio has recalled the history of a former bill. Now, upon taking up this bill we find that it passed the House of Representatives on the 15th of May last. It did not come over at this session, but it passed the House at the last session of Congress. It was referred on the 15th of May to the Committee on Commerce, and it came out of that committee after more than a month, on the 19th of June. All the members of the Senate have had the whole vacation to examine this bill. If it has not been examined in this time, it is hardly probable that with the pressing engagements of Senators between this and to-morrow morning it will receive much further consideration. I do not feel myself committed to any of its provisions, although I desire to have the bill fairly discussed and disposed of; but I think those who desire to have the bill disposed of may make up their minds that if it goes over now we are losing the opportunity of considering and passing it in any form at this session.

Mr. CLAYTON. I would like to ask the Senator from Ohio whether his objection is to the printing of the message?

Mr. THURMAN. Certainly not. It should be printed as a matter of course. Let it lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That order will be made if there be no objection. The message and documents will lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. THURMAN. I am very anxious to see it in print.

Mr. CLAYTON. I think that after the postponement of the steamboat bill is disposed of, the question of the reference of the message ought to be settled.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator can then take it up from the table, if he desires.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3818) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives and the amendments of the House of Representatives to certain other amendments of the Senate to the said bill; and

On motion of Mr. MORRILL, of Maine, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and disagree to the amendments of the House to other amendments of the Senate thereto; and that it agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President.

STEAMBOAT LAW.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON] to postpone until to-morrow the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 1588) to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to the security of life on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that motion will not be agreed to and that the Senate will go on with the bill.

The motion to postpone was not agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I move to amend the bill, in line 9 of the first section, by striking out the words "inspection required by" and inserting "complying with the terms of."

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. I hope the friends of the bill will stand by the bill as it is.

Mr. CONKLING. Mr. President, I hope the whole Senate hears the Senator from Michigan say that he asks the Senate to stand by the bill as it is.

Mr. BOUTWELL. The friends of the bill.

Mr. CONKLING. And more especially the friends of the bill. I hope that will be borne in mind in the future stages of the bill, because I venture to predict that a time will come when there will be very few Senators here who will have courage enough to comply with that request.

As to this amendment, in answer to the Senator, I ask the attention of the Senate. The existing law prohibits the enrollment, license, and navigation of any vessel propelled in whole or in part by steam not complying with the terms of the act. The bill before us proposes to drop the latter words and substitute "without the inspection required by this act," so that, no matter what the deficiencies may be, no matter what the willful neglect of safeguards may be, no matter what the known violation of the statute may be, no penalty is to be incurred by anybody and no unlawful act done provided an inspection of the vessel has taken place. The Senate will see, without my multiplying words, the design of this. The law as it stands subjects the vessel to the law. The law as it is proposed makes vessel and owner scot-free where an inspection has taken place, no matter what may be the violation of the law.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment to see whether without anything further the summons of the Senator from Michigan to stand by the bill as it is will be complied with.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN, (when his name was called.) On this bill and I suppose on this amendment I am paired with the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN.] I should vote "yea" if he were present, and I presume he would vote "nay" on this amendment.

The result was announced—yeas 8, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Boutwell, Cameron, Conkling, Ferry of Connecticut, Flanagan, Gilbert, Hamilton of Texas, and Sargent—8.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Bayard, Boggy, Boreman, Chandler, Cooper, Ferry of Michigan, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morton, Norwood, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Ransom, Robertson, Schurz, Scott, Thurman, Tipton, and Wadleigh—29.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Brownlow, Carpenter, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Pease, Saulsbury, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Washburn, West, Windom, and Wright—35.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONKLING. I move in section 2, line 2, after the word "passengers," to insert the words "or freight;" so as to make the clause read:

That every steamer so propelled and carrying passengers or freight shall be provided with suitable pipes and valves attached to the boiler, &c.

I shall ask for the yeas and nays on this amendment also, encouraged by the last vote to do so. Before I ask for them, however, I will endeavor to draw the attention of the Senators who are present to the purpose of this amendment.

Section 2 of the bill is intended ostensibly to provide safeguards for the lives of those traveling on vessels propelled by steam, and it applies to all vessels thus propelled, as well ferry-boats and tugs and vessels moving in crowded harbors as to any other craft. As the section stands, it provides:

That every steamer so propelled, and carrying passengers shall be provided with suitable pipes and valves attached to the boiler to convey steam into the hold and the different compartments thereof to extinguish fire; and every stove used on board of any such vessel shall be well and securely fastened; and all wood-work or other ignitable substances about the boiler, chimneys, cook-houses, and stove-pipes exposed to ignition shall be thoroughly shielded by some incombustible material.

The draughtsman of this section seems to suppose that there is reason in confining to passenger-boats these precautions. I suppose I need hardly tell Senators that in a great majority of instances casualties occurring in the harbor of New York and in all waters in which steam-boats rendezvous originate in craft which do not carry passengers. Fires occurring in tugs running about the harbor of New York, explosions taking place, are just as likely to carry their evil results to passenger-vessels as if it had been a passenger-vessel with which the difficulty originated. Recently in the harbor of New York an accident set fire to petroleum and it ran upon the surface of the water long distances out into and crosswise of the harbor and set vessels on fire and burned them. Here is a provision aimed at the most indispensable requisites of safety and confined wholly to vessels engaged in carrying passengers. I turn now to the corresponding provision in the existing statute. What is it?

That every steamer so propelled, and carrying passengers or freight, shall be provided with suitable pipes and valves attached to the boiler to convey steam into the hold, &c.

And yet, with the view of saving the trifling expense of suitable pipes and valves attached to the boiler to convey steam into the hold to extinguish fire, and the expense of fastening stoves securely so that they will not move or be thrown about, and the expense of sheathing the wood-work about boilers, chimneys, cook-houses, and stove-pipes with tin or some incombustible material, it is proposed to change the law and confine to passenger-boats alone these inexpensive and elementary safeguards. I do not stop now to dilate upon the point; I simply call attention to it, and I ask for the yeas and nays upon the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BOGgy. I hope the amendment will not be adopted. The section is intended to protect life, and not property. There are other provisions for property.

Mr. CONKLING. I venture to suggest to the Senator from Missouri that he did not hear the reason, and the only reason as far as I suggested one, which I gave for my amendment. It was not that property might be protected. It was that a fire taking place on a freight-vessel, unless she is so isolated that the flames do not and cannot communicate anywhere else, the combustion is just as likely to produce injury upon other vessels, and to other vessels which carry passengers, as if the vessel on which the fire originated were itself a passenger-boat. I reminded the Senate that recently in the harbor of New York a fire occurring which set petroleum burning had passed long distances, the burning petroleum itself spread over the water and set fire to vessels in that way. I hope the Senate will not vote upon the amendment with the idea that I offer it for the purpose of protecting property. It is not that at all; but my argument is that this change in the law will have directly the effect of exposing life to hazard.

Mr. BOGgy. The theory of the bill, as far as this section is concerned, is merely to protect life. Property in danger of fire is sufficiently guarded in other places. The object of this section is protection to the lives of persons who are on passenger steamboats.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not want to take up time in discussing every one of the amendments that may be offered; but I wish to remind those who have studied this bill, because some of us have thought about it, that there are in the judgment of those most interested in it ample protections against fire so far as the nature of the case will admit in respect to freight-boats, and there is no necessity for this provision in regard to freight-boats. The Senator from New York alluded to the cases of petroleum-vessels that were burned in the harbor of New York. It so happens that I believe I saw both those fires. One of them was a French vessel that lay in the North River nearer the New Jersey shore than to New York, but out in the stream. The others were vessels that were burned at Hunter's Point, Long Island. No lives were lost by either of those conflagrations. Not a single life was lost, and no such provision as is contained in this section could by any possibility have saved either of those vessels.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York, [Mr. CONKLING,] upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 12, nays 27; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boutwell, Conkling, Ferry of Connecticut, Flanagan, Gilbert, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Howe, Morrill of Vermont, and Wright—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boggy, Boreman, Chandler, Clayton, Cooper, Davis, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Pratt, Ransom, Schurz, Scott, Thurman, Tipton, and West—27.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Conover, Cragin, Dennis, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Patterson, Pease, Ramsey, Robertson, Sargent, Saulsbury, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Wadleigh, Washburn, and Windom—33.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONKLING. I move now in section 3, line 3, to strike out the word "hand" and insert the word "steam;" so as to read:

That every steamer, except as hereinafter specified, shall be provided with two good double-acting fire-pumps, to be worked by steam.

I will only say that the existing law requires a double-acting steam-fire-pump. The alteration at this point is to strike that out and provide that these pumps are to be worked by hand, a change the effect of which every Senator must see, and I should like the vote of the Senate upon that also.

Mr. THURMAN. If I am not mistaken the Senator from New York is entirely incorrect as to the present law. The present law is as follows:

And every steamer exceeding two hundred tons burden, and carrying passengers, shall be provided with two good double-acting fire-pumps, to be worked by hand.

This bill reads:

That every steamer, except as hereinafter specified, shall be provided with two good double-acting fire-pumps, to be worked by hand, * * * and in addition to such hand-fire-pumps there shall be provided on all passenger-steamers, except as hereinafter specified, a good double-acting steam-fire-pump of a capacity equal to a single-acting pump of one cubic inch for every three tons measurement of vessel.

The present law requires, as I said, two fire-pumps to be worked by hand. The bill provides for two fire-pumps to be worked by hand and in addition a steam-fire-pump, which is one more, as I understand, than the present law requires. If the amendment prevails, all the pumps are to be worked by steam, so that if any accident should happen by which they could not be worked by steam there would be no pump on the vessels at all. I think the Senator will see that his amendment, if adopted, would lessen the security of life instead of increasing it.

Mr. CONKLING. If the Senator from Ohio had looked at the right place in the bill and in the existing law, he certainly would not have made the statement he has just submitted. His remarks apply to a subject to which this amendment does not apply at all. Section 3 of the existing law provides:

That every steamer permitted by her certificate of inspection to carry as many as fifty passengers or upwards, or any steamer carrying passengers—and which shall also carry cotton, hay, or hemp, shall be provided with a good double-acting steam-fire-pump.

However few, bear in mind—

In lieu of that the bill proposes:

That every steamer, except as hereinafter specified, shall be provided with two good double-acting fire-pumps, to be worked by hand.

And then follows in the law as the Senator has read in respect of other pumps and in the bill the corresponding provisions altering the existing law somewhat; but I call attention to the two provisions corresponding with each other, the one existing and the other proposed, and the effect is to put hand-pumps in the place of steam-pumps on passenger-vessels. There can be no mistake about that.

Mr. THURMAN. The Senator is just as certainly mistaken as anything can be. It is simply because there has been a transposition of the provisions and the provision for steam-pumps is later down in the section than it is in the law. The provision in regard to hand-pumps is the same in the law and the same in the bill. The provision in regard to steam-pumps is the same in the law that it is in the bill. They are exactly the same. The only difference is that there is a transposition. In order to draught the section more conveniently this provision in regard to pumps to be worked by hand comes first in the bill, whereas in the law the provision in regard to a steam-pump comes first; but the provision in the bill, as I said, is precisely the same as it is in the law. The law is:

And every steamer exceeding two hundred tons burden and carrying passengers, shall be provided with two good double-acting fire-pumps, to be worked by hand.

The provision in the bill is:

That every steamer, except as hereinafter specified, shall be provided with two good double-acting fire-pumps, to be worked by hand.

They are precisely the same. Then the first provision in the law, in regard to a pump to be worked by steam, is put down later in the section in the bill, in lines 21 and those that follow:

And in addition to such hand-fire-pumps, there shall be provided on passenger-steamers, except as hereinafter specified, a good double-acting steam-fire-pump of a capacity equal, &c.

Mr. CONKLING. Then the Senator thinks the object of this bill is to transpose the branches of the section. I say it is to dispense with the steam-pump.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I regard this bill as very important to the interests of navigation upon all the western rivers and lakes; and in view of the past history of the bill, I think the friends of it ought to stand by it and vote down all amendments that may be offered to it. I believe the bill has been well prepared and well examined by those who understand the subject perhaps better than I do and perhaps better than most gentlemen on this floor. I hope, therefore, the friends of the bill will stand by it and vote down all these amendments.

Mr. BOUTWELL. I wish the Senator from Indiana would inform us exactly in what particulars this bill would be of advantage to the steamboat proprietors of the West as compared with existing law. That is the thing that I have been anxious to find out; and I have never yet seen a person who could state the particulars in which this bill is to be advantageous as compared with existing law.

Mr. MORTON. I do not intend to be drawn into debate on this bill at this late hour. I understand that the objects contemplated by this bill are not only important but numerous, so far as our western interests are concerned, and I cannot understand why there ought to be any objection to it in other parts of the country.

Mr. CHANDLER. The law, as it now stands, requires that—

Every steamer exceeding two hundred tons burden, and carrying passengers, shall be provided with two good double-acting fire-pumps, to be worked by hand; each chamber of said pumps shall be of sufficient capacity to contain not less than one hundred cubic inches of water.

Now, it has proved in practice that one hundred cubic inches of water is too heavy a load to be worked by hand. This reduces the size of the pumps, and instead of being useless, makes them useful; that is all. Each steamer is now compelled to carry a testing-pump, a pump that is used but once in a year, which costs $250. It is simply to test the boiler. This bill leaves that out; for the inspector can furnish one testing-pump that will test every steamer which sails on the waters where he inspects, whereas at present every steamboat is compelled by law to buy a testing-pump, which is used but once a year. I hope this amendment will not be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CONKLING. I now move to strike out the words "except on ferry-boats," in the first line of the fourth section; so that the section will read:

That no loose hay, (unless for feeding stock on board,) loose cotton, or loose hemp, &c.

The Senator from Indiana has repeated the notice given by other Senators that those engaged in this bill expect every man to do his duty by standing by it as it is. Notwithstanding that, and notwithstanding the votes which have been taken, I am not without hope that this section will arrest the attention of the Senate. The fourth section relates to permission to passenger-boats to carry hay, hemp, cotton, or any other combustible material, not excepting gunpowder, along with nitro-glycerine or any other dangerous chemical. Under this section hay and nitro-glycerine, may be carried on ferry-boats, put together on the top of the boiler, if I understand, and if others more skilled than I understand, the terms and force of the section.

I have now moved to strike out the words "except on ferry-boats." Were these words stricken out, such precautions as there are here would apply to ferry-boats as well as others. With the words standing as they do, there is no restriction whatever applicable to any vessel which is by description a ferry-boat. I call attention to the definition given by the bill itself of "ferry-boats" on page 78. There, for the purposes of this act and the several enactments in it mentioned, the meaning is thus given:

Ferry-boats.—Steamers running under charters or license, as such, from State, county, or municipal authorities, between special points or places.

Any vessel which plies across rivers, harbors, arms of the sea, or to and fro along harbors, arms of the sea, or other bodies of water, between special points or places, is a ferry-boat; and under the proposed section all such boats, without restrictions, without safeguard of any kind, may carry combustible chemicals and combustible material.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] on Saturday made an excuse for this section as he understood it. I have his remarks in my hand. I intend to read an extract from them to the Senate, and then to show, as I think I can, that they are totally irrelevant to the section; that it contains no such provisions as he supposes, has no such effect, and can be excused by no such reason. The Senator said, referring to the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts, [Mr. BOUTWELL:]

In the first place he alluded to the fact that petroleum and other combustible material may be carried on steam-vessels. That is the present law. The only difference that I am aware of between the present law and this bill is this, that the present law requires these combustible materials to be carried upon the guards of the forecastle of the vessel. That has been found impracticable with respect to certain vessels embraced by the laws as they now exist, for there are vessels without guards, as the coasting-vessels. The consequence has been that the law could not be complied with. The only change in that respect which is made, as I understand, by this bill is by adding in the thirty-third and thirty-fourth lines of the fourth section, in reference to the place where these combustible materials may be carried, that they may be carried "in such other part of the steamer as the local inspectors shall designate in writing." It leaves the law to stand as it is, that this material "may be carried on the decks, guards, or forecastle of any such steamer, at a secure distance from any fire or heat." That is the present law, and this bill adds to it, "or in such other part of the steamer as the local inspectors shall designate in writing."

The Senator, when inquired of whether that was the only change made by this section, replied:

The only material change. There may be some others. If there are others, they have escaped my attention.

I venture to say, first, that no such change is made by the section as the Senator affirms; second, that he misunderstands the provisions of the existing law and misunderstands the effect of this section. The existing law provides:

That no loose hay, loose cotton, or loose hemp, camphene, nitro-glycerine, naphtha, benzene, benzole, coal-oil, crude or refined petroleum, or other like explosive burning fluids, or like dangerous articles, shall be carried as freight or used as stores on any steamer carrying passengers.

That is absolute, and applicable to all passenger-steamers. Now, I beg Senators to observe this proposed provision, "that, except on ferry boats," thus at once removing from all restriction that numberless multitude of craft, large and small, embraced in the definition contained in this same bill, of ferry-boats, to wit: vessels running between specified points or places. I ask Senators to observe that all this great body of steam-vessels is put absolutely beyond restriction, so that they may carry nitro-glycerine and petroleum together where they please and as they please:

That, except on ferry-boats, no loose hay (unless for feeding stock on board)—

There is no such thing in the existing law. The existing law is precisely the reverse. Loose hay may not be carried for feeding stock on board because if it is present and loose, it does little to diminish the danger that the motive is to feed stock on board—

Loose cotton, &c., or other like explosive burning-fluids—

There is a change there which I do not stop to comment upon—shall be carried as freight—

There the words of the existing law are dropped "or used as stores," for they are an express prohibition now. This bill is:

Shall be carried as freight on any steamer carrying passengers—

And now I beg Senators to note the following words:—except where there is no other public means of conveyance.

Look at these two changes. The existing law prohibits all vessels whatever carrying passengers from transporting these articles, whether used for stores or not. This provision is to authorize all ferry-boats whatever to carry them, and to authorize all other boats to carry them "where there is no other public means of conveyance." Can it be said that any steamboat suffers for the want of such a license as that? No matter what may have been said about swallowing this bill in the lump as it is, I ask Senators to contemplate for one moment such a change of the law, allowing every ferry-boat that plies from the city of New York to any other point, every ferry-boat that plies on the river Saint Lawrence, every ferry-boat that plies on Lake Champlain, every ferry-boat that plies in this hemisphere, so far as this continent occupies this hemisphere, to carry, without let or hindrance, along with men, women, and children, nitro-glycerine, camphene, benzole, benzene, loose hay, loose hemp, and loose cotton, all in one cargo. Is it possible that Senators, speaking no matter for what interest or what section, can justify such legislation as that?

There are other changes almost equally aggravating, but as I am not speaking for the purpose of consuming unnecessarily a moment's time, I pass them over and come to the allegation of the Senator from Ohio. What did he tell us? That the object of this proposed section was to emancipate boats from existing statutes which required them to carry on the guards these materials. There is no such thing in the existing law. I read from section 4:

Nor shall oil of vitriol, nitric or other chemical acids be carried on such steamers except on the decks or guards thereof—

There are the words which the Senator from Ohio quotes. Now observe—or in such other safe part of the vessel as shall be prescribed by the inspectors.

That he says is the freedom he wants. That is in the law now. No change is proposed in order to effect that. Again:

And oil or spirits of turpentine may be carried on any such steamer when the same shall be put in good metallic vessels, or casks or barrels well and securely bound with iron, and stowed in a secure part of the vessel.

Not on the guards, not on the decks, but in a secure part of the vessel. Again:

Friction matches may also be carried on such steamers when securely packed, &c., and stowed in a safe part of the vessel, at a secure distance from any fire or heat.

Where, I ask the Senator who has the book before him, is to be found such a change as he told us lay at the bottom of this section? Here I read in the section rewritten: "Friction matches when securely packed," and so on, "may be carried on the decks, guards, or the fore-castle of any such steamer at a secure distance from any fire or heat, or in such other part of the steamer as the local inspector shall designate in writing." Except the words "designate in writing," that part of the section in the proposed bill is equivalent to the section as it stands now; and yet the Senator from Ohio on Saturday undertook to apologize for this section by telling us that its object was to enable these articles to be carried not alone on the guards or decks but to be carried where the inspector might permit. I say the existing law is not as stated by the Senator, and I say the proposed bill makes no such change. On the contrary the existing law commits to the inspector the duty of defining where these articles shall be stowed or carried. Nowhere in this section are they located upon the guards or deck without discretion to carry them elsewhere, and in the proposed section the same thing in that regard is true.

Mr. SCOTT. Will the Senator from New York permit me to call his attention—as the Senator from Ohio has been out—to the fact that in the exercise of that discretion in providing rules, rule 11 of the "laws, rules, and regulations governing the steamboat inspection service," provides that:

Refined petroleum which will not ignite at a temperature less than 110 degrees Fahrenheit may, upon routes where there is no other practicable means of transportation, be carried upon passenger steamboats upon the guards or forward main deck thereof, at a safe distance from any fire.

That, I presume, is the provision to which the Senator from Ohio referred, and I call attention to it, as he is now in.

Mr. CONKLING. If my honorable friend from Pennsylvania will pardon me, that has no relation in the world to what the Senator from Ohio said. I have the remarks of the Senator from Ohio before me; and speaking of combustible material in general, he said:

The only difference that I am aware of between the present law and this bill is this, that the present law requires these combustible materials to be carried upon the guards or the fore-castle of the vessel.

Now, the Senator from Pennsylvania calls attention to the fact that by a rule an inspector defined the place where petroleum should be carried. Under this proposed section has not the inspector the right to reaffirm that rule? What does it say? "May be carried on the deck, guards, or fore-castle of any steamer at such distance from any fire or heat, or in such other part of the steamer as such local inspector shall designate in writing." That is just what is done in the eleventh rule, except that "in writing" is not in the present rule.

Mr. THURMAN. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him right there?

Mr. CONKLING. Certainly.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know but that I ought to have been a little more guarded in my language. When I spoke about the law, I spoke of that which had operation and effect as law. The rules made by the board of supervising inspectors have, as I understand, by the statute the effect and operation and binding force of law. I did not mean to be understood as saying that the statute provided that these articles should be carried on the guards or fore-castle.

Mr. CONKLING. The honorable Senator entirely misunderstands the point, which is owing in part to his having been out. Now I beg to state it to him. In the first place, the rule which the Senator from Pennsylvania refers to relates to petroleum alone. In the next place, under this proposed section it is just as competent for the inspector to make that rule as it is now. Therefore this section makes no change in that respect. But if it did I am not speaking of any such thing. Let us deal with one thing at a time. The Senator stated that the defect in existing law was that these combustibles, not petroleum alone but all combustible substances, many of which are enumerated, must now be carried on the deck or guard; and, said the Senator, coastwise vessels have no guard and it is impracticable, and therefore the object is to commit to the inspector the right to designate other places. I turn to the existing law and I find that the inspectors have now three times over in the section the right to designate any place, whether it is the guard, the deck, the hold, or any part of the vessel, where freight may be carried, and I find that they have no greater right under the proposed section than the present law gives them. Then looking into the proposed section I find that in place of the fact being as the Senator asserted that the change I have just considered was the only material one in the section, it makes no such change, but makes other changes which are far more important than that change would be; that it allows all ferry-boats, without any restriction or precaution, to carry all these explosive chemicals along with combustible materials, and that it permits all other steam-vessels not ferry-boats to carry the same things in all cases where there is no other public means of conveyance. The result is that this proposed section imports into the law these two enormities, as I think they are: First, all ferry-boats may carry men, women, and children, with gunpowder, nitro-glycerine, and loose hay piled on the boiler if they choose; and, second, all other steam-vessels carrying passengers may do the like provided there is no other public mode of conveyance. These two changes are introduced into this section. It introduces a good opportunity for patent-rights also, as I understand, in another part of it, but I do not speak of that now.

That there may be no mistake about petroleum, I call the attention of the Senate to line 20 of this section:

Nor shall oil of vitriol, nitric acid, or other dangerous chemicals be carried on such steamers, except on the decks or guards thereof.

That is this bill that we are now considering, exactly reversing what the Senator from Ohio said. Why do I say that? Because I turn and read in the existing law words which I beg the Senator to observe are omitted in the pending bill:

Or in such other safe part of the vessel as shall be prescribed by the inspector.

So that in place of the Senator's statement on Saturday being correct, the precise reverse is true. The existing law commits it to the discretion of the inspector to say where the location shall be in the case of these articles, and the section before us ties it up to the guards or decks; and yet I suppose the Senator from Ohio will vote for the section. He sustained it on Saturday by reason which turns out to be precisely the reverse, and on Monday when it is pointed out, I hardly dare hope the Senator will join me in making the amendment I offer. I have moved, and I shall ask the yeas and nays of the Senate upon it, to strike out this exception of ferry-boats. Western rivers are not the only places on which ferry-boats run. If our rights and interests here in this subject are to be tested by geography, I may be permitted at least to speak for those who literally by millions every day commit their lives to ferry-boats, and to insist that on the arms of the sea about New York, on the Hudson, Saint Lawrence, and other Rivers, pressed hay, gunpowder, nitro-glycerine, petroleum, shall not be carried anywhere on steamboats where men, women, and children are carried. That is my motion, and I think that any interest which is represented here will be able to survive without conferring upon ferry-boats the right to carry all these death-dealing materials. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, I think it would be a misfortune to the public if the present law should be so modified that such articles as those enumerated in the first part of section 4 could be carried in ferry-boats—"loose hay, loose cotton or loose hemp, camphene, nitro-glycerine, naphtha, benzine, coal-oil, crude or refined petroleum, or other like explosive burning fluids." Across the bay of San Francisco there pass annually from a million and a half to two million ferry passengers. Over these ferry-boats go all the overland passengers. There are single trips of steamers, not speaking of mere excursions, where from five hundred to a thousand persons pass at once—men, women, and children. The steamers are large. Now, if upon these steamers that most destructive, treacherous, and death-dealing ingredient, nitro-glycerine, can be carried, there is reason to apprehend the most grave consequences. I know something with reference to that explosive agent. It is a very treacherous devil. Put it up as strongly as you may in tin or in iron, it will find vent through leak-holes; and if the leakage comes to any wood inclosing the boxes or otherwise, it makes it so highly inflammable and explosive that a slight tap, even of a boot heel or the jobbing of a pen-knife by a careless passenger into the wood, will cause an explosion setting off the whole mass, which carries death and destruction in a worse form than ever has been displayed upon any field of battle or by the most infernal ingenuity of man. There was a single case containing a few gallons of nitro-glycerine that a few years ago exploded in the express office of Wells, Fargo & Co., on Montgomery street, in San Francisco. A clerk or porter, not knowing the contents of the package, was turning it over and over so as to get it into the express office, and at the first revolution that it made on its coming down on the pavement it burst, tore the building to pieces, and the next one, killed a number of persons, and produced a shock like an earthquake in that city. It is an explosive so treacherous, so difficult to handle, that although useful in the mines, although powerful, so that if it could be used with any degree of safety the miners would gladly avail themselves of it, they are afraid to use it on account of the frequent loss of life from it on account of the impossibility, without the very greatest care, of handling such a substance except at the risk of almost certain death to those who handle it. The endeavor has been made to disguise it in different forms, to modify it by sawdust, which heats it and leaves it still explosive, by importing a silicious fluid and mixing it with that; and yet, after all these precautions, a few weeks ago there was a terrific explosion of this substance which had been thought to be tamed, called "giant-powder."

Now, to allow nitro-glycerine in its worst form, in its most fiendish shape, to be carried under the feet of five hundred or a thousand men, women, and children crossing the bay of San Francisco, where it is largely imported for the purpose of making this very "giant-powder," is simply to put an element of destruction into that community that may and is certain to destroy the lives of scores, hundreds, and thousands of people. Sir, on behalf of the people who travel across the bay of San Francisco to and from Oakland, and upon the river Sacramento, I protest against this exception of ferry-boats carrying passengers. I protest that you ought not to put that death-dealing ingredient under the feet of innocent people whose lives will be continually exposed by such legislation as this. I say that it ought to arouse the attention of the Senate. I say that that exception ought not to be allowed, and the same rule should be applied to them as is applied to other steamers, because here, in the most condensed and rapid form, are collected large numbers of persons who are crowded on these boats. They are not like the steamers which take long trips, where there are fewer passengers, where they can go to sleep, and where the number of passengers is usually reckoned by the sleeping accommodations on board, but they are steamers which carry as many persons generally as can stand upon the available space of the different decks. As their trips are short, the inconvenience of being compelled to stand up is not very great, and consequently they pile them in by hundreds; and right in the midst of this dense mass of humanity you will put this infernal explosive material in order that they may be blown into eternity. I say that is not wise legislation; I say that it is unwise legislation; and were it in almost any other presence I would say that it seems to me it is a criminal carelessness which would amend a law that provides a safeguard in particulars like these, and allow this death-dealing ingredient to be placed in the body of these masses of people. I therefore join most heartily with the Senator from New York in this amendment, and trust it may be adopted.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from California that Congress ought not to provide for creating any more earthquakes in San Francisco by artificial means, for nature herself has as much of that kind of amusement there as is agreeable to the people. I quite agree with him, too, that nitro-glycerine is a very powerful and very dangerous thing, indeed so powerful and so dangerous that an old keg which once contained it and which had lain down there at the presidio near the city, as I was told by an officer who witnessed the thing, which had lain out of doors for six months, happening to be kicked by a soldier put an end to that soldier and left very little of him ever to be found.

The object of this bill, however, in this respect does not seem to me to deserve all the denunciation it has received. Let us look at it in a practical way. The bill excepts ferry-boats from the operation of the section. Why that? The bill reads:

That, except on ferry-boats, no loose hay, (unless for feeding stock on board,) loose cotton, or loose hemp, camphene, nitro-glycerine, naphtha, benzene, benzole, coal-oil, crude or refined petroleum, or other like explosive burning-fluids, shall be carried as freight.

Let us see what the law now is:

That no loose hay, loose cotton, or loose hemp, camphene, nitro-glycerine, naphtha, benzene, benzole, coal-oil, crude or refined petroleum, or other like explosive burning-fluids, or like dangerous articles, shall be carried as freight or used as stores on any steamer carrying passengers, &c.

That is the present law. The bill excepts ferry-boats from the operation of that. Why? Because it is utterly impracticable for the ferry-boat men to comply with that law. In the very case which the Senator supposes it is impracticable. A ferry-boat does not have a manifest; a ferry-boat does not have a clearance; a ferry-boat does not have a bill of lading every trip that she makes from Oakland to San Francisco or from San Francisco to Oakland, from Jersey City to New York City or on her return; but a steamer not a ferry-boat has a bill of lading, has a manifest for every particle of cargo on board, and the person delivering the cargo to her is bound to show what his cargo is and it appears in the bill of lading. Therefore the master of that steamer knows whether he is taking upon it benzene, or coal-oil, or naphtha, or nitro-glycerine; he knows it if there is no fraud practiced upon him, because the very bill of lading that he signs shows that that is the article, and therefore the law very properly requires that if he carries passengers he shall not carry these articles. When the shipper comes to him and says to him "I want you to carry for me so many barrels of petroleum," or so much benzene, or so much naphtha, or so much nitro-glycerine, the law tells him "Do not receive that freight" and he can refuse it. But what can the ferry-boat man do? A dray drives on a ferry-boat at Jersey City. It is full of merchandise; there is no bill of lading with it; there is no inspection of it. How can there be an inspection of it? Are you to have inspectors there to examine everything that is in that dray-load of merchandise to find whether or not there is some nitro-glycerine in it? A man may carry enough nitro-glycerine in his pocket to blow up a ferry-boat and send all those five hundred people of whom the Senator from California speaks, to kingdom come. Are you to inspect every man's pocket on a ferry-boat between Oakland and San Francisco? How can you do it? Where is the law that authorizes you to do it? It is simply because this law cannot be carried into effect in regard to this class of boats which give no bill of lading, which have no manifest, in respect to whose freight there is no inspection and can be no inspection, that they are left out of the operation of the bill, and they make trips every five minutes and the people are ready to mob them if they stay one minute later than their time.

But, sir, one word as to the remarks of the Senator from New York in reference to what I said on Saturday. I shall not take up much time. If the Senator has pointed out any mistake into which I fell, I am obliged to him for it. I have no claims to infallibility, and I do not know that any one can achieve any very great amount of renown or greatness by proving that I have made mistakes on more occasions than one, and yet I do not think I made any mistake at all on Saturday. It does not seem to me so. I spoke of the law requiring these articles to be carried on the fore-castle or guards of the boat. I did not mean by that to say that the statute did it, although perhaps I was so understood.

Mr. CONKLING. Which articles?

Mr. THURMAN. Refined petroleum. You think it is limited to that.

Mr. CONKLING. O, no.

Mr. THURMAN. Do you not say they are limited to that?

Mr. CONKLING. Yes; but the Senator's remark was not limited to that, nor is the section limited to that.

Mr. THURMAN. I agree to that, and I may have spoken too broadly, speaking on the haste of the occasion, in respect to that. If so, I am corrected; that is all.

Mr. CONKLING. I hope the Senator does not suppose that it was any part of my purpose to show that he had fallen into an error for the sake of proving that. I was in hopes that when I showed the Senator that instead of the section having the effect ascribed to it it had in that respect the reverse effect—

Mr. THURMAN. I do not understand that yet.

Mr. CONKLING. When I showed that it went to diminish and not to enlarge the discretion of the inspector, and when I went further and showed him that it involved that among other things which the Senator from California has pointed out and still other surprising relaxations of the present rule, I was in hopes that the Senator would recall his judgment; but I beg to assure him that no part of my motive was to convict him of having fallen into an error.

Mr. THURMAN. If the Senator had allowed me when I requested it to explain what is the difference between the law and this section in that particular, he would have seen at once what that difference is, and why I think this bill is better than the law. I grant that the board of inspectors have power under the existing law to prescribe where these articles shall be carried when they are permitted to be carried at all. I never undertook to deny that. That is what I intended to assert. What difference does this provision to which I referred on Saturday in the bill operate? It provides in the act itself, so that there may be no mistake about it, that they may be carried in such places, and then "or in such other parts of the steamer as the local inspector shall designate in writing." That is the difference between it and the present law. Now the board of inspectors must make the rule. Then it is a universal rule. If this bill passes, the local inspector having reference to the particular vessel under his eye, seeing her make, her build, her conformation, may say "on this vessel called the Mary Jones these articles may be carried in a particular place" and he may say in regard to another vessel, the Sally Ann, they shall be carried in a different place, because each vessel has its own individuality. That is the object of this section. Instead of requiring that absolute rule which must be general when promulgated by the whole board of inspectors, it allows in this particular case the local inspector, who has knowledge of the vessel—the very man who inspects her—the very man who knows all about her, to say where is the safest place on that vessel; and that is just where it ought to be.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not think it is a satisfactory answer to the considerations which I have urged, that in particulars which the law as it at present exists does not cover there may be mischief done to passengers on ferry-boats because a man may carry in his pocket nitro-glycerine or some explosive fluid and endanger the lives of the many. I think that is not an argument why the bars should be thrown down completely and all restrictions taken off and on these ferry-boats, where so many people are continually traveling backward and forward, the most destructive agencies should be allowed to be carried.

The law as it at present exists must be a restriction to a certain degree upon the carrying of these explosive compounds. If it is a restriction in any degree, so far it is useful; and my objection is to taking off a restriction. The people who own ferry-boats and run them, finding that perhaps they could make more money provided they could carry on a more dangerous business—dangerous to their passengers—complain that this is an oppression on them. If it is an oppression on them, it must be because it is effectual, because it restrains them from doing a dangerous business. Now, we desire to restrain them from doing a dangerous business, because it is dangerous to the lives of innocent people who trust themselves to their care. The argument of the Senator from Ohio therefore does not reach the point which I made.

I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to supplement the remarks of the Senator from California, by saying that there is another complete answer to the Senator from Ohio. Every common carrier is bound by law to accept any goods offered to him for carriage, which the law permits any person to offer. As this provision now stands, every common carrier who runs a ferry-boat has a right to refuse to permit nitro-glycerine, camphene, and these other combustibles to be brought upon or near his boat. Enact this section and you strike down that barrier behind which he may intrench himself. My honorable friend from Ohio shakes his head, and I hope there is more argument in it than there is in the speech which he made here. I say it does. Enact this provision and every common carrier is just as much bound running a ferry-boat to receive gunpowder or nitro-glycerine wheeled on with a wheel-barrow as he is to receive a barrel of flour. When you remit the carrier to the common law and re-enforce the common law with a statute which by exclusion says that he shall carry nitro-glycerine, why is he not bound to receive it?

Mr. THURMAN. Does the Senator want an answer?

Mr. CONKLING. I do indeed.

Mr. THURMAN. I say that if I establish a ferry from Jersey City to New York I may limit it only and entirely to passengers, and no man in the world has a right to demand that I carry anything but a human being. I say further that a stage company are common carriers, and the Senator from New York has no right to thrust into a stage-coach a keg of guano for the olfactories of the people traveling therein under the idea that a stage-coach company is a common carrier.

Mr. CONKLING. The Senator's remark is full of wit and full of technical sharpness and full of legal untruth, as I can demonstrate. Now the Senator tries to impale me on the technicality of a ferry charter. To use a phrase to which he often treats us, "that won't do." Ferry charters are rarely so limited. Does the Senator from Ohio suppose that every tug that plies in the waters of New York is tied up by State license to carry passengers alone albeit she is authorized to carry passengers? Not at all. She is a common carrier, burdened with all the obligations and invested with all the immunities of a common carrier at common law, except so far as the statute has altered them. I ask the Senator from California, who is usually very accurate, whether it is true that all the vessels plying in the harbor of San Francisco are tied up by State charters confining them to carrying passengers if they do carry them, and not allowing them to carry freight?

Mr. SARGENT. Certainly not.

Mr. CONKLING. Very well; there is the answer and a sufficient answer to the Senator from Ohio.

Now, Mr. President, what do we find? As the Senator from California says, here is a complaint that a restriction is onerous because it applies to ferry-boats. Up gets the Senator from Ohio and he says "not at all; it is mere brutum fulmen; it has no force at all." Why? Because a ferry-boat does not carry a manifest. O, Mr. President, every ferry-boat owner who does not want to carry smuggled goods across the Saint Lawrence has his own mode of finding whether those goods are smuggled although he does not carry a manifest in the particular case. Every ferry-boat runner who does not wish to carry gunpowder, nitro-glycerine, oil of vitriol, benzine, benzole, camphene, and other explosive chemicals has those olfactories which the Senator fears might be offended in a stage-coach by the indication of guano; he has other means of finding out. Now the Senator proposes to say that he need not exercise the wit which nature gave him, he need not open his eyes and see, he need not interpose even if he is told in so many words that they are explosive chemicals; but on the contrary we shall strike down that provision of law which alone today enables him to refuse unless, as in sporadic cases, he has something in his charter behind which he can hide.

It is manifest that now there is a provision, lacking if you please in complete and thorough efficiency, in spite of which chemicals may be carried on ferry-boats, in spite of which men and women may be blown to destruction. But be that restriction more or less, it is useful, it tends in the right direction, and the Senator from Ohio proposes to strike it down, he appearing as the champion of river-going steamers traversing the rivers of the West. The application to them in any case is but slight. The application here is to ferry-boats, as described in this bill; and the description greatly enhances the number of boats known in common parlance as ferry-boats, covering in the language of this bill—

All steamers running under charter or license as such from State, county, or municipal authorities, between special points or places.

Not necessarily opposite to each other on rivers or bays, but plying to and fro between specified termini. Every such vessel without let or hindrance, with or without manifest, may carry all these articles mixed up with women and children. I say, Mr. President, it is a violation of humanity and of the laws of common sense.

But I have said enough to bring it to the attention of the Senate, and I take my seat feeling that I have acquitted myself of one part of my duty, however the Senators to whom the appeal is made to stand by this bill may put it through without the dot of an i or the cross of a t, but I hope every Senator who does so will be able to find some broader standing for his feet than the argument which has been made by the honorable Senator from Ohio.

Mr. HAGER. Mr. President, in examining this fourth section I see that there are classifications made by the provisions contained therein with regard to these explosive materials. As the section commences, "except on ferry-boats, no loose hay," &c., shall be carried. In a subsequent part of the section there is an exception to these general provisions:

Nor shall gunpowder be carried on any such vessel, except in case of special license granted by inspectors as hereinafter provided.

The proper remedy for the evil suggested by the Senator from New York, according to my notions, would be to increase the provisions contained in the latter schedule that I have referred to; that is, the exceptional part. I see no objection to enlarging these exceptional articles by proposing to amend where the word "gunpowder" occurs in the sixteenth line, by adding that no other explosive material shall be carried unless on license granted by the inspectors. Nitro-glycerine, as we all understand, is a liquid that is not necessarily explosive—not so much so as gunpowder; but I happened to escape with my life by about one minute when the occurrence took place at San Francisco which has been referred to. The explosion took place in the express office of Wells & Fargo. A club-house above that was filled with gentlemen and the explosion took place underneath and a great many, as we know, were killed. It was not an explosion, though, in consequence of ignition, but in consequence of concussion in opening the box containing the nitro-glycerine. One of the cans had got opened in some way and saturated the pine wood and by concussion, resulting from the use of a hammer, the explosion took place. We understand that for nitro-glycerine to explode requires concussion, unless there be an accidental cause, rather than ignition by fire.

Now, to obviate the objection that is made here by the Senator from New York and by my colleague, I propose to strike out "nitro-glycerine" in the place where it occurs in line 3 and substitute it in line 16, and amend the section so as to read:

Nor shall gun or other explosive powder or nitro-glycerine be carried on any such vessel except in case of special license granted by inspectors as hereinafter provided.

To require that ferry-boats passing between New York and Jersey City, for instance, should exclude everything that is here enumerated would be a great hardship upon those who are dealing between the different cities where they have to cross a river. The amendment I propose I think will effect the purpose my colleague and the Senator from New York have in view, and then the enumerated articles here may be enlarged to any extent that Senators see fit to transfer them from the first paragraph down to the one that I propose to amend. My amendment is to strike out "nitro-glycerine" in the third line and strike out "and gunpowder" in the sixteenth line and substitute "gun or other explosive powder or nitro-glycerine," so that in case these articles are carried upon any of these vessels it shall be by the license of an inspector.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. BOGY. I did not distinctly hear the amendment suggested by the Senator from California; but I take it for granted that it is an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from New York; otherwise it is not pending before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment suggested by the Senator from California is not pending.

Mr. BOGY. The object of the amendment offered by the Senator from New York is to bring under the same regulations that are intended for steamboats on long voyages all the ferry-boats of this country that ply from one place to another over the little streams throughout the United States. The amendment is plausible, argued in the way it has been argued by the Senator from New York and the Senator from California; that is, that these materials are really very combustible and very dangerous and that human life should not be thus exposed. In the abstract this is very true; but I say it is simply ridiculous to make the same law for ferry-boats that is made for steamboats running from Saint Louis to New Orleans or from any other distant point.

Mr. SARGENT. Allow me to ask a question. I call attention to page 78, to the wording of the 17th, 18th, and 19th lines; and I inquire of the Senator whether these words "ferry-boats" are understood to include—

Steamers running under charter or license as such, from State, county, or municipal authorities, between special points or places.

That is, specially fixed points and places. The definition would not embrace steamers running from Saint Louis to New Orleans, provided those were the fixed special points between which they were to ply.

Mr. BOGY. When we get to page 78—and the way we are traveling we shall not be likely to reach it before doomsday—

Mr. SCOTT. Allow me to make a suggestion. Does the Senator from California suppose that the city authorities of Saint Louis or the State authorities of Missouri have the right to grant licenses to run outside the State? It must be confined to termini within the State granting the license.

Mr. SARGENT. That may be a complete answer to my question where a State line is crossed, but that would be a ferry-boat under this definition which passes from one extremity of a State to another, which in many cases, as in my own State, would be hundreds of miles.

Mr. SCOTT. But the license is to a ferry-boat "as such."

Mr. SARGENT. "Running between special points." This enlarges the meaning of "ferry-boats."

Mr. BOGY. I think the objection raised by the Senator from California has been very well answered by the Senator from Pennsylvania. I repeat that all ferry-boats have to be licensed by State or municipal authority, and the points have to be designated; but no ferry-boat will be licensed from Saint Louis to New Orleans. A ferry-boat means a craft intended to cross a river from one point to another in the shortest possible convenient way. That is the common meaning of a ferry-boat, and as such these boats are licensed by the different State and town authorities, and they can be nothing else. Therefore, with this understanding that a ferry-boat is a craft intended to cross a river, large or small, from one point to another nearly opposite, I say that it would be simply ridiculous to make the same law that is applicable to a steamboat having long voyages to perform applicable to these ferry-boats. A ferry-boat as such carries no freight; it carries nothing that is called freight. I carries a load, a wagon-load or a dray-load, and in that wagon or dray-load there may be a great variety of materials, and it would be impossible for the owner of that ferry-boat to compel an enumeration of those things that may be upon that dray-load or wagon-load. Again, ferry-boats are compelled to carry everything on all the streams of this country, from Cincinnati to Covington, from Saint Louis to East Saint Louis, and so on.

But at last the objection in regard to camphene, benzole, benzine, whisky, and powder, and all those things which are explosive, lies in the municipal regulations of our towns and cities. These things cannot be carried in the streets unless under certain rules and regulations; they cannot be taken into the houses in cities except under certain rules and regulations. Society protects itself in that way; and it cannot be supposed that the owners of ferry-boats would permit loose powder or benzine or benzole not properly protected to be carried on their boats if they knew it, and how can they know it? Can the owner call on a man who comes there with a dray-load of merchandise going from New York to Jersey City to enumerate to him what he may have in that dray-load? The thing is an impossibility. Hence it would be perfectly absurd to make the same law applicable to a ferry-boat which is applicable to a boat having long voyages to perform.

Again, is a steamboat compelled under the common law, as the Senator from New York says, to take on board everything which may be offered to it?

Mr. CONKLING. Which is lawfully offered to it; yes, sir.

Mr. BOGY. That qualification "lawfully" means a great deal. I say that under the common law the owner is not compelled to carry everything which may be lawfully offered to him. It may be too dangerous. If he is offered liquid fire in a wooden vessel, certainly the owner of the ferry-boat would have a perfect right to refuse it because it would endanger life and property. But there is another rule of common sense governing these things. The owners of ferry-boats have their property at stake; the persons on those boats have their lives at stake; and the municipal regulations regulate these things, and taking everything into account society is well protected. It may be that from San Francisco to a place opposite on that broad bay the trip is very long, but even there ferry-boats are well protected, except in regard to the fact that you cannot tell what may be in the load of a wagon or dray that is on the boat. But as to the lives of the passengers, they are protected in this very bill by requiring all these ferry-boats to have hand-pumps and steam-pumps to extinguish fires in the event that a fire shall take place. If there should be an explosion, as a matter of course they would not be well protected.

The Senator from California argues the matter as if persons would carry on these ferry-boats very explosive material in the most exposed condition. That view is not correct. I say that it is impossible to make the same law for ferry-boats that is made for other boats. Ferry-boats carry no freight; they carry a load. They are bound to carry loose hay, because it is so made up for retail business, and a ferry-boat is a boat that necessarily has but a very short voyage, running from one place to another place opposite or nearly opposite.

There are other sections of the bill that amply protect this thing, and I hope that the amendment will not be adopted. I can very well see that it strikes the mind of Senators as something very dangerous to permit ferry-boats to carry such dangerous articles, but in point of fact there is but little danger, because of course you can transport those things into cities and towns only under municipal regulations; you cannot put them on board a boat unless they have undergone an inspection somewhere, and to require these strict rules would destroy the business of all the ferry-boats of the country.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I have not given as much attention to this bill as I ought to have done considering its importance; but I confess from what I have seen of it that I think a good many amendments ought to be made to it besides the one that the Senator from New York has proposed.

It is only a few years ago that under the stress of some prodigious accident that had happened we undertook to guard the people who were riding in ferry-boats in cities and elsewhere from the extreme danger to which they were put by the carrying of explosive substances on such vessels, and we made the law as stringent as it is now. Here it is proposed by this bill, under the definition of ferry-boats and under the provisions of the fourth section as to what ferry-boats may do, to mitigate that stringency to a very large degree; and the question that occurs to me is what evidence have we of extreme injury to the owners of vessels which should lead us to expose to greater risk than they are now exposed to the citizens of the United States who everywhere, upon our rivers and in our bays, are constantly obliged to put their lives, without being able to stop for an examination, into the hands of those who run steamers.

The Senator from Missouri says, why, here is private interest enough to protect the public, because the owners of boats do not wish to blow them up. Why, Mr. President, all human experience has shown that private interest is not a sufficient safeguard against public peril in respect of a great class of the operations of society. Private interest is not enough certainly, in manufacturing towns in any civilized country, to protect the youth of those towns from being overworked by too long hours, from being under-fed and improperly taken care of in respect to the ventilation of such buildings, or in protecting the lives of the operatives in factories against fires that may take place, although the destruction of a factory by fire might of course and generally does entail ruin upon the owner of it. And yet, unless State laws compel such factories to limit their hours for the labor of certain classes of young people, unless State laws compel them to have certain means of fire escape, human experience has shown that you do not have security enough. So that the argument of private interest in securing travelers and people who are obliged to place themselves upon vessels suddenly and without having an opportunity to go to a steamboat inspector to see that it is all right, or without having the right to inspect the character of whatever may be laden upon the vessel to see that that is all right, is not very conclusive and persuasive.

If we are legislating for the preservation of life, for the security of the public against the dangers to which the temptation to profit may expose them through the operations of these vessels, instead of letting down from the securities that we now have, we ought to intensify and strengthen those securities; and I am astonished, I must confess, at this bill in these respects being pressed with so much pertinacity in the absence of any definite information which is laid before us that in any given number of cases it has been found that the existing regulations bore too severely upon the ship-owners and too favorably for the people who are to travel.

Mr. BOGY. Will the Senator from Vermont permit me one word to show how hard it is to comply with the present law? I know of my own knowledge that the ferry-boats in my own section of the country, and I believe throughout the whole country, violate the law every day now. They cannot comply with the law. They are bound to carry loose hay; they do not know what is loaded on a dray or a wagon; they cannot tell, it is impossible because there is no enumeration of the articles on those drays and wagons. They carry by the load, and they do now break the law every day continually.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, Mr. President, it strikes me that the officers of a ferry company that stand at the gate to take their penny a man and their twenty-five cents a team, or whatever it may be, ought to have eyes sharp enough to tell whether a dray stopping to pay its twenty-five cents to the guardian is loaded with loose hay or whether it is loaded with pig-iron. I should think that most people intrusted with that sort of duty might be able to tell what is laden upon a cart. Of course, it is just possible that some loose hay might be hidden in the midst of a bulk of other things and boxes so that it would not be easy to perceive it. That is possible, just as it is possible under the customs laws, that in the center of a hoghead of sugar there may be a quart of nutmegs or a piece of silk wrapped up and inclosed in tin or lead or something that would preserve it, and it get in. Violations of the law of that kind occur, but they are not violations which the necessity of the case imposes. I take it, it would not be a violation of the law for a steamboat owner, if he employed proper guardians at his ferry-house gates, to see that drays did not bring on nitroglycerine, did not bring on loose hay, did not bring on a variety of these things. If it turned out that in a given case these forbidden articles were so secreted that he with the exercise of just diligence failed to see it, he would not be guilty of a crime. I do not think that that argument ought to have very great weight. There is no statute of the United State or of any State that I know of which is not violated more or less every day somewhere. That does not prove that it is not a good statute. It may prove that it is a very good one; it certainly does not prove that it is a bad one.

The argument that we ought to mitigate the affirmative securities that we now have upon the theory that it sometimes happens that they are violated, is one which does not commend itself to my understanding. No man has the right to engage in the business of running a ferry except under conditions which are in conformity with the security of the masses of the people who are obliged to travel on ferry-boats or who are obliged to be at the place where they land whether they are traveling or not, which furnish security for people on other vessels and ships in crowded harbors where ferry-boats are lying at anchor and other vessels are, and through which the ferry-boats when under way are constantly passing. That is our paramount duty, as it appears to me; and therefore no moderate amount of inconvenience, if there could be any amount which would justify it, should justify us in authorizing the proprietors of these vessels which are operating for profit, to make their profit at any hazard at all that human foresight can provide against to the body of the community who are brought in contact with them. It seems to me that is a just principle. If it be so, instead of letting down the bars which have now been put up by Congress after a careful investigation of the subject, we ought rather to strengthen them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New York, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 12, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Conkling, Edmunds, Flanagan, Gilbert, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Ransom, and Sargent—12.

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Bogy, Boreman, Chandler, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Ferry of Michigan, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hitchcock, Howe, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morton, Norwood, Oglesby, Ramsey, Robertson, Schurz, Scott, Thurman, Wadleigh, and Wright—30.

ABSENT—Messrs. Boutwell, Brownlow, Cameron, Carpenter, Clayton, Conover, Dennis, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Patterson, Pease, Pratt, Saulsbury, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Tipton, Washburn, West, and Wiudom—30.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. MORTON. Will not the Senator withdraw that motion until I can submit a report?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Certainly.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. MORTON. I am instructed by the Committee on Privileges and Elections to submit a report in regard to the credentials of P. B. S. Pinchback to a seat in this body, which I ask to have printed; and I give notice that at an early day I will call it up for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. ANTHONY.) The report will be printed, if there be no objection.

The report concluded with the following resolution:

Resolved, That P. B. S. Pinchback be admitted as a Senator from the State of Louisiana for the term of six years beginning on the 4th of March, 1873.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. There is a question of order upon that report. That report, I am advised, purports to be the report of a majority of the committee, and as a member of the committee I raise this question of order, whether, as it is not the agreement of five members of the committee, it can be received as a report of the committee. That report is submitted by four members of that committee. There are nine upon it; and I raise the question of order whether it can be received as a majority report of that committee.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to make a single remark so that there may be no misunderstanding. When the question was considered by the committee there were seven members present; five would have been a quorum; there were two over a quorum. The report was agreed to by four out of the seven.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. That is true.

Mr. MORTON. The point my friend makes is that it requires a majority of all the members of the committee, whether they are present or not, to make a report. I will say to my friend that I never heard of that before. He may be right in it, but I think not.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I have been advised that I am right. It is a question just sprung on me, to which I have given no examination, and therefore I cannot speak as to the precedents; but the fact is that but four members of the committee agreed to the report, when we know that it comprises nine, and therefore it cannot be received as a majority report from that committee.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. I should like to ask the Senator from Maryland how many members of the committee were present.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Seven, as stated by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. FERRY, of Michigan. There was then a quorum when the subject was considered?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. A quorum was present.

Mr. MORTON. I desire to correct my friend. I do not submit it as the report of the majority. I submit it as the report of the committee.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. It is certainly not the report of the committee. It cannot be the report of the committee.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If the Senator from New Jersey will waive his motion, I desire to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A question of order is pending.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to have an understanding of the status of this question. It is a new question to me, I confess. The Senator from Indiana very truly says that he makes the report of the committee, for whenever a majority of a committee agree to a report, that is the report of the committee. The majority makes the report of the committee, but the minority may submit their views, and for the convenience of speech we speak of the report of the majority and the report of a minority. Now, the point is made whether four out of a committee of nine can make a report as the report of that committee. It is said they can do it, because there were but seven in the committee at the time the report was agreed upon. Now, here is a point that troubles me: I do not know any right that we have to know how many there were in that committee at the time the report was agreed upon.

Mr. MORTON. The Senator from Maryland is responsible for that statement.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know what right we have to know who were there. This report as I understand is signed by four gentlemen who are members of the committee. They are not a majority. I do not know that we have any right to go into an inquiry whether there were seven or nine present at the time that report was agreed upon. It may be said, and perhaps truly said, that it is not necessary for anybody to sign the report; that if it is presented by the chairman of the committee or by a member of the committee as the report of the committee prima facie it is so.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not understand the report to be signed.

Mr. THURMAN. I understand it to be signed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No; it is made as the report of the committee, I understand.

Mr. THURMAN. I understand that it is signed by four members of the committee.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. It was agreed to by four.

Mr. THURMAN. At all events, I rose to say that I wish the objection to be considered as pending so that when we come to that report we may consider in the first place the objection that has been made to it, whether it is a report of the committee or not.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think this question is too important to have it pending at any other time than now. Here is a committee of nine, and it appears to us, as we have a right to know on any question of the regularity of its procedure, that seven participated in a certain deliberation, a quorum of the committee and a majority of that quorum direct that a bill shall be reported and it is reported by the chairman. Now the point of order is made that that is not the report of the committee. There is nothing in the point at all, and it ought to be overruled at once.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. I know one thing very well, that whenever a measure of any importance is before us the majority of the committee is always consulted as to its approval of the proposition. I never knew it to be otherwise. Can four members make a report from a committee of nine? I know in my own limited experience of committees the endeavor has always been to secure the concurrence of a majority. Knowing that this report only received the approval of four members of the committee when it was presented as the report of the committee, I felt it my duty to raise the question, to know whether the Senate regarded that as a report at all upon the part of that committee. It is the report of four members of that committee, a minority of the committee. The real assumption in law would be that a majority of that committee would be adverse to the report. In fact I cannot speak about matters that occurred in committee; it is not right on this floor to do so; but we know that there is trouble in respect to that very report, and that five members of the committee cannot be had to make a report in favor of Pinchback to a seat on this floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that a quorum of a committee is competent to transact business and that a majority of that quorum represents the committee. The Chair therefore thinks that the point of order is not well taken.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I renew my motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Before that motion is put, I beg leave to state that I will submit the views of the minority of the committee.

BOUNTIES.

The SPEAKER. When the House adjourned last Monday it had under consideration a motion to suspend the rules and pass a bill (H. R. No. 4667) presented by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. WARD] granting bounties to heirs of soldiers who enlisted in the service of the United States during the war for the suppression of the rebellion for a less period than one year and who were killed or have died by reason of such service. The motion to suspend the rules was seconded, and the question on suspending the rules was ordered to be taken by yeas and nays. The bill will be again read.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the heirs of any soldier who was killed or died while in the military service of the United States, in the line of duty, during the war for the suppression of the rebellion, whose period of enlistment was for less than one year, or who shall have since died by reason of wounds received or disease contracted while in such service, shall be entitled to receive the same bounties as if said soldier had enlisted for three years: Provided, That the heirs so entitled shall be such only as are named in the first section of the act of July 11, 1862: And provided further, That nothing in this act shall authorize the payment on account of any soldier who has received bounty from the Government of the United States.

Mr. DUNNELL. In order to make this bill harmonious with other pension laws the word "heirs" should be stricken out and the words "widow or minor children" inserted.

Mr. WARD, of New Jersey. They are included in this bill.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. Is not this bill already before the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from New Jersey will consent to strike out the words "less than one year" and insert "one year or a less period." Unless this change be made the bill will not apply to one year's men.

The SPEAKER. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the motion to suspend the rules; and it will require unanimous consent to modify the proposition.

Mr. GUNCKEL. Will not the gentleman from New Jersey consent to fix a day for considering all these bounty bills—the whole subject of equalizing bounties?

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. O, no; we want to pass this now.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does this bill apply to "heirs" or "children?"

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. It applies to the same persons that are mentioned in the act of 1862.

Mr. SPEER. I think there is no serious objection to this bill. I hope we shall not consume time by taking the yeas and nays.

Mr. FORT. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be modified by inserting before "heirs" the words "widow and minor children."

Mr. WARD, of New Jersey. Widows are included under this bill. The bill refers to the act of July 11, 1862.

Mr. FORT. But we all know what strange rulings are sometimes made in the Pension Office.

Mr. WARD, of New Jersey. But the bill is very explicit. It refers to the act of July 11, 1862, the language of which I ask the Clerk to read.

Mr. FORT. What is the objection to inserting "minors?"

Mr. WARD, of New Jersey. Because they are already included.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That said bounty shall be paid to the following persons, and in the order following, and to no other person, to wit: First, to the widow of such deceased soldier, if there be one; second, if there be no widow, then to the children of such deceased soldier, share and share alike; third, if such soldier left neither a widow or child or children, then and in that case such bounty shall be paid to the following persons, provided they be residents of the United States, to wit: First, to his father; or, if he shall not be living or has abandoned the support of his family, then to the mother of such soldier; and if there be neither father nor mother as aforesaid, then such bounty shall be paid to the brothers and sisters of the deceased soldier, resident as aforesaid.

Mr. GUNCKEL. The insertion of the word "minor," so that the benefits of the act shall extend only to minor children, would save $100,000.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. But that would make an invidious distinction among different soldiers who gave their lives for the preservation of the Republic; and that we ought not to do in our legislation.

Mr. MAYNARD. It seems to me there is no difficulty about this matter. The bill provides for granting certain benefits to the "heirs of any soldier," &c., and then the proviso declares that the heirs so entitled shall be such only as are named in the first section of the act of July 11, 1862, which as I understand has just been read.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. The bill puts the heirs of one dead soldier upon exactly the same level with those of every other dead soldier.

Mr. COTTON. I move to reconsider the vote by which the yeas and nays were ordered.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to; there being yeas 87, noes not counted.

The question recurring on ordering the yeas and nays, they were again ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 190, nays 21, not voting 78; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Albright, Averill, Banning, Barber, Barrere, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bland, Bradley, Bromberg, Buffinton, Bundy, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. So the rules were suspended, and the bill was passed.

During the vote—

Mr. GUNCKEL moved to dispense with the reading of the names.

The motion was agreed to.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

WINONA AND SAINT PETER RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. DUNNELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H. R. No. 3904) to carry into effect the provisions of the act of Congress approved January 10, 1873, entitled "An act for the extension of time to the Winona and Saint Peter Railroad Company for the completion of its road."

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the bill be read in full, so we may know what it is.

The bill, which was read, provides that whenever it shall be made to appear to the Secretary of the Interior that the railroad company completed its railroad referred to in the act of January 10, 1873, in the manner required by law, and within the time provided by the act, the Secretary is authorized and directed to certify to the State of Minnesota, for the benefit and use of the railroad company, the odd-numbered sections of land that may have been, or shall be, selected by the State for the construction of the railroad, within the limits of twenty miles on each side of the road to its terminus, as now constructed in the Territory of Dakota, but not exceeding, however, in amount of land per mile of such actually constructed road the quantity of land heretofore granted per mile of road by the acts of Congress granting lands to aid in the construction of the railroad, and which have not heretofore been reserved to the United States by any act of Congress or in any other manner by competent authority, for the purpose of aiding in any object of internal improvement, or for any other purpose whatsoever; provided, however, that the act shall in no way affect the rights of any bona fide settlers on any of the lands acquired prior to the receipt, by the register and receiver of the United States land office at Yankton, of the order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office of November 11, 1873, withdrawing the lands from sale and entry in the district.

Mr. SPEER. Does the gentleman from Minnesota propose to bring the bill before the House for consideration or to pass it?

Mr. DUNNELL. I have moved to suspend the rules and pass the bill. I can state in a few words the reason for it.

Mr. HOLMAN. The bill should be brought before the House and a reasonable time given for discussion.

Mr. SPEER. Let me suggest the gentleman change his motion and make the motion to suspend the rules to bring the bill before the House for consideration. It is too important a bill to be passed without discussion.

Mr. DUNNELL. I can state in a few minutes what the bill is.

Mr. SENER. I object to debate.

Mr. SPEER. This bill should not pass without the House knowing fully what it is.

Mr. DUNNELL. I will state in one minute to the House precisely what it is.

Mr. SENER. I have interposed objection.

Mr. DUNNELL. I move to suspend the rules only to bring the bill before the House for consideration.

Mr. BURCHARD. Then a majority can pass it.

Mr. COTTON. I hope reservation will be made that it is not to consume more than an hour.

Mr. DUNNELL. It will not take more than twenty minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. We insist on reasonable discussion of a bill of this character.

The SPEAKER. If the bill is to be brought before the House for consideration it had better be postponed to some other day.

Mr. DUNNELL. If we have thirty minutes for the consideration of the bill, I think I can show the House it ought to pass at once. It is all in a nutshell. I make the motion that the rules be suspended to bring the bill before the House and after half an hour that the vote be taken on its passage.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. If the rules are suspended and the bill is brought before the House for consideration at this time, will not a simple majority vote pass it?

The SPEAKER. It will require but a majority to pass it in that event.

The question recurred on seconding the motion to suspend the rules. The House divided; and there were—ayes 38, noes 52; no quorum voting.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. DUNNELL and Mr. HUNTON as tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 47, noes 54. So the motion to suspend the rules was not seconded.

Mr. DUNNELL. I ask unanimous consent to make a statement. Objection was made.

MISSISSIPPI LEVEES.

Mr. MOREY. I move to suspend the rules for the purpose of passing the following resolution:

Resolved, That when the river and harbor appropriation bill shall be reported to the House for action it shall be in order for the Committee on the Mississippi Levees to move an amendment thereto making an appropriation for closing the existing crevasses or breaks in the levees of the Mississippi River, and for making surveys for a permanent plan for reclamation of the alluvial basin of the Mississippi River subject to inundation, in conformity with estimates and recommendations made by the commission of engineers to the President of the United States, and transmitted by him to this House January 25, 1875.

The question was on seconding the motion to suspend the rules.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. PLATT, of New York, and Mr. MOREY were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 105, noes 41.

So the motion to suspend the rules was seconded.

The question recurred on suspending the rules and adopting the resolution.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a question of order. That matter has been—

Mr. MOREY. I object to debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan states that he rises to a question of order. The Chair will hear him.

Mr. CONGER. It is this: whether, that matter having been committed to a special committee, it is in order to load down the river and harbor bill with their report?

The SPEAKER. Under the rules there would be some point in that; but this is to suspend the rules.

Mr. CONGER. I hope the House will vote it down.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Let us have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 122, nays 73, not voting 94; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Arthur, Ashe, Atkins, Barrere, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Brown, Benjamin F. Butler, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Carpenter, Caulfield, Cessna, John B. Clark, Jr., Clymer, Clinton L. Cobb, Comingo, Cook, Crittenden, Crossland, Crutchfield, Darrall, Donnan, Dunnell, Durham, Farwell, Field, Foster, Freeman, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Hagans, Hancock, Benjamin W. Harris, Henry R. Harris, John T. Harris, Harrison, Hatcher, John B. McDill, McNulta, Milliken, Mills, Morey, Morrison, Myers, Negley, Niblack, O'Brien, Orr, Orth, Pelham, Phillips, Pierce, Thomas C. Platt, Pratt, Rainey, Randall, Rapier, Read, Richmond, Robbins, James C. Robinson, Milton Sayler, Schell, Isaac W. Scudder, Sener, Sheats, Sheldon, Sloan, H. Boardman Smith, J. Ambler Smith, William A. Smith, Snyder, Stone, Sypher, Thornburgh, Vance, Wallace, Walls, Wells, White, Whitehead, Whitthorne, John M. S. Williams, Ephraim K. Wilson, James Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, Wolfe, Wood, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—122.

NAYS—Messrs. Albright, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Burchard, Burleigh, Freeman Clarke, Stephen A. Cobb, Cougar, Cotton, Curtis, Dawes, Dobbins, Eames, Finck, Fort, Gooch, Gunckel, Eugene Hale, Hamilton, John W. Hazelton, Holman, Hoskins, Houghton, Kasson, Lawrence, Lawson, MacDougall, Merriam, Mitchell, Monroe, Moore, Neal, Packard, Packer, Page, Hosea W. Parker, Pendleton, James H. Platt, Jr., Ray, Ellis H. Roberts, James W. Robinson, Ross, Sawyer, Henry B. Sayler, Sessions, Shanks, Sherwood, Lazarus D. Shoemaker, Small, Smart, A. Herr Smith, John Q. Smith, Southard, Speer, Sprague, Storm, Strait, Strawbridge, Taylor, Charles R. Thomas, Christopher Y. Thomas, Thompson, Todd, Townsend, Tyner, Waldron, Charles W. Willard, George Willard, William Williams, and William B. Williams—73.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Archer, Averill, Banning, Barber, Barnum, Barry, Bromberg, Buckner, Bundy, Burrows, Cannon, Cason, Chittenden, Amos Clark, Jr., Clayton, Clements, Coburn, Corwin, Cox, Creamer, Crooke, Crounse, Danford, Davis, DeWitt, Duell, Eden, Eldredge, Frye, Garfield, Robert S. Hale, Harmer, Hathorn, Havens, Joseph R. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, Hendee, Herndon, E. Rockwood Hoar, George F. Hoar, Hooper, Hubbell, Hurlbat, Hyde, Kellogg, Kendall, Killinger, Lampont, Lansing, Lohand, Lowe, Luttrell, Marshall, McKee, McLenn, Nesmith, Niles, Nunn, O'Neill, Isaac C. Parker, Parsons, Perry, Phelps, Pike, Poland, Potter, Purman, Ransier, William R. Roberts, Rusk, John G. Schumaker, Scofield, Henry J. Scudder, Sloss, George L. Smith, Stanard, Standiford, Starkweather, Alexander H. Stephens, Charles A. Stevens, St. John, Stowell, Swann, Tremain, Waddell, Jasper D. Ward, Marcus L. Ward, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiteley, Wilber, Charles G. Williams, Willie, and Woodworth—94.

So (two-thirds not voting in favor thereof) the rules were not suspended.

WESTERN DISTRICT OF ARKANSAS.

Mr. SENER. I ask unanimous consent that the bill (H. R. No. 3621) to abolish the western district of Arkansas, and for other purposes, which has been returned from the Senate with amendments, be taken from the Speaker's table and referred with the amendments to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SENER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill and amendments were referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Justice; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN W. DOUGLASS.

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I move to suspend the rules to enable me to introduce, and the House to pass, a bill for the relief of John W. Douglass. This is the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The Committee on Claims have agreed to the bill, but have had no opportunity to report it.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to J. W. Douglass, late collector of internal revenue of the nineteenth district of Pennsylvania, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $5,948.68, and also to credit the said late collector, on his revenue account, the sum of $915.99, both sums amounting to $6,865.67, being balance of which said late Collector Douglass was robbed by a deputy collector, after deducting the amount realized from the sale of said deputy's property.

Mr. SPEER. Does my colleague say that this bill has been unanimously agreed to by the Committee on Claims?

Mr. SCOTFIELD. I do not know whether it has been agreed to by the committee unanimously. The gentleman who has it in charge informed me that the committee had agreed to it.

Mr. SPEER. Does my colleague have personal knowledge that Mr. Douglass was robbed of this money?

Mr. SCOTFIELD. It is within my personal knowledge that he was robbed, but I do not myself know of what amount.

The motion to suspend the rules having been seconded, the rules were suspended (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the bill (H. R. No. 4668) was passed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. PIERCE. I rise to submit a motion to suspend the rules.

Mr. GARFIELD. I give notice that in about fifteen minutes hence I will ask the House to go into Committee of the Whole on an appropriation bill.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON.

Mr. PIERCE. I move that the rules be suspended and that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 3923) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver certain condemned ordnance to the Joseph Warren Monument Association of Boston, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes, and that the same be passed.

The bill was read. It authorizes the Secretary of War to deliver to the Joseph Warren Monument Association of Boston, Massachusetts, ten pieces of condemned brass cannon, to be used in the erection of a statue of Joseph Warren, in Boston, Massachusetts.

THIRD TERM FOR PRESIDENT.

Mr. SPEER. I move that the rules be suspended and the following resolution be adopted:

Resolved, That in the judgment of this House the election of a President for a third term is against the traditions of the Republic, is in violation of the example of Washington, now sacred as law itself, and would be hazardous alike to the liberties of the people and the free institutions of the country.

Upon seconding the motion to suspend the rules tellers were ordered; and Mr. SPEER and Mr. MAYNARD were appointed.

Mr. CESSNA. Is it in order for me now—

Mr. SPEER. I object absolutely to debate.

Mr. SHEATS. Is it in order to move to lay that resolution on the table?

The SPEAKER. It is not while the House is dividing on seconding the motion, because the resolution is not before the House.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 57, noes 102.

So the motion to suspend the rules was not seconded.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I move that the rules be suspended and the following resolution adopted:

Resolved, That the rules be so suspended that House bill No. 3341, entitled "A bill to equalize the bounties of soldiers who served in the late war for the Union," shall be reported by the Committee on Military Affairs on Saturday, the 13th day of February, at two o'clock p. m., and be considered in the House, and that the previous question shall be called upon the same at four o'clock on that day.

I will state that this is simply a proposition to consider the question. Mr. MAYNARD. I suggest to the gentleman that inasmuch as this bill is well understood by the House, he change his motion so as to bring the bill before the House for consideration now.

Mr. GUNCKEL. O, no; this motion will bring the whole subject before the House.

Mr. MAYNARD. But the House understands it perfectly well now.

Mr. SPEER. Will amendments be in order?

Mr. COBURN. All amendments will be admissible.

Upon seconding the motion to suspend the rules tellers were ordered; and Mr. GUNCKEL and Mr. KASSON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 79, noes not counted.

So the motion was seconded.

The question was taken on suspending the rules; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the resolution was agreed to.

SENECA INDIANS IN NEW YORK.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I move, on behalf of the Committee on Indian Affairs, that the rules be so suspended that the House shall non-concur in the amendments of the Senate to the bill now on the Speaker's table to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservation and to confirm existing leases, and ask a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

The question was put; and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the motion was agreed to.

ELECTION OF REPRESENTATIVES IN CONGRESS.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the rules be suspended and the resolution adopted which I send to the Clerk's desk. I will state that it proposes a change in the law which is absolutely necessary, because it would be impossible for that law to be carried out without a change in the constitutions of several States so as to carry it into effect. I therefore ask that this resolution be adopted.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That it shall be in order in Committee of the Whole pending the consideration of an appropriation bill to consider an amendment for the modification, suspension, or repeal of section 25 of the Revised Statutes, regulating the time for holding elections of Representatives in Congress.

Mr. DAWES. That provision of the law makes the day for the election of Representatives in Congress uniform in all the States after the year 1876. In order to carry out that law the constitutions of several States would have to be changed between now and then.

Mr. NIBLACK. I understand that the record in relation to the law which requires the election of Representatives in Congress to be held on the same day in the several States, does not disclose the fact that that bill ever passed the House. There seems to have been some mistake about it.

Mr. DAWES. I am so informed, and I suggest this as the easiest mode of avoiding the difficulty.

Mr. MAYNARD. That is a very remarkable statement, that the constitutions of the States can interfere with the election of Representatives in Congress.

Mr. DAWES. It would be a remarkable statement if I had made it. Mr. MAYNARD. Then if the gentleman did not make it he said nothing worthy of consideration.

Upon seconding the motion to suspend the rules tellers were ordered; and Mr. DAWES and Mr. STORM were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 100, noes not counted.

So the motion was seconded.

The question recurred upon the motion to suspend the rules and pass the resolution.

Mr. ELDREDGE. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, 27 members voting therefor.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 161, nays 65, not voting 63; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Bruntin, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Carpenter, Cason, Cessna, Chittenden, Amos Clark, jr., Freeman Clarke, Clayton, Clements, Stephen A. Cobb, Coburn, Conger, Cotton, Crouse, Darrah, Dawes, Donnan, Duell, Dunnell, Eames, Farwell, Field, Fort, Foster, Freeman, Garfield, Gooch, Gunckel, Hagans, Eugene Hale, Hancock, Benjamin W. Harris, Harrison, Hathorn, Havens, John B. Hawley, Gerry W. Hazelton, John W. Hazelton, Hendee, E. MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

A bill (H. R. No. 1317) to enable Ann Jennette Hathaway, executrix of the last will and testament of Joshua Hathaway, deceased, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of letters-patent, for improved device for converting reciprocal into rotary motion;

A bill (H. R. No. 3424) for the relief of Thomas Winans and William L. Winans; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4335) authorizing John Hazeltine to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for the extension of his patent for a new and useful water-wheel.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in bills of the following titles:

A bill (S. No. 537) for the extension of the patent known as Reynolds's patent brake for power-looms; and

A bill (S. No. 993) for the relief of Luther Hall.

RECUSANT WITNESS—WILLIAM S. KING.

Mr. DAWES. I rise to a question of privilege, and submit the preamble and resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk to be read:

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas William S. King, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, temporarily residing in the city of Washington, for the purpose of avoiding the service of a summons duly issued by the Speaker of this House commanding him to appear before the Committee on Ways and Means charged with the investigation of certain allegations concerning the use of money by the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for the purpose of procuring legislation in the Forty-second Congress, has fled to the Dominion of Canada; and whereas the said William S. King was on the 2d day of February, A. D. 1875, summoned by a copy of a summons duly issued by the Speaker of this House, personally delivered to him in the town of Compton, in the province of Quebec in the Dominion of Canada, commanding him to appear and testify before the Committee on Ways and Means as aforesaid, and has without sufficient cause neglected to appear before said committee, pursuant to said summons: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Speaker issue his warrant directed to the Sergeant-at-Arms commanding him to take into custody the body of the said William S. King wherever to be found, and to have the same forthwith brought before the bar of the House to answer for contempt of the authority of the House in thus failing and neglecting to appear before said committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. It may be well to get him, but is it well to make war upon Great Britain in order to get him?

Mr. CONGER. Does the gentleman think he can beat the "King" in the Queen's dominions?

Mr. DAWES. The House will comprehend at once the question presented for their consideration. I have reported this resolution by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means, and I desire to make a statement of what has been done and to submit, under the instruction of the committee, the question to the House of Representatives; so that if the Speaker's warrant shall not issue it will not be because the Committee on Ways and Means have not laid the matter before the House, and if it shall issue it will be because the House of Representatives thinks this is a case that will justify it.

The witness had full knowledge of the fact that his presence before the Committee on Ways and Means was expected and desired. He left the city of Washington, as all the facts in the case indicate, and about which I think there is no dispute, for the very purpose of avoiding the service of this summons. He went to Canada, and being disturbed in his repose there, he crossed over the line into the State of New York, and spent some little time near the town of Malone, in the State of New York. As the officer of the House of Representatives approached the place where he was stopping, he fled across the border into Canada, and took up his residence at a hotel in Montreal without registering the name by which he is known in this country. Under the direction of the Sergeant-at-Arms, the officer discovered his whereabouts in the city of Montreal, and then Mr. King left for the town of Compton, one hundred and fifteen miles from Montreal, taking up his residence there with a friend. His place of abode was ascertained by the officer, who, upon going to the house and inquiring for a gentleman who sometimes resided there, succeeded in meeting Mr. King and putting in his hands a copy of the summons of the Speaker; Mr. King remarking at the time that being out of the jurisdiction of the United States of course it was of no avail. The subpoena has been returned; the person who served it is here; he knows Mr. King, and has known him for many years. The identity is without doubt; the fact that he left the country to avoid the service is clear; the service was made on him, but out of the jurisdiction of the United States.

It is not very likely that Mr. King intends to come within the jurisdiction of the United States, and of course no warrant can be served upon him out of that jurisdiction. But if he should come within the jurisdiction in time, so that the Committee on Ways and Means could be gratified by his presence as a witness before them, this would give us the opportunity of bringing him here. If the House thinks this is not a case that would require or justify the issuing of a warrant, the committee will have discharged their duty in bringing the resolution before the House. It is thought by some, I see, that the resolution is a little too broad in its phraseology. Of course it can mean nothing more than his arrest wherever found within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Why not put those words in the warrant?

Mr. DAWES. That would perhaps be better.

Mr. MAYNARD. How recently was this gentleman in the city of Washington?

Mr. DAWES. During the holidays the committee had the pleasure of his company to New York. At that time he intimated to the committee his own desire to appear before them as a witness, and they gave him notice that they would desire his early attendance. It was after the committee went to New York and after they had seen Mr. King that the peculiar evidence that renders his presence so necessary came before the committee. At the time he went to New York with the committee there was no special reason why his presence as a witness was needed.

Mr. GARFIELD. Was he summoned while here?

Mr. DAWES. No; he has never been summoned except in the manner now brought to the attention of the House. The committee do not urge the issuing of this warrant. They have brought the matter before the House because they had some doubt themselves whether it was proper to issue this warrant. They submit the question without recommending that the warrant shall or shall not issue.

Mr. MAYNARD. I have an impression that this man has been before the Committee on Ways and Means and has testified.

Mr. DAWES. He has never been before the present Committee on Ways and Means. In the last Congress he was a witness before the committee on the same subject.

Mr. MAYNARD. And testified very emphatically.

Mr. DAWES. And testified with great emphasis.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. In that part of the resolution relating to the arrest it seems to me the words "if within the jurisdiction of the United States" should be inserted.

Mr. SENER. Yes; that language ought to go in.

Mr. DAWES. The committee were of opinion that the most that could be said of this service was that this witness might be considered by the House as in contempt from the fact of his having escaped into Canada to avoid process, and from the fact that he has been requested by the House of Representatives to come here and testify; for that is all that can be said as to the legal effect of this summons served in Canada.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. If my colleague [Mr. DAWES] will yield to me a few moments, I desire to call the attention of the House to the question whether it is of most consequence to issue what will be a useless warrant, (for if Mr. King has gone to Canada to avoid process he will undoubtedly remain there,) or whether it is best to maintain the integrity of the law and the dignity of the House of Representatives. How can a man be said to be in contempt of the House when he has never had process legally or truly served upon him? Can a man be in contempt of any court—has he legally been summoned before any court—when the process of the court has never been served on him by any person having the authority to do it? Would any judge of any court in the United States hold a man in contempt because he did not present himself as a witness when he had merely been asked to do so—because he did not come on a mere request when he had reason to suppose he would be wanted? It is very clear that Mr. King cannot be brought from Canada by any process of ours; nor can our Sergeant-at-Arms make legal service on him there. Now the question is what can we do? Is it proposed that an officer of the House of Representatives shall serve this warrant and undertake to kidnap this man from Canadian soil?

Mr. DAWES. Will my colleague [Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts] allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have not got mine answered yet.

Mr. DAWES. You have not got through putting it.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Well, I will try to finish it. I desire to know whether it is well for the House of Representatives, without right, to declare a man in contempt when in no legal sense can he be in contempt? Will my colleague answer that?

Mr. DAWES. I do not think it would be well. And now, Mr. Speaker, I want to put a question to my colleague.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I shall be very glad to answer it.

Mr. DAWES. Suppose a witness ran out of the court-room to avoid service of a summons and the sheriff ran after him.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And the sheriff did not catch him.

Mr. DAWES. And the sheriff did not catch him. Would he not be in contempt of the court?

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. By no means. I do not see how any lawyer could believe he would be. Can my colleague say upon his honor as a lawyer that he so believes?

Mr. DAWES. Well, I do not know whether he would or not.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I am very much obliged to my colleague for having given me so good an illustration of my point.

Mr. RANDALL. If my memory serves me aright a number of witnesses were upon an important occasion—I refer to the impeachment trial of Andrew Johnson—subpœnaed in Canada. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. BUTLER] will correct me if I am not accurate in this statement.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. What is the gentleman's remark?

Mr. RANDALL. I say that if my memory is not at fault, quite a number of witnesses were, during the impeachment trial of Andrew Johnson, summoned in Canada.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. No; none were subpœnaed.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, an attempt was made to subpœna them.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Some persons in Canada were requested to come, and they came.

Mr. RANDALL. Well we have requested Mr. King to come.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. But we could not have done anything if those witnesses had not come.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, I can see no harm to come from the issue of the warrant in this case. If the warrant should meet Mr. King in the United States, his arrest under it would be immediate.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. And his arrest under it would be wholly illegal and void, because he is not in contempt.

Mr. RANDALL. I am very sorry if such people can escape in this way.

Mr. DAWES. The committee propose to let the House of Representatives decide this question.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suggest that the proposition should be so modified as by no possibility to be construed as indicating an intention to arrest this witness in Canada.

Mr. DAWES. The resolution has been so modified.

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Speaker, I think it of the very highest importance that the record should show that this warrant, if authorized by the House to be issued, does not pretend to enforce the arrest of Mr. King beyond the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. DAWES. That has been so fixed.

The SPEAKER. "If within the jurisdiction of the United States," is the language of the resolution.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no harm in it.

Mr. SPEER. That is a proper amendment.

Mr. DAWES. I now yield to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. O'BRIEN] to make a motion to test the sense of the House on this resolution.

Mr. O'BRIEN. With the consent of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I move that the resolution do lie upon the table.

Mr. SPEER. Let it be again reported as modified.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I will make an inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts. I should like to know upon what he predicates the arrest of Mr. King; whether he has been served with a summons or any process from the committee of this House up to this time?

Mr. DAWES. I have already stated to the House, that a copy of the summons issued by the Speaker had been put into his hands, but put into his hands in Canada, outside of our jurisdiction.

Mr. RANDALL. He is an American citizen.

Mr. DAWES. And the committee bring this matter before the House now to have the judgment of the House upon it.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I should like to make another inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts, because I wish to act understandingly on this matter. I suppose the warrant, if it comes at all, must have some predicate, either a criminal act of the person against whom the warrant is issued or else what amounts to a contempt against this House. Upon which of these grounds does the gentleman predicate authority to issue this warrant of arrest?

Mr. DAWES. Of course, Mr. Speaker, the warrant of arrest of a witness who fails to appear is because of contempt of the House.

Mr. ELDREDGE. In what does that contempt consist? What has this man done? I suppose it may be alleged upon rumor or something of that sort that he has evaded a subpoena. I have no doubt from what I have heard that is the fact. But, sir, is there that evidence presented to the House upon which we, acting in our legislative capacity, can issue a warrant against him for contempt?

Mr. DAWES. The resolution itself recites there is, if that be considered a sufficient ground.

Mr. ELDREDGE. It is alleged in papers I have seen—numerous papers—that Mr. King has been in the city of Washington and might have been subpœnaed. I should like to know from the gentleman from Massachusetts whether that is true or only one of those doubtful statements made by the newspapers.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Ways and Means have thoroughly investigated all the statements which have appeared in the public prints and elsewhere which have come to their knowledge, and they are satisfied Mr. King has not been in the city of Washington since the commencement of the holidays.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I wish to ask another question. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts undertake to say service of the subpoena of the House upon Mr. King in the Dominion of Canada will put him in contempt of this House for not there obeying its mandate?

Mr. DAWES. I thought I had made myself clearly understood by the House in saying that the Committee on Ways and Means express no opinion on that point. The committee have only brought to the notice of the House the fact that this witness has purposely evaded the summons of the House; that he has fled to Canada, and has had service upon him in Canada, and that the facts are now brought to the attention of the House for its action.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The gentleman from Massachusetts should inform the House fully on the subject. It seems to me his large experience, his ability, and his knowledge of law ought to have induced him to present to the House all necessary information before he asks us to issue out a warrant not in conformity to law but in violation of it.

Mr. DAWES. Everybody knows there are a great many things I ought to do which I do not do.

Mr. SPEER. I wish to ask the gentleman whether he does not know this witness has gone to Canada for the purpose of avoiding the service upon him of the subpoena of this House?

Mr. DAWES. That is alleged in the resolution.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I object to debate.

Mr. KASSON. Will the gentleman from Maryland withdraw his motion to lie upon the table for a moment to let me say a word?

Mr. O'BRIEN. Certainly.

Mr. SPEER. Who is the gentleman from Pennsylvania who objects?

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I am the one.

Mr. SPEER. I only wished to see him.

Mr. KASSON. In casting the vote on this question my earnest desire is that all the facts should be understood. I will now state one fact in addition to those before stated. The first information that came to us was that this witness was in a town in Northern New York. It came to the committee through my hands. The Sergeant-at-Arms was immediately advised and a subpoena was sent to that place notifying this witness, then within the jurisdiction of the United States. After it had arrived at its destination this witness became aware of that specific fact. This has been shown to the committee. He then hastened on last Sunday week to escape into the Dominion of Canada. He succeeded. He escaped knowing that the Sergeant-at-Arms was in pursuit of him.

Mr. ELDREDGE. Who is to blame for his escape?

Mr. KASSON. Now the sole question—

Mr. HUBBELL. I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

Mr. KASSON. The gentleman cannot do that until I yield the floor. The whole question presented to the House is whether an attempt successfully made under those circumstances to evade the service of the process is a contempt of the House. And as one member of the Committee on Ways and Means I desire the point should be made perfectly clear whether a witness can thus escape from process already issued without being guilty of contempt of the House.

Mr. HUBBELL. I move to lay the whole subject on the table.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] still has the floor.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Allow me to put a single question. If we make this service on Mr. King in Canada, is not that a violation of the rights of sovereignty of Canada?

Mr. DAWES. We are not going over there to make this service.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I know that; but you are proceeding upon what has occurred in Canada, which you have no right to do. I am informed that when one of the Ku-Klux ran away to Canada we sent for him and had to return him again.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I desire to ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] if the Committee on Ways and Means is satisfied by affidavits before it that Mr. King is evading the service of this process?

Mr. KASSON. The chairman, speaking for the committee on that point, has stated the facts which show that Mr. King has run away from the service of the process.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I will further ask the gentleman from Iowa if he ever knew a court when proof was made, by affidavit or otherwise, so that the court was satisfied that the person was evading service of subpoena as a witness, to refuse an attachment for such witness.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. I wish to ask the gentleman whether there is a precedent in this or any other legislative body for this proceeding?

Mr. KASSON. No precedent has been cited, and I know of none personally. Having received the privilege of the floor from the gentleman from Maryland, [Mr. O'BRIEN,] I now return it.

Mr. DAWES. I ask the gentleman from Maryland to withdraw his motion to lay the resolution on the table, and I will then myself withdraw that resolution in order to offer a bill for passage under suspension of the rules.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I withdraw the motion to lay on the table.

SELECTION OF JURORS IN THE DISTRICT.

Mr. DAWES. I withdraw the resolution and send to the desk a bill to provide for the selection of grand and petit jurors in the District of Columbia; and I move that the rules be suspended and that the bill be passed.

I desire to say that a bill passed before the holidays extended the jury lists until the 1st of February. Under the existing laws there can be no grand jury until late in March; and that will be too late for the purposes which the committee have in view. I think when the bill has been read that there will be no objection to its passage. It has been prepared with great care, after conference between the courts and the Judiciary Committee.

Mr. NIBLACK. I hope the gentleman from Massachusetts will allow me to say that this will permit the grand jury to assemble much earlier than they can under the present law, and thus catch a flagrant case which has been brought to the attention of the Committee on Ways and Means and which we think ought not to be allowed to escape.

Mr. DAWES. The statute of limitation will bar any process in this matter we have been discussing in about two weeks.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I will say to the House that this bill has been submitted to three or four leading lawyers of this city, and the chief justice of the supreme court, and has their approval.

The bill was read.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I desire to make an inquiry of the gentleman from Massachusetts in reference to the qualifications of these jurors. As I gather from the reading of the bill, the only qualification that is required is that they shall not have been convicted of an infamous crime. Now, it seems to me that there ought to be other qualifications than that.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I will state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that the qualifications are that they shall be tax-payers upon real estate; that they shall be householders; that they shall be residents of the District; and that they shall be citizens of the United States.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I wish the gentleman to add to that, that they shall be able to read and write and understand the English language.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. I have no objection to that.

Mr. DAWES. I will add those words.

Mr. COTTON. I object to that amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts has a right to modify his motion.

Mr. ELDREDGE. The words that I would suggest are: "that they shall be able to read and write in the English language."

Mr. DAWES. I agree to that.

The motion to suspend the rules having been seconded, the rules were suspended (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) and the bill (H. R. No. 4669) was passed.

B. H. PETERSON.

Mr. ATKINS. I move that the rules be suspended and the following resolution adopted:

Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, requested to inform this House whether B. H. Peterson has not a contract for carrying the United States mails on the Mississippi River, and on the Red River, and on any other river; and if so, at what rate of compensation for each contract; and whether said Peterson is the owner or captain of any steamboat on either of said mail-routes, and whether he employs others who are owners or captains of boats to carry the mail for him; to whom the whole or any part of such compensation for carrying said mails is paid; and also whether the Postmaster-General did not lately determine to annul the said contracts with the said Peterson and give them to another party, at a great saving to the Government, giving the amount of such saving and the reason why he did not carry out such intention.

HENRY S. WETMORE.

Mr. LEWIS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4670) authorizing the President to nominate Henry S. Wetmore a lieutenant in the Navy upon the retired list; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REORGANIZATION OF THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move that the rules be so suspended as to discharge the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 2978) to provide for the reorganization of the Treasury Department of the United States, and for other purposes, and that it be considered in the House on Tuesday, February 16, at one o'clock p. m. It is the bill to reorganize the Treasury Department, and has been a special order for the last four months.

Mr. KASSON. And it reduces expenses, does it not?

Mr. KELLOGG. It reduces the expenses, and I only ask that it be considered in the House under the five-minute rule.

The question was put and (two-thirds voting in favor thereof) the rules were suspended; and the motion agreed to.

EVENING SESSION FOR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask unanimous consent that there be an evening session on Wednesday next for debate only, no business whatever to be transacted.

There was no objection, and the order was made.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the order was made; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

REDEMPTION OF OVERDUE BONDS.

Mr. TREMAIN. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4001) entitled "A bill to provide for the redemption of overdue bonds of the United States known as Texas indemnity bonds," and that the same be now put upon its passage.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object, and move that the House do now adjourn.

AMENDMENT OF THE REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. POLAND. I desire to give notice to the House that to-morrow, immediately after the reading of the Journal, I shall ask the House to take up the bill for the correction of certain errors in the Revised Statutes, and for the reason that if the bill is passed now those amendments can be incorporated in the bound volume of the Revised Statutes. I shall ask, therefore, that immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow that bill be taken up for consideration in the House.

HENRY C. PARRY, M. D.

Mr. ALBRIGHT also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4671) for the relief of Henry C. Parry, M. D., late assistant surgeon United States Army; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

FORT KEARNEY MILITARY RESERVATION.

Mr. ALBRIGHT, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4672) to authorize the sale of the military reservation of Fort Kearney, in the State of Nebraska, and the Government buildings thereon; which was read a first and second time, recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

SENIOR ASSISTANT SURGEONS, UNITED STATES NAVY.

Mr. ALBRIGHT also, by unanimous consent, from the same committee, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 3858) to authorize the promotion of the senior three assistant surgeons of the Army; which was recommitted to the committee, and ordered to be printed.

GENERAL SAMUEL W. CRAWFORD.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I also ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2093) for the relief of General Samuel W. Crawford, which comes back from the Senate with amendments and is on the Speaker's table, be non-concurred in and a conference asked on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

There was no objection, and the order was made.

REPORT OF THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. E. R. HOAR, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That ten thousand five hundred copies of the report of the Smithsonian Institution for the year 1874 be printed, two thousand copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, one thousand for the use of the Senate, and seven thousand five hundred for the use of the Institution: Provided, That the aggregate number of pages of said report shall not exceed four hundred and fifty, and that there shall be no illustrations except those furnished by the Smithsonian Institution.

STAMP DUTIES ON BANK CHECKS.

Mr. COMINGO, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4673) regulating stamp duties on bank checks; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

LOYAL CREEK INDIANS.

Mr. PHILLIPS introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4674) for the benefit of the loyal Creek Indians, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

GEOGRAPHICAL EXPLORATIONS.

Mr. FORT, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred, under the law, to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That there be printed and bound in quarto form, by the Public Printer, for the use of Congress, five thousand copies of the reports, with illustrations and atlas sheets, of geographical explorations and surveys west of the one hundredth meridian.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN MICHIGAN.

Mr. HUBBELL. I ask unanimous consent to submit the following resolution:

Resolved, That the bill (H. R. No. 4699) to divide the State of Michigan into three judicial districts and to establish the northern district of Michigan be made a special order to the exclusion of all other orders for consideration in the House as in Committee of the Whole on Thursday evening next.

Many members objected.

EXPENSES OF A SPECIAL COMMITTEE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the resolution of the House of February 1, 1875, authorizing the Clerk of the House to pay to the Sergeant-at-Arms $9,000 for the use of the Special Committee on Louisiana Affairs be so amended as to make the receipt of the Sergeant-at-Arms a proper voucher for that amount in the settlement of his accounts with the Treasury Department.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT JERSEY CITY.

Mr. SCUDDER, of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent to submit for consideration at this time the resolution I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That it shall be in order, when the bill making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, shall be under consideration in Committee of the Whole, to offer and consider an amendment so changing existing laws as to limit the cost of a site for a public building at Jersey City, in the State of New Jersey, to the sum of $150,000 instead of $100,000, as provided for by act of Congress approved March 3, 1873.

Mr. HOLMAN. I object.

EVENING SESSION FOR PENSION BILLS.

Mr. RUSK. I ask unanimous consent that a session of the House be ordered for Tuesday evening of next week for the consideration of reports from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and for no other purpose.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

PATENT FOR COTTON-BALE TIES.

Mr. DOBBINS, from the Committee on Patents, by unanimous consent, submitted an adverse report upon the application for extension of patent for cotton-bale ties; which was ordered to be printed and recommitted.

CAPITOL, NORTH O STREET AND SOUTH WASHINGTON RAILROAD.

Mr. COTTON. I ask unanimous consent that House bill No. 2102, with Senate amendments, to incorporate the Capitol, North O Street and South Washington Railroad Company, be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BURCHARD moved to reconsider the various votes just taken by which bills, &c., were referred or recommitted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask consent to put on its passage now a bill to retire a paralyzed judge.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not think our civil pension-list should be increased.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the motion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GARFIELD. I rise to a privileged question in relation to the business of the House.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be so highly privileged as the motion to adjourn.

Pending the motion to adjourn,

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HARRIS, of Georgia, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (S. No. 764) to remove the political disabilities of Henry Heth, of Virginia.

Mr. DARRALL, from the same committee, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

An act (H. R. No. 3911) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; and

An act (H. R. No. 4563) to make an appropriation to the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

COMMITTEES OF CONFERENCE.

The SPEAKER announced the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the following bills:

A bill (H. R. No. 2093) for the relief of General Samuel W. Crawford, United States Army: Mr. ALBRIGHT of Pennsylvania, Mr. MACDOUGALL of New York, and Mr. YOUNG of Georgia.

WILSON SEWING-MACHINE PATENTS.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, submitted the following report from the Committee on Patents; which was adopted, ordered to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD:

To the House of Representatives:

Your Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the memorial of Allen B. Wilson, asking for the extension of reissued letters-patent numbered respectively 346, 414, and 3430, report as follows:

Said patents cover the invention of friction feed devices in sewing-machines. The original patent therefor was granted to the memorialist on the 12th day of November, 1850. Extensions were granted to the memorialist for said patents for the term of seven years by the Commissioner of Patents, which extended term expired on the 12th day of November, 1871. Said invention is a very useful and valuable one, having gone into almost universal use, and affecting very materially many branches of manufacture and the domestic economy of the people. The memorialist has had the benefit of the full term provided for by law under any circumstances for the existence of a patent, to wit, twenty-one years. He has received from said patents at least $130,000, and in the opinion of your committee he had ample opportunity to have received a much larger sum. It is perfectly safe to say that the combination or company owning said patents, together with others, has received from these patents alone more than $2,000,000—probably much more. The memorialist is a member of said combination, with, however, a very small interest therein, the exact amount of which your committee is not advised.

Your committee is satisfied that the public has paid very heavily for said invention, and has not contributed to any failure, real or imaginary, of the memorialist to realize a greater sum from his said patents.

Your committee are therefore of the opinion that the prayer of the memorialist ought not to be granted, and recommend that the memorial do lie on the table

The question recurred upon the motion to adjourn; and being taken, upon a division there were—ayes 67, noes 62.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2093) for the relief of General Samuel W. Crawford, United States Army, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. CHARLES ALBRIGHT of Pennsylvania, Mr. CLINTON D. MACDOUGALL of New York, and Mr. PIERCE M. B. YOUNG of Georgia, conferees on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 3080) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, and to confirm existing leases, asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BENJAMIN W. HARRIS of Massachusetts, Mr. WALTER L. SESSIONS of New York, and Mr. ABRAHAM COMINGO of Missouri, conferees on the part of the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; which were thereupon signed by the Vice-President:

A bill (S. No. 764) to remove the political disabilities of Henry Heth, of Virginia;

A bill (H. R. No. 3911) making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4563) to make an appropriation to the contingent fund of the House of Representatives.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Messrs. MORRILL of Maine, SAR-

GENT, and DAVIS as the conferees on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 3818) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3208) for the relief of John Henderson, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

The bill (H. R. No. 4568) in relation to the transfer of causes in the United States circuit courts of Alabama was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

FEES OF MARSHALS, ETC.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3623) to amend the twenty-third paragraph of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1853, disagreed to by the House of Representatives.

On motion of Mr. EDMUNDS it was—

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and disagree to the amendments of the House to other amendments of the Senate thereto; and that it agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the Vice-President.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Messrs. EDMUNDS, CONKLING, and THURMAN.

G. W. CUSTIS LEE.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I happened to be out yesterday when the Committee on the Judiciary reported adversely on the bill (S. No. 661) to give jurisdiction to the Court of Claims to hear the claim of G. W. Custis Lee to Arlington. I desire to-day to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was postponed indefinitely, and to have it placed on the Calendar.

Mr. WRIGHT. Let the motion be entered, to wait until the chairman of the committee shall come in.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I think he has no objection to letting the bill go on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

Mr. JOHNSTON subsequently said: I made a motion a little while ago to reconsider the vote indefinitely postponing Senate bill No. 661. The motion was entered, but a member of the Judiciary Committee asked me to wait until the chairman of the committee entered. The chairman is in his seat now, and I desire to have the motion acted upon.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I have no objection, as the Senator wishes to submit some observations on the bill at a future day, to have the vote to postpone indefinitely reconsidered, and the bill placed on the Calendar.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to reconsider the indefinite postponement of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. JOHNSTON. I desire to state that at some time soon I will ask the Senate to give me half an hour to address the Senate on this bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will take its place on the Calendar.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of the chiefs of the confederated Kaskaskia, Peoria, Piankeshaw, and Wea Indians, now of the Indian Territory, praying for the restoration of certain sums of money to their tribal funds; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented a petition of citizens of Clark County, Missouri, remonstrating against the restoration of the duty on tea and coffee and praying for the repeal of the law which reduced the duties on certain foreign goods 10 per cent.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORTON. I present a preamble and resolution adopted at a meeting of representatives of over fifty manufacturing companies of the State of Indiana, which, as it is short, I will ask to read and have referred to the Committee on Finance:

Whereas the plate-glass works at New Albany, Indiana, are the only works of the kind in America that are successfully making plate-glass: Therefore,
Resolved, As the sense of this meeting, that this important branch of manufacture ought to be encouraged by such tariff duties as will enable American manufacturers to successfully compete with the foreign plate-glass makers.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. MORTON. I have a number of memorials, signed by citizens of Indiana, in which they say:

We, citizens of Indiana and your constituents, in a public meeting called to consider the question of cheaper transportation for the productive industries of the West, a question of vital importance to us individually and nationally, unanimously resolved, That we respectfully request our Senators and Representatives in Congress to procure the passage of the bills known as the Forty-first Parallel Railroad bill, the Washington, Cincinnati and Saint Louis Railroad bill, and its Chicago branch.

The memorials were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. SCOTT presented a petition of citizens of Schuylkill County, Pennsylvania, praying the restoration of the 10 per cent. duty taken off leading foreign products in 1872 and praying the passage of the currency bill submitted by Hon. W. D. KELLEY providing for the issue of 3.65 convertible bonds; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a memorial of citizens of Philadelphia, remonstrating against the restoration of the duty on tea and coffee and praying for the repeal of the law which reduced the duties on certain foreign goods 10 per cent.; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Sechler and sundry others, citizens of Tennessee, remonstrating against the restoration of duties on tea and coffee and praying for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties upon certain foreign goods made by the act of 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas, presented the memorial of the Osage Nation of Indians, protesting against the organization of a territorial government in the Indian Territory; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SARGENT presented a petition of citizens of, and officers in, California, praying that the Government authorize the extension of telegraph lines from the Northern Pacific Telegraph lines to the light-houses and life-saving stations on the coast of California and make an appropriation therefor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. SPENCER presented the memorial of Acting Assistant Surgeon John D. Smith, of the United States Navy, praying to be placed on the retired list of the Navy; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a motion to print the report of the Secretary of the Senate, communicating, in obedience to law, a statement of the receipts and expenditures of the Senate from July 1, 1873, to July 1, 1874, reported in favor of the motion, and it was agreed to.

Mr. ANTHONY. The same committee, to whom was referred a motion to print the report of the Secretary of the Senate, made in obedience to law, containing a list of all property belonging to the United States in his possession, have instructed me to recommend that the motion be agreed to. There is no sort of use in printing either of these documents; but the expense is small, and upon consultation with some of our brethren on the other side of the Chamber I find that the democratic conscience is tender on the subject, and I think some of them apprehend that the Constitution will be in danger unless we annually place before the country a catalogue of the chairs, tables, spittoons, and hair-brushes in the committee-rooms. Therefore, out of regard for them, we recommend that this report be printed.

The motion to print was agreed to.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut, from the Committee on Patents, to whom was referred the memorial of James A. Whitney, president of the New York Society of Practical Engineering, remonstrating against the passage of Senate bill No. 1226, providing for the regulation and issuance of patents to inventors, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. WADLEIGH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 880) to provide for the payment of bounties to persons entitled thereto, but who have not received them by reason of having been transferred from the military to the naval or marine service, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3434) to provide for the sale of the Rush Valley military reservation in the Territory of Utah, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4466) permitting Lieutenant-Commander Frederick Pearson, of the Navy, to accept a decoration from the Queen of Great Britain, reported adversely thereon.

Mr. CAMERON. I am instructed by the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) authorizing the President to appoint a commissioner to attend the international penitentiary congress at Rome, to report it back, and I ask the Senate to proceed to its present consideration.

Mr. SARGENT. I object.

Mr. CAMERON. I think the Senator from California will not object if he understands this joint resolution.

Mr. SARGENT. It is but very recently indeed that we appointed a commissioner to attend a convention of this kind at an expense to the Government, in salary and incidentals, of somewhere from $10,000 to $20,000. We have his report containing probably all the information we can get on the matter. I do not know that we have derived any benefit except the report. Whatever advantage is in it the report has gone out to the authorities who control these matters. Why this should be repeated is not obvious to me. There may be some reasons which I do not perceive; but if it is repeated now, I do not know why it may not be triplicated and so make this a regular institution. These positions, it seems to me, are sought by individuals who desire to hold them rather than for any particular advantage to the Government. Those are my only motives for objecting.

Mr. CAMERON. The objections are satisfactory to the gentleman; and as I do not want to occupy the time of the Senate, we will let it go for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CAMERON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3915) to authorize the Secretary of War to give permission to extend the Hygeia Hotel at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, to report it without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration. Nobody will object to this bill. It is intended to authorize the owners of the property there to extend their building. The building is very desirable to the people connected with the fortifications there, and it will be serviceable to the whole country.

The bill was read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I see that the bill refers to a joint resolution of a previous Congress. I should like to hear that read.

Mr. CLAYTON. If this is going to elicit discussion, I shall have to object to its consideration. We have some morning business to attend to.

Mr. CAMERON. I trust the Senator will not object.

Mr. CLAYTON. We have morning business which I want to dispose of, and I see this is going to lead to discussion. I must therefore object, if an objection is in order.

Mr. CAMERON. If it leads to discussion, I will withdraw it.

Mr. CLAYTON. It can be taken up hereafter and passed, I have no doubt.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that it be temporarily passed over to allow the Senator from Vermont to find the joint resolution referred to.

Mr. CAMERON. Very well.

Mr. CLAYTON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the petition of Royal W. Riddell, late of Company C, One hundred and forty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, praying payment of the difference in compensation of a first sergeant and a first lieutenant, from January 13, 1864, to April 20, 1865, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1269) for the relief of Royal W. Riddell.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported a bill (S. No. 1270) to authorize the purchase of a site for public buildings at Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania; which was read and passed to a second reading.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S DEPARTMENT.

Mr. LOGAN. The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3912) to reduce and fix the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army, have had the same under consideration, and have directed me to report it back with amendments. I should like very much to have the Senate take action on the bill at once. It will occupy but a moment.

Mr. DAVIS. Let the bill be read for information, subject to objection.

The bill was read.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. No. 3912) to reduce and fix the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army.

The first section provides that the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army shall hereafter consist of one Adjutant-General, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of a brigadier-general; two assistant adjutants-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of colonels; four assistant adjutants-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant-colonels; and ten assistant adjutants-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of major.

Section 2 repeals so much of section 6 of the act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1870, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1869, as applies to the Adjutant-General's Department.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Military Affairs was to strike out "four," in line 7 of section one, and insert "three;" so as to read:

Three assistant adjutants-general, with the rank, pay, and emoluments of lieutenant-colonels.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was in line 5, of section 2, to insert the words "promotions and appointments in;" so as to read:

That so much of section 6 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the year ending June 30, 1870, and for other purposes," approved March 3, 1869, as applies to promotions and appointments in the Adjutant-General's Department be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LOGAN. Then there is another amendment at the end of section 1 which has not been read, abolishing all the vacancies in the Department except those mentioned in the bill.

Mr. SARGENT. I wish the Senator would state in a word or two, if he can, the object of the bill.

Mr. LOGAN. I will. It is a House bill, the title of which is "to reduce and fix the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army." As the House passed the bill it did not comply with the title; it did not reduce the Adjutant-General's corps. The Adjutant-General's corps, as it stands now, is sixteen in number—one brigadier-general, one colonel, three lieutenant-colonels, and eleven majors. Under the law as it exists they are entitled to a brigadier-general, two colonels, four lieutenant-colonels, and sixteen majors. We amend it so as to leave the Adjutant-General's Department just as it is to-day, except that we let the two colonel vacancies stand and let one vacancy be filled; we leave the three lieutenant-colonels that exist and abolish the fourth vacancy; we abolish five vacancies in the majors, leaving the corps to consist of ten majors, three lieutenant-colonels, two colonels, and one brigadier-general. That is the position in which it will stand if this bill passes, leaving just the number they have to-day; making one promotion and cutting off five vacancies in the majors and one vacancy in the lieutenant-colonels.

Mr. SARGENT. I am satisfied.

The amendment was agreed to, being at the end of the first section to insert:

And all vacancies existing in said Department other than those herein mentioned are hereby abolished.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

SAMUEL W. CRAWFORD—RETIRED OFFICERS.

On motion of Mr. LOGAN, the Senate proceeded to consider its amendment to the bill (H. R. No. 2093) for the relief of General Samuel W. Crawford, United States Army.

On motion of Mr. LOGAN, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendment to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing vote of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the Vice-President appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HITCHCOCK asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1271) authorizing the Nebraska City Bridge Company to construct a ponton railway-bridge across the Missouri River at Nebraska City in Otoe County, Nebraska; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WEST asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1272) for the relief of James Madison Wells, of Louisiana; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPENCER asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1273) for the purchase of the buildings and improvements of the Washington Market Company; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. SPENCER. I introduce this bill by request, and also present a memorial of the stockholders and officers of the Washington Market Company accompanying it. I move that the bill and memorial be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that the bill be printed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To guard against any misapprehension I will say that would not be the proper reference but for the fact that the Judiciary Committee has been instructed to inquire into the present condition of the affair. Therefore for the present I do not object to its being referred to that committee, although very likely we shall return it to go to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The motion was agreed to.

ENGROSSMENT OF BILLS.

Mr. ANTHONY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Printing be instructed to inquire into the expediency of engrossing the bills in print on their transmission from one House of Congress to the other.

AFFAIRS IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. DAVIS. I rise to present a joint resolution passed by the Legislature of the State of West Virginia, condemning the arbitrary, unlawful, and unjust action of all concerned in using the Army of the United States to trample upon the liberties of the people of Louisiana to suit party ends and purposes. I ask to be permitted to make a very few remarks, not exceeding five minutes, on presenting the resolution.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask if that is in order now? I have some business that I want to bring up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The floor was given to the Senator from West Virginia to present a resolution.

Mr. CLAYTON. I understand this is a memorial that the Senator proposes to present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia will state what the nature of his business is.

Mr. DAVIS. I have a joint resolution from the Legislature of the State of West Virginia, in regard to Louisiana, to present, and in presenting it I desire to submit a very few remarks, not exceeding five minutes in length, and I ask the consent of the Senate for that purpose.

Mr. CLAYTON. I will make no objection if the Senator from West Virginia will allow me to call up for reference the message of the President received yesterday in regard to Arkansas.

Mr. BAYARD. That will cause debate.

Mr. CLAYTON. Very well; let it cause debate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair would suggest to the Senator from West Virginia that his resolution be sent to the Chair to be read.

Mr. DAVIS. I will do so, though I would rather reserve the reading until I have made my remarks.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution, according to custom, should be first read.

Mr. DAVIS. Very well.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution No. 6, protesting against Federal interference in the civil affairs of the State of Louisiana.

Resolved by the Legislature of West Virginia—

1. That we have heard with surprise and alarm of the recent invasion of the house of representatives of our sister State of Louisiana by an armed force of Federal soldiers, and the forcible expulsion therefrom of a portion of its members, while in the peaceable and legitimate discharge of their appropriate duties, at the request of a corrupt and usurping official calling himself governor of the State; and we denounce and condemn such interference in the affairs and business of such legitimate Assembly as a gross violation of the Constitution and laws of the United States, and an act of usurpation and tyranny unparalleled in the history of any free government; and we most emphatically denounce and condemn all and every person or persons, regardless of their official position, who are in any way responsible for this the last and greatest outrage upon liberty and free government on this continent.

2. That while we recognize the right as well as the duty of the Government of the United States, under the Constitution, to guarantee to each State of this Union a republican form of government, we deny the right of any officer or department of the Government, civil or military, to interfere in the organization of the Legislature of any State, by declaring who are or who are not the legally elected members thereof, or otherwise; and that each house of such Legislature is the exclusive judge of the election, qualification, and return of its own members.

3. That we tender to the people of Louisiana and to their legally elected representatives our warmest sympathy in this their hour of peril, and we heartily congratulate them upon the firm yet peaceful manner in which they met this tyrannical invasion of their rights.

4. That the great outrage of which we complain is not confined in its consequences to Louisiana, but it is a deadly and insidious blow at free government in this country, and if permitted to stand as a precedent may be repeated, as the exigencies of parties may require, in any State of this Union and even in the Congress of the United States.

5. That the State of West Virginia, through her representatives now assembled, solemnly protests against the executive department of the General Government interfering, as it has done, with the legislative action and authority of the State of Louisiana; that if such interference is tolerated and allowed to prevail, it will subvert and overthrow the sovereignty of the States as established by our fathers, and will substitute in its stead a grand consolidated National Government, ruled and regulated by the power of the sword, of all tyrannies the most absolute and detestable, destroying the rights and liberties of the people, and subjecting them to the rule and control of the worst of despotisms.

6. That a copy of the foregoing resolutions be by the governor transmitted to each of the governors of the States of this Union, and to each Senator and member of the House of Representatives from this State in the Congress of the United States, and that our Senators be instructed and our Representatives requested to lay the same before their respective bodies as the solemn protest of West Virginia against the unconstitutional and tyrannical action of the Federal Executive in regard to the civil affairs of one of the sovereign States of this Union.

7. That our Senators and Representatives use their best efforts to have the troops of the United States withdrawn from the State of Louisiana.

Adopted January 22, 1875.

A copy. Teste:

J. B. PEYTON,

Clerk of the House of Delegates and Keeper of the Rolls.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move that the Senate now take up the message of the President on Arkansas affairs and that it be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. DAVIS. I believe I have the floor.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia was recognized, and presented a resolution of his State Legislature, and the Senator is claiming the floor, asking permission to make a few remarks.

Mr. DAVIS. I shall not occupy five minutes.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask whether it is in order now to open up the discussion on the Louisiana question on the introduction of a resolution of a State Legislature. It seems to me that this resolution should have been presented during the early proceedings of the morning hour, at the time allotted to the introduction of memorials and petitions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Arkansas that the time for the presentation of these resolutions usually is the morning hour. The Senator from West Virginia desires to make some explanation or some statement in regard to the resolutions.

Mr. CLAYTON. The resolutions have been read at length.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of opinion that the Senator from West Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CLAYTON. During the morning hour?

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I believe the sentiments expressed in the resolution just read are indorsed by fully three-fourths of the people of West Virginia and the country at large.

Senators, think of it! A Legislature lawfully elected by a large majority of the people of a State meet at the place and time required by law, are engaged in a peaceable, quiet, proper, and legal way attending to the duties assigned them by the constitution and laws of their State, when by order of a usurping governor United States troops are marched into the legislative hall and a portion of the members, by force, at the point of the bayonet, taken from their seats so that the political complexion of the house shall be changed. The members forced out were elected by large majorities, some of them by one thousand or more. There was no legal protest against their occupying seats; there was no one contesting their right to them. And all this is done by United States troops acting under the order of a man calling himself governor, who had usurped that office under the protection of a portion of the armed force of the United States, acting under the midnight illegal order of a corrupt Federal judge. When you consider the midnight order of Judge Durell and the spectacle of United States troops overthrowing one State government and installing another; and, at a later date, the same troops, by order of the same de facto usurping governor, force from their seats enough members of a State Legislature to change its political complexion, surely there is no parallel in history, certainly not in a time of peace and under a republican form of government.

For the outrages committed by Kellogg and the army of the United States in Louisiana the President and his Cabinet are responsible to the people of this country. Cabinet officers Williams and Belknap have each, in the name of the President, indorsed by telegraph the acts committed in Louisiana by Kellogg, Durell, and the army.

The people of West Virginia, whose coat of arms bears the motto "Montani semper liberi," could not do more or less than respectfully, yet firmly and strongly, enter their protest against the use of the Federal Army in any State in such a manner as has more than once occurred in Louisiana.

Mr. President, I cannot imagine a more dishonorable act than an officer or representative of the people could engage in than to traduce and abuse the people who elected and trusted him to protect and defend their good name and interest. In my opinion the man who abuses a trust and misrepresents a helpless people who have confided in him is indeed a bad and an unworthy man.

The resolutions I present are respectful and to the point. I fully indorse them, and I have placed them on the records of this Senate so that West Virginia's protest, with that of other States, may appear in perpetual remembrance against the acts of the Administration in Louisiana in overturning a State government and interfering with a State Legislature by an armed force for political gain.

AFFAIRS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. CLAYTON. I move that the message of the President on Arkansas affairs be taken up and referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. BAYARD. This motion was made yesterday; but on a suggestion that the message of the President and the accompanying papers should be printed, that order was made, but it has not yet been complied with. The message and papers are not yet open to the inspection of Senators. The message itself is here, but the accompanying papers are not.

The question of reference I consider of moment, and it will lead I may say to some debate. I have been informed that as a matter of respect for the memory of a person late a member of this body, a motion to adjourn will probably be made at the expiration of the morning hour, now five minutes absent, and therefore I trust the Senator will waive his motion and not press it at the present time.

I will say that of course this matter touches subjects of the very gravest consideration, which are to be approached carefully, and time is required for their proper consideration. I ask, in view of the fact that the papers accompanying this message have not been printed and laid upon our desks in the usual form, that there should be a reasonable and proper delay before we enter into the debate which I am sure is to follow this question in all its stages, from the time it comes into this body until it shall finally be passed upon by this body; and therefore I suggest, in view of the lapse of time and the occurrence of those very proper manifestations of respect to a deceased brother, that the consideration of this motion be postponed; and I trust that it will be withdrawn by the Senator who makes it.

Mr. CLAYTON. I had not yielded the floor to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. BAYARD. I thought I had been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. CLAYTON. I made no objection at the time when the Senator took the floor, but I intended to make a short statement touching this question. If the Senator will withhold his remarks for the present I will proceed.

Mr. BAYARD. If I had supposed the Senator meant to claim the floor, I should not have interposed to deprive him of his right. I arose after I supposed his motion had been made and the Chair was about to entertain it, and asked to be heard upon the subject. I was not aware that I was occupying the floor in invasion of any right of the Senator.

Mr. CLAYTON. I was merely pausing to allow the Chair to put the motion to the Senate, and while I paused the Senator rose.

Mr. BAYARD. Then I ask the Senator's pardon; I did not wish to interfere with him.

Mr. CLAYTON. Not at all.

Mr. BAYARD. I supposed his object had been reached by simply bringing the matter before the Senate and that he proposed to take the question without discussion, and knowing that discussion would probably arise I thought it proper to interpose at the stage I did, in which I believe I was entirely in order.

Mr. CLAYTON. I simply desire to repeat what I said yesterday, that some days ago I presented a memorial from Hon. Joseph Brooks, of Arkansas, setting forth that he had been elected governor of that State at the election of 1872 and that he had been unlawfully kept out of the office. That memorial was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I suppose the committee have it under advisement at this time; at least I am so informed. In order to shed all the light on this subject which could be shed upon it, I introduced a resolution calling on the President to send to the Senate such information as he might have touching the question. Yesterday that information came and with it a message. Now it seems to me eminently proper that this information should go to the committee who are considering this question, and it seems to me that the objection made by the Senator from Delaware as to its not being printed and on our tables has no bearing at all in regard to the question of reference to this committee. If it is true, as he suggests, that we are to adjourn over to-day for a very proper reason, then I submit to him that as this message will probably be printed to-day, it should be in the hands of the proper committee whatever that may be. I must therefore insist upon the consideration of the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas moves the reference of the papers and the President's message to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President, ordinarily there is no trouble about a reference; ordinarily the subject-matter sufficiently indicates the committee to whom it should be referred. This, however, is an exceptional case. It does seem to me that if anything can be demonstrated, it is that this message and the accompanying documents should go to the Judicial Committee of the Senate and not to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I have not time before one o'clock to go at large into the reasons which induce me to entertain this opinion; it would take up more time than I wish to take up this morning on this subject; but I may say that no reference of this message can be made without some debate upon it. I am sure I wish to waste no time of the Senate, but I do wish for one to call the attention of the Senate to what, in my judgment, among all the extraordinary things we have witnessed in the last five or six years, is the most extraordinary and astounding of all, and to show that this question, which is a question of constitutional law, should go to the Law Committee of the Senate—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning hour has expired.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask that the regular order be taken up, which is the steamboat bill.

STEAMBOAT LAW.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will lay before the Senate the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. SARGENT rose.

Mr. THURMAN. After the bill is taken up then I have no objection to its being laid aside informally, subject to be called up at any moment in order to hear what the Senator from California has to say.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. Mr. President—

Mr. THURMAN. Let the steamboat bill be taken up.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill (H. R. No. 1588) to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to the security of life on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes, is before the Senate as the unfinished business of yesterday.

FUNERAL OF SENATOR BUCKINGHAM.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. Mr. President, it is now the day and the hour appointed for the funeral of my late colleague in this Chamber. As a token of respect for our deceased friend, I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to unanimously; and (at one o'clock and two minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, February 9, 1875.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.
The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

EDUCATION.

Mr. MONROE, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the National Educational Association, relating to the interests of education; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

At a meeting of the department of superintendence of the National Educational Association recently held in Washington, District of Columbia, the following resolutions upon "the relation of the General Government to public education" were passed unanimously; and the undersigned, the committee who prepared and presented the resolutions, were instructed to embody them in the form of a memorial to Congress. In the performance of this duty we herewith present the proceedings above referred to, and most respectfully ask for them such consideration on the part of your honorable body as may be proper.

Resolved, That this body reiterate and affirm the positions taken at its meeting in this place one year ago, as follows: First, that the Federal Government should leave to the people and local governments of each State the management of their own educational affairs without interference; second, that great service was done to the cause of education by Congress in establishing and maintaining a Bureau or Department of Education, whereby appropriate information from all parts of the world may be gathered, digested, and distributed, and whereby much useful aid is furnished to the practical work of education throughout the country; third, that the proposition to set apart the public lands of the United States exclusively for the purposes of free education meets with our heartiest approval; fourth, that it is the duty of Congress to furnish special aid to the school authorities of the District of Columbia.

Resolved, That as, in order fully to perform the work pressing upon it and make its usefulness still more widely felt, we are satisfied the National Bureau of Education needs increased clerical force, and as it is equally plain to us that the distribution directly by the Bureau of at least ten thousand copies of its annual reports each year among school officers and those specially interested in the work of education in the different States and Territories would do an incalculable amount of good, we therefore respectfully petition Congress, in the interest of the education of the people, to take the necessary steps to bring about these desirable ends.

Resolved, That a reasonable appropriation by the General Government is necessary to secure a full and creditable representation of the educational interests of the country at the approaching centennial exposition to be held at Philadelphia, and we sincerely hope that such an appropriation may be made by the Congress now in session.

ISAAC N. BROWN.

Mr. HOWE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4675) to relieve Isaac N. Brown of his political disabilities; which was read a first and second time.

Mr. HOWE. I ask that this bill be put on its passage at once.

The SPEAKER. The bill is accompanied by the usual petition; and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HOWE] asks unanimous consent that it be passed at once.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed; two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

DUTY ON SUGARS.

Mr. SYPHER. I ask unanimous consent to submit for adoption at the present time the following resolution:

Whereas the expenses of the Government require an additional revenue of from thirty to forty million dollars; and whereas by "An act to reduce internal taxes, and for other purposes," approved July 14, 1870, the duty on imported sugars was reduced at the rate of 33 1/3 per cent.; and whereas said reduction of duty diminished the revenues of the Government $14,000,000 in gold annually without reducing the price of sugars to the consumers: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on Ways and Means is hereby directed to inquire into the expediency of restoring the duty on all imported sugars to the rates of duty imposed by law previous to the passage of the aforesaid act.

Mr. FIELD. I hope this resolution will be adopted.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Let it be referred.

Mr. FIELD. I trust it will be adopted at once.

Mr. HOLMAN. I must object to the resolution unless the gentleman offering it consents that it be referred.

Mr. STORM. We cannot adopt such a resolution as this.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

IMPROVEMENT OF NEW YORK HARBOR.

Mr. COX, by unanimous consent, presented a memorial of the special committee of the Chamber of Commerce of New York, urging the vigorous prosecution of the public work in New York Harbor; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD. It is as follows:

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

The undersigned, a special committee appointed by the chamber of commerce of this city, respectfully represent—

That the public work now in progress in this harbor, under the engineering care of General John Newton, is one of great magnitude and of a peculiar and exceptional character.

It is a work that cannot be intermitted without great loss, since the excavations under the rock bed of the river are liable to fill with water by the pressure of water from above. To prevent this pumps and engines are compelled to work both night and day. Besides this peculiarity, the workmen employed are for the most part men brought from the mines of England and Wales, and are retained here for this special service, and their detention, if allowed to remain idle, must impose considerable loss. Beyond both of these considerations it should be stated that the special boats and machinery, as well as the engineering force which are now engaged on this work, can be only profitably employed when the work is vigorously and continuously pushed forward. For these reasons we urge that the full appropriation asked for by General Newton should be granted and that no spirit of false economy should induce its curtailment even by one dollar.

General Newton is an Army officer of great merit; and it is only just to him to say that he will not, in any importunate way, urge the appropriation, but leave the whole subject to Congress.

The undersigned would further represent that there are two or three reefs in the East River which wholly prevent that important stream from being used by vessels drawing over from nineteen to twenty-one feet water. These reefs have been partially removed, but the harbor is suffering a diminution of its full capacity by these remaining impediments; and now that ships are made to draw fully twenty-four to twenty-six feet, the East River and the extensive docks which bound it are rendered useless for this class of vessels, and all by reason of these remaining reefs, which can be removed at an inconsiderable expense.

We, the undersigned, in view of the important interests we represent, respectfully urge a full and prompt compliance with the requisition of General Newton.

Special Committee of the Chamber of Commerce New York.

NEW YORK, February 8, 1875.

COMMITTEE CLERK.

Mr. DUELL. I ask unanimous consent to submit for adoption at this time the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Expenditures on the Public Buildings and the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department have leave to employ a clerk conjointly during the present session of Congress at the usual rate of compensation; and the Clerk of the House of Representatives is hereby directed to pay the clerk of said committees his salary from the 1st day of October last, when he commenced work for said committees.

Mr. BUFFINTON. Let the resolution be referred to the Committee on Accounts.

There being no objection, the resolution was referred to the Committee on Accounts.

PRINTING THE REPORTS ON TERRITORIAL SURVEYS.

Mr. TOWNSEND, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred under the law to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That there be printed four thousand copies of the annual report on the geological and geographical survey of the Territories for 1874; two thousand copies for the Department of the Interior and two thousand copies for the Smithsonian Institution.

He also, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred under the law to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That there be printed and bound in quarto form one thousand copies of each of the final reports on the geological survey of the Territories, for distribution by the Smithsonian Institution.

PATENT MEDICINES, ETC.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Commissioner of Patents be, and is hereby, directed to inform this House if any patents are now issued under the law for medicines and other chemical compounds; and if not, why not.

DANIEL S. MERSHON, JR.

The SPEAKER. A few days ago the bill (S. No. 134) for the relief of Daniel S. Mershon, jr., was erroneously referred to the Committee on Military Affairs instead of the Committee on Naval Affairs. If there be no objection the reference will be changed to the latter committee.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

SETTLERS ON SWAMP AND OVERFLOWED LANDS IN MISSOURI.

Mr. ORR, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4676) for the relief of actual settlers on lands claimed to be swamp and overflowed lands in the State of Missouri; which was read a first and second time.

The bill, which was read, provides that in all cases in the State of Missouri where lands have theretofore been selected and claimed as swamp and overflowed lands by said State, and the various counties therein, by virtue of any act of Congress, and said lands have been withheld from market in consequence thereof by the General Government, and the said State and counties have sold said lands to actual settlers, and said settlers have improved the same to the value of $100, said settlers, their heirs, assigns, and legal representatives who have continued to reside thereon, shall have priority of right to pre-empt or homestead all such lands as may be rejected by the United States as not being in fact swamp and overflowed lands; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Interior to make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry into effect the provisions of the act; provided that nothing therein contained shall prejudice the rights of any person who may have made actual settlement upon said lands under the pre-emption or homestead laws prior to the passage of the act.

Mr. ORR. I presume there will be no objection to the passage of the bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. From what committee does it come?

Mr. ORR. From the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ORR moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HAYDEN'S GEOLOGICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL REPORT.

Mr. DONNAN, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That there be printed fifty-five hundred copies of Professor Hayden's annual report of the geological and geographical survey of the Territories for 1873; three thousand copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, one thousand for the use of the Senate, and fifteen hundred for the Smithsonian Institution.

Mr. DONNAN. The resolution differs only from the one referred to the Committee on Printing in the number for distribution by the Smithsonian Institution, giving it fifteen hundred instead of one thousand.

The resolution was adopted.

Mr. DONNAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

HENNEPIN CANAL.

Mr. HURLBUT. I demand the regular order of business.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business being called for, the House resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 145) for the construction of a canal connecting the waters of Lake Michigan and of the Illinois, the Mississippi, and the Rock Rivers. When the House adjourned on Saturday last the pending motion was that made by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GUNCKEL] that the bill be laid upon the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

OMISSIONS IN REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. POLAND. I understand the gentleman yields for the purpose of allowing me to make a report from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States.

Mr. HURLBUT. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. POLAND, from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States, reported back the bill (H. R. No. 4546) to correct errors and to supply omissions in the Revised Statutes of the United States, with amendments.

The bill was read in full.

Mr. POLAND. I have some amendments the committee desire to make. I move to strike out after the word "amended," in line 194, down to and including the word "also," in line 195, namely:

By striking out, in the first line, the word "imported," and inserting "transported;" and also.

So the paragraph will then read:

Section 4347 is amended by striking out, at the end of the thirty-third line, the word "no" and inserting the word "on."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I move to strike out the paragraph beginning at line 220 and ending at line 229, as follows.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 5192 is amended by striking out "Charleston," in the seventh line, and "Richmond," in the eighth line; and also by inserting after the word "Washington," in the ninth line, the following: "The cities of Charleston and Richmond may be added to the list of cities in the national associations of which other associations may keep three-fifths of their lawful money, whenever, in the opinion of the Comptroller of the Currency, the condition of the Southern States will warrant it."

Mr. POLAND. The committee, after reflection, consider the matter right as in the Revised Statutes.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me to ask if they propose to amend the Revised Statutes by putting the words "free whites" in the naturalization laws?

Mr. POLAND. I will come to that. The Committee on Revision of the Laws propose the following amendment to the bill, to come in after line 95.

The Clerk read as follows:

Section 1050 is amended by adding to the fourth paragraph the following additional proviso: Provided also, The jurisdiction of the Court of Claims shall not extend to any claim against the United States growing out of the destruction of, appropriation or damage to, property by the Army or Navy engaged in the suppression of the rebellion.

Mr. POLAND. I will say in reference to that and another I will offer next, that these amendments embrace the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864.

Mr. POTTER. Does the amendment just read come from the committee?

Mr. POLAND. It does. At the time we introduced our bill we had not got through with examining all these matters, and we have some to bring in not embraced in the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 43, and this embraces the residue of the act of July 4, 1864.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 43:

Chapter 4 of title 7 is amended by adding after section 300 the following sections:
SEC. 300. All claims of loyal citizens in States not in rebellion, for quartermaster's stores actually furnished to the Army of the United States and receipted for by the proper officer receiving the same, or which may have been taken by such officers without giving such receipt, may be submitted to the Quartermaster-General of the United States, accompanied with such proofs as each claimant can present of the facts in his case; and it shall be the duty of the Quartermaster-General to cause such claim to be examined, and if convinced that it is just and of the loyalty of the claimant and that the stores have been actually received for the use of and used by the Army, then to report each case to the Third Auditor with a recommendation for settlement.

SEC. 300B. All claims of loyal citizens in States not in rebellion, for subsistence actually furnished to the Army and receipted for by the proper officer receiving the same, or which may have been taken by such officer without giving such receipt, may be submitted to the Commissary-General of Subsistence, accompanied by such proof as each claimant may have to offer; and it shall be the duty of the Commissary-General of Subsistence to cause each claim to be examined, and if convinced that it is just and of the loyalty of the claimant and that the stores had actually been received or taken for the use of and used by the Army, then to report each case for payment to the Third Auditor of the Treasury with the recommendation for settlement.

The provisions of the above two sections extend to the State of Tennessee, and to the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson in the State of West Virginia; but the provisions of the above two sections shall not authorize the payment of claims for the occupation of or injury to real estate in any State declared in insurrection during the rebellion.

Mr. POLAND. This amendment and the one adopted before this embrace the provisions of the act of July 4, 1864, and a subsequent refusal of authorization to these officers to allow the claims on real estate.

Mr. HARRISON. I desire to ask the gentleman from Vermont whether the amendment just read harmonizes with the provisions of the act of July, 1864? It must be remembered that the provisions of that act and the amended act or resolution bring certain States and parts of States within its provisions.

Mr. POLAND. That act of July 4, 1864, was afterward applied to the State of Tennessee, and also to the counties of Berkeley and Jefferson, in West Virginia; and these are embraced in my amendment.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I offer the following amendment, to come in after line 95.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the amendment already adopted, after line 95, the following:

Section 1342 is amended by striking out in the third line of the thirty-eighth article the word "corporal" and also by adding to said article 38 the following words: "No court-martial shall sentence any soldier to be branded, marked, or tattooed."

The same section is also amended in the third line of article 82 by striking out the word "eighty-five" and inserting the word "eighty."

Mr. POLAND. This provision in relation to the punishment of soldiers was found in the middle of an appropriation bill. The committee overlooked it.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. The committee offer the following amendment to come in after line 101.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 101 add the following:

Section 2146 is amended by adding at the end of the first line the following words: "Crimes committed by an Indian against the person or property of another Indian, nor to."

Mr. POLAND. That was an omission also.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. The committee offer the following amendments, to come in after line 117.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 117 add the following:

Section 2730 is amended by inserting at the end of the first line the word "Pittsburgh."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. The committee offer the following amendment, to come in after line 120.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 120 add the following:

Section 2997 is amended by inserting in the tenth line, after the word "Alabama," the words "Detroit, in Michigan."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. The committee offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out from line 173, down to and including line 176, the following:

Section 3811 is amended by striking out in the second line the words "national banks" and inserting "banks of the United States."

And insert in lieu thereof as follows:

Section 3811 is amended by striking out "Secretary of the Treasury" and inserting "Comptroller of the Currency;" also by adding after the word "banks," in the second line, the words "and banks under State and territorial laws."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. The committee offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 237 add the following:

Section 5224 is amended by adding thereto the following:
And if any such bank shall fail to make a deposit and take up its bonds for thirty days after the expiration of the time specified, the Comptroller of the Currency shall have power to sell the bonds pledged for the circulation of said bank, at public auction, in New York City; and after providing for the redemption and cancellation of said circulation, and the necessary expenses of the sale, pay over any balance remaining to the bank, or its legal representatives.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. I now offer an additional section to come in at the end of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of the bill an additional section, as follows:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of State is directed, if practicable, to cause this act to be printed and bound in the volume of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. POLAND. I understand that if this bill is immediately passed these corrections can all be bound up in the volume of the statutes. It is highly desirable that they should go into the book itself, rather than have to be sought for in another volume.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POLAND. These are all the amendments the committee propose. They have gone over this whole volume of the revision with very great diligence, and it will be observed that the errors we have corrected are most of them verbal, merely printer's errors, a few omissions having been supplied.

This work of revision was done by three commissioners, the work being divided between the three. There was occasionally some matter that was left out. We have endeavored, as far as in our power, to supply every omission of that kind. I shall be glad to answer any question in reference to any one of the matters we have corrected; but I feel it my duty to call the attention of the House to two matters that otherwise would have escaped their attention. The committee have felt bound, as we assured the House when we had the revision before the House at the last session, that it was the intention of the committee to make no change in the law whatever—we have felt it our duty where any error has come to our notice to bring it before the House, that it shall not be said there has been any change of law through the action of the committee that has not been sanctioned by Congress.

On the fifth page of this bill, beginning at the ninety-sixth line, section 1842 is amended by adding thereto the following proviso:

Provided, That so much of this section as provides for making any bill passed by the Legislative Assembly of a Territory a law without the approval of the governor shall not apply to the Territories of Utah and Arizona.

The commissioners who made the revision were undoubtedly authorized by the law under which they were appointed to make changes in the law to a greater or less extent, so as to produce harmony and symmetry. These territorial acts providing for the formation of Territories were all alike in their general scope, but there were differences in detail in their provisions, and perhaps there was no part of the work of the commissioners where they had done more in the way of change than they had in these acts establishing the Territories. They endeavored to make them symmetrical and to make them all alike, so that these minor differences between the various acts they struck out, making them all substantially alike.

The organic acts establishing the Territories contained provisions that where a bill passed by a territorial Legislature was disapproved by the governor or he refused to sign it the bill might be passed over his veto or his objection by a two-thirds majority of the Legislature, but that provision did not apply to the Territories of Arizona and Utah. The organic laws of those two Territories gave the governor an absolute veto upon the acts of the Legislature. But the revisers in going over the territorial laws struck out this difference and put Utah and Arizona on the same footing in this respect as the other Territories, and in a great many other particulars they had assimilated the territorial acts. Before this revision was accepted by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws under the act passed at the end of the last Congress, Mr. Durant was employed to go over the work of the commissioners and strike out every change they had made. The committee determined that it would be impossible to get the work of revision through Congress if it contained any new legislation. They therefore employed Mr. Durant to go over the work of the commissioners and eliminate every change which the commissioners had made, but this change he failed to notice, and the committee have therefore deemed it their duty to bring it before Congress with a proposition to make the law precisely the same as it was before in reference to the Territories of Arizona and Utah.

There is one other matter immediately following this on the same page. I will read the paragraph:

Section 2169 is amended by inserting in the first line, after the word "alien," the words "being free white persons, and to aliens."

The original naturalization laws only extended to free "white" persons. That was the condition of the naturalization laws for a great many years. A very few years since, upon some bill, Mr. Sumner of Massachusetts, then in the Senate, moved to strike out the word "white" from the naturalization laws, and it was objected to upon the ground that that would authorize the naturalization of this class of Asiatic immigrants that are so plentiful upon the Pacific Coast. After considerable debate, instead of striking out the word "white," it was provided that the naturalization laws should extend to Africans and persons of African descent. Precisely what the view of the gentleman was who revised the naturalization laws, I am unable to determine. He has left out the word "white" but has kept in the provision in relation to Africans and persons of African descent. The leaving out of the word "white" would seem to leave the naturalization to extend to every species of alien, but that evidently was not the idea of the gentleman who revised that chapter, because he kept in the provision in relation to Africans or persons of African descent. We have proposed by this amendment to restore the law to just the condition in which it was before the revision was made.

The member of our committee who had this chapter on the naturalization laws to examine as a sub-committee failed to notice this change in the law or it would have been brought before the House when the revision was adopted.

With reference to either of these matters, if any gentleman thinks the committee have made a mistake, I will yield to him to move to strike out these provisions. I am not aware that any of the other provisions of the bill are of such interest that any gentleman desires to discuss them or to inquire concerning them; but I shall be very happy to answer any question in relation to any proposed amendment which the committee have put forward in this bill.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Will my colleague yield to me for a moment?

Mr. POLAND. I will do so.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I desire to call attention to the last question raised, the exclusion of the word "white" in the naturalization laws. I do it because this subject was referred during this session of Congress to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which I have the honor to be a member, and some little consideration has been given to it, and I was authorized by that committee to report adversely upon a bill which was submitted to the committee restoring the word "white" to the naturalization laws as now proposed by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws.

I understand that the Committee on the Revision of the Laws do not make this recommendation upon the merits of the question at all, but simply upon the general principle upon which they are proceeding, to restore this revision as nearly as possible to the condition in which the law was at the time the revision was passed. It occurs to me that there is no need of making this proposed correction of the revision of the laws, unless the House is thoroughly satisfied that the law as it now stands, with the word "white" stricken out, is not a wise statute. I understand that members from California and the Pacific coast make objection to the naturalization of Asiatics, more especially the Chinese. That question has been before Congress at different times. As has been suggested by my colleague [Mr. POLAND] it was squarely presented in the Senate by the proposition of Mr. Sumner to strike out the word "white" from the naturalization laws.

I cannot see why there should be this invidious distinction made against any class of foreigners. We invite immigrants to this country from all countries; we open our ports wide to every immigrant who comes to our shores. And if this word "white" shall be restored we will keep upon our statute a provision by which only a portion of those who come to this country can be naturalized, and certainly, as far as we know not by any means necessarily the least intelligent portion of the emigrants who come here. I merely call the attention of the House to this matter for the purpose of suggesting that if they are ready to say that this word "white" should be retained in the naturalization laws on principle, or on the merits of the question, of course it is proper for them to say so. But I think it is a good time now, inasmuch as we have it out of the law, to let it remain out. And as my colleague has yielded to me for the purpose of allowing an amendment to be moved to this bill, I will move to amend it by striking out the paragraph relating to this subject, which will leave the naturalization law to stand as the revisers left it, with the word "white" not in it at all. The paragraph I move to strike out is as follows:

Section 2169 is amended by inserting in the first line, after the word "alien," the words "being free white persons, and to aliens."

Mr. PAGE. I desire to be heard a few moments.

Mr. POLAND. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. PAGE. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] will not prevail. As has been truthfully stated by the chairman of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, [Mr. POLAND,] this change was made by the committee, not thinking that any change was being made at the time. All we ask is that the law be restored as it was prior to the change made by the committee.

The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] says that he knows no reason why this correction should now be made. The fifth article of the Burlingame treaty is very explicit upon one point; that is, that nothing in this treaty shall be construed as conferring the right of naturalization upon any subject of China. As one of the representatives of the Pacific coast, I think I can speak knowingly of the sentiment of the people of that coast upon this question of Chinese naturalization. I do not believe the Chinese themselves desire to be naturalized; they would only be used for corrupt purposes by corrupt individuals. I think that any one who knows anything about the history of this class of Chinese upon the Pacific coast, and who come there in great numbers, (and there are nearly eighty thousand,) will admit that the naturalizing of those people would be a great injustice to the people of California, where so many of these Chinese reside. It was not the intention of the treaty to give that right.

It was expressly stipulated in the treaty that the right of naturalization should not be conferred upon those people.

The people of my State are very emphatic upon this subject. In reply to my friend from Vermont, [Mr. WILLARD,] I suppose there is no Chinaman in his State, while, as I said before, upon the Pacific coast there are nearly eighty thousand. To permit this class of people to be naturalized would in my judgment be a great injustice; it would be demoralizing to those to whom it is proposed to extend the privilege.

I hope the change as reported from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws will be sustained. When this question was discussed in the Senate some three or four years ago, upon a motion of Mr. Sumner to strike out the word "white" from the naturalization laws, the Pacific coast Senators at that time prevailed upon him to consent to amend the naturalization laws so as to include persons of African descent, which would exclude Asiatics. It seems to me that the justice of this proposition must be evident to any person conversant with the history of the class of Chinese that come to this country, a class of people who, it is notorious, sell one another into slavery, and who sell their women for immoral purposes, as has been proved time and time again, and the evidence of which I now have here, and will at some future time submit to this House. It seems to me it must be evident to every one that they are a class of people wholly unworthy to be intrusted with the right of American citizenship.

Mr. POLAND. I now yield to the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. SAYLER.]

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I desire to say but a few words. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] will not prevail. More than that, I hope that no discussion in regard to its merits will be entered into by the House. My reason for desiring that the amendment shall not prevail is not based on the merits or demerits of the proposition in any possible sense. I hope that no vote which will be cast by any gentleman with reference to it will be cast upon that basis. The Committee on the Revision of the Laws pledged themselves to give to the House, so far as they were able, in a single volume, a faithful transcript of the laws of the country. Now, in making that revision, this particular clause was by inadvertence omitted. We propose faithfully and in the honest discharge of the trust committed to us by the House to restore the law to what it really was. If that law is wrong, let there be separate and special legislation to effect a change. In the statutes of the United States there are no doubt many things which a great many gentlemen in this House would like to have corrected or changed in some manner; but it was never made the duty of this committee to undertake such changes. I hope, therefore, that this amendment of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] will not even be entertained or discussed upon its merits, but that the bill as reported by the chairman of our committee will be adopted at once as the sense of the House, and as containing those amendments only which are necessary to make the work already reported what it was designed to be—an exact transcript of the laws of the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. I raise the point that the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] is not proper here. It is not within the province of this committee to do otherwise than simply to revise existing laws.

The SPEAKER. As the Chair understands, the gentleman raises the point that the object of the bill is simply to correct errors in the revision, and not for the purpose of introducing new legislation changing the statutes. Does the Chair understand that new legislation is proposed?

Mr. POLAND. It is claimed that the revision as made at the last session of Congress did change the law. Our proposition now is to make it certain that the law is not changed—to restore the law as it existed prior to the revision.

The SPEAKER. That would of course be in the line of what the Chair understands to be the province of the committee.

Mr. POLAND. My colleague [Mr. WILLARD] says that although this particular change was made by somebody's mistake, it has made the law better and therefore ought to be retained.

Mr. RANDALL. If I understand the matter, the Committee on the Revision in their work of last session omitted something, and now they want to supply the omission by inserting the word "white." So far I believe the proceeding is correct. But the amendment of the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] goes further and practically proposes to adopt new legislation.

Mr. SPEER. To strike out a portion of the existing law.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND,] as the Chair understands, proposes to restore the law to precisely what it was, although it was not so incorporated in the revision.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the report of the committee.

Mr. SPEER. But there is an amendment of the other gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] which proposes to strike out a portion of the existing law.

Mr. E. R. HOAR. Mr. Speaker, I wish to appeal to members of the House—to my friend from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] among others—because it seems to me that this question involves the whole action of the House on this subject at the last session, if not the honor and good faith of the committee. We did our very best (getting all the assistance we could, calling on every member of the House to assist us) that our revision of the laws should not change the existing law in any particular. It has been discovered that by misprints—by an occasional omission of a word, by perhaps some misapprehension of the revisers as to the effect of a phrase—the law in our judgment has been changed in some particulars by that revision. We have now introduced a bill simply to restore the law to what it was; and I think members of the House should not (because they may think particular legislation desirable) endeavor to hold on to what was accidentally done, without its being understood by the House or the committee. I submit that we should pass this bill just as it is; and if a change of the law upon any point be desired, let it be done by affirmative legislation.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I withdraw my amendment; but in doing so I desire to say that I should not have offered it, except for the reasons I have already stated. The matter had been submitted to the Committee on Foreign Affairs, of which the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. E. R. HOAR] is a member. The whole question was brought before our committee—

Mr. PAGE. I object to the gentleman stating anything that occurred in the committee.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I desire to say only that the whole subject was considered by the committee, who authorized me to report back the bill referred to us, restoring the law as now proposed by the Committee on the Revision, and to recommend that it lie on the table.

I deemed it my duty as the matter was to be presented to present it here, as I did not know I should have another opportunity. But, Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as it seems not to be proper to interfere with this bill, I withdraw it.

The SPEAKER. In answer to the point of order made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] the Chair will state that the scope of the privilege given to the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. POLAND] to report this bill was to correct such errors as would make certain what the law was, and therefore amendments to make the law what gentlemen think it ought to be are not in order. It is only to certify what the statutes are, regardless of whether they are expedient or inexpedient. No amendment changing them would be in order under that privilege.

Mr. POLAND. I now demand the previous question.

Mr. COX. I ask the gentleman from Vermont to yield to me before he demands the previous question.

Mr. POLAND. I withdraw the demand, and yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the other day when this matter came up about the tariff I made a statement here that the Committee on the Revision of the Laws had authorized the striking out, or had stricken out the word "white," and that brought about a certain trouble, and there being a law upon the statute-book to authorize the naturalization of all aliens and persons of African nativity and African descent, approved July 14, 1870, it became necessary for some purpose, humanitarian or otherwise, the Committee on Foreign Affairs should act in reference to the naturalization of the Chinese. I naturally asked the question therefore whether there had not been some little carelessness in the revision of the laws by which the whole Asiatic Malayan race were allowed to come in here and be naturalized. That excited a good deal of attention in the country and especially on the Pacific coast, and now when gentlemen have a chance to save our committee further trouble, when they can legislate on the word red or yellow, they escape the dilemma on a point of order raised by my honorable friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] by the strictness with which they are held by the Chair. If they want to naturalize the Chinese "as a man and a brother," let them try it now and at this time.

A MEMBER. Will the gentleman vote for it?

Mr. COX. I did not say I would vote for it; I did not vote for the naturalization of the black man, and a fortiori I would not do it for the yellow man.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to speak on this question when it comes before the House.

Mr. POLAND. I demand the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered; and under the operation thereof the bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DISTRIBUTION OF REVISED STATUTES.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the Committee on Appropriations will now be allowed to report appropriation bills.

Mr. POLAND. I am not yet through with reports from the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. I now report back a bill (H. R. No. 4535) providing for the distribution of the Revised Statutes of the United States, with an amendment.

The bill, which was read, provides that the Secretary of State is hereby directed to furnish, for the use of the Senate, one thousand copies of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for the use of the House of Representatives three thousand copies of the same, to be distributed to the members of the present Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. It is proposed that these Revised Statutes shall be published at a fixed price, to be sold to anybody who may desire to purchase them.

Mr. POLAND. These Revised Statutes are already printed, and the price has been fixed by law. This bill merely provides for their distribution to members of Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to ask the gentleman whether we ought to make this provision for their distribution when they can be purchased by everybody at a very small percentage above cost?

Mr. POLAND. I ask that the amendment of the committee be read; it is to add an additional section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of State is hereby authorized to make arrangement with persons engaged in the business of selling books to keep for sale the Revised Statutes of the United States, but in any such arrangement it shall be provided the same shall be sold at the Government price to all purchasers; and the Secretary may allow to any such person keeping the Revised Statutes for sale such part of the 10 per cent. above the actual cost as he may deem just and reasonable.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman wish the bill to be referred to the Committee on Printing?

Mr. POLAND. No; I desire it shall be put on its passage. It merely provides for the distribution of these documents. They are published under the direction of the Secretary of State. He is required to sell them at cost, with 10 per cent. added. It is, of course, inconvenient the Secretary should be required to do this business himself. Therefore the second section merely authorizes him to arrange with booksellers throughout the country to keep these books for sale, to be sold at the Government price, and further, to allow them such part of the 10 per cent. above the cost as he may deem just and reasonable.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit to the gentleman reporting this bill whether, in view of the facilities for getting these statutes at a little above actual cost, it is not desirable to allow this number to be distributed in the same way, instead of in this way, among the members of the House and Senate.

Mr. POLAND. They are already printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. But is it just to the country to allow these to be distributed without pay?

Mr. POLAND. This revision of the statutes is the largest single work ever done by any one Congress. Not one single hour of the ordinary sessions of Congress was occupied with the revision. Every portion of time ordinarily devoted to business by Congress was given to that business. I think, therefore, this Congress is entitled at least to the small liberality this bill proposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is very true of the committee on the revision, and perhaps the others deserve it for having let them do it.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. POLAND moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

M. V. DAHLGREN.

Mr. GOOCH, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, presented a report on the petition of M. V. Dahlgren for compensation for invention of her late husband, Admiral Dahlgren, to accompany a bill now in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar; and the same was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

PENSION APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. O'NEILL, from the Committee on Appropriations, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4677) making appropriation for the payment of invalid and other pensions of the United States for the year ending June 30, 1876; which was read a first and second time, ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, and made a special order for to-morrow after the morning hour.

Mr. RANDALL. That bill could be taken up and passed now if the committee chose.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, announced that the Senate had rejected the bill (H. R. No. 4202) to enable Mrs. Christiana L. Williams, administratrix of the estate of C. W. Williams, deceased, to make application to the Commissioner of Patents for an extension of letters-patent for improvements in canal locks and gates.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a bill of the following title, with amendments; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (H. R. No. 3912) to reduce and fix the Adjutant-General's Department of the Army.

The message also announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 3623) to amend the twenty-third paragraph of section 3 of the act entitled "An act to regulate the fees and costs to be allowed clerks, marshals, and attorneys of the circuit and district courts of the United States, and for other purposes," approved February 26, 1853, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. EDMUNDS, Mr. CONKLING, and Mr. THURMAN.

The message further announced that the Senate had insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the bill (H. R. No. 3818) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, had disagreed to the amendments of the House to amendments of the Senate, had agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed Mr. MORRILL of Maine, Mr. SARGENT, and Mr. DAVIS as conferees on the part of the Senate.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I move that the rules be suspended and that the House go into Committee of the Whole on the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. Pending that, the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SMITH,] the chairman of the Committee on Elections, rises to what he claims to be a privileged question.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. I call up the report of the Committee on Elections in regard to the charges made against the Delegate from Utah Territory.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the House will go into Committee of the Whole now.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I raise the question of consideration in regard to the question submitted by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. SMITH.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York, [Mr. HALE,] the colleague of the gentleman now on the floor, raised a point of order on this report of the Committee on Elections. The Chair does not see that gentleman in his seat at this moment.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. Two gentlemen raised the point of order; the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] and the gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER.] The gentleman from Massachusetts is here now.

For two weeks the Committee on Elections have been endeavoring to get the floor to report this resolution. It would be a very unseemly thing that a resolution like this should be adopted in the very closing days of this Congress; and if the House should refuse to consider the resolution now, its action would be equivalent to tabling the resolution. I have myself no feeling about it. The committee simply desires to discharge its duty.

Mr. GARFIELD. It would require two days' debate.

Mr. SMITH, of New York. We propose to have it disposed of in two hours. That is the understanding between the gentlemen who will make the leading speeches on behalf of the majority and the minority of the committee. The gentlemen representing respectively the majority and minority of the committee have agreed that the debate shall be limited to two hours.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution reported by the Committee on Elections.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That GEORGE Q. CANNON, Delegate from Utah, being found, upon due consideration of the evidence submitted, and not controverted by said CANNON, to be an actual polygamist, and to have married his fourth wife, having three other wives then living, in the month of August, 1865, in open and notorious violation of the law of July 1, 1862, forbidding such marriage and declaring the same to be a crime punishable both by fine and imprisonment, and it appearing that he still maintains his polygamous practices in defiance of law, is deemed unworthy to occupy a seat in the House of Representatives as such Delegate, and that he be excluded therefrom.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] raises upon this resolution the question of its consideration at this time.

Mr. DAWES. Back of that is the other question, whether it is before the House at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not. Until the question of consideration is decided the resolution would not be sufficiently before the House to have a ruling upon the point of order. The ruling upon the point made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HALE] could not be reached if the House refused to consider the resolution.

Mr. DAWES. The Chair then decides that the point of order is not waived by the House agreeing to take the resolution into consideration.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is not thereby waived. The resolution will be subject of course to the point of order, whatever weight that may have, after the House passes upon the question of consideration. The point of order is in the nature of debate, and cannot be entertained against the point of consideration, which must be decided instantly.

Mr. DAWES. I think the Chair is right in that ruling.

The question being put on considering at this time the resolution reported by the Committee on Elections, there were ayes 22, noes not counted.

So the House refused to consider the resolution at this time.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the Indian appropriation bill; and pending that motion I move that all amendments be confined to the Choctaw and Chickasaw portions of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will remember that the bill, on coming out of the Committee of the Whole, had been gone over paragraph by paragraph. It was recommitted, and now stands really as an original bill. But it was recommitted upon two points, the Choctaw and Chickasaw amendments, so called. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] asks that all the remainder of the bill may be considered as agreed to when the House goes into Committee of the Whole, and that the consideration by the Committee of the Whole be limited to those two points.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. With the understanding that a separate vote may be taken on those in the House.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Certainly.

The SPEAKER. That of course will be done if the gentleman from Iowa does not call the previous question. The gentleman who has charge of the bill can agree not to call the previous question when the committee reports.

Mr. HOLMAN. This being an original bill, those provisions are in the bill; and if not stricken out in the Committee of the Whole, there would not be a vote on them when reported back to the House.

The SPEAKER. But if the gentleman does not demand the previous question, then a motion to strike out those amendments will be in order in the House.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. That is why I wanted the stipulation made, so as to have that opportunity.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that it be understood in advance that these two propositions shall be voted on in the House.

The SPEAKER. That of course will be done if the gentleman having charge of the bill does not demand the previous question.

Mr. GARFIELD. Allow me to suggest, to save time, that the proposition made through the Speaker, is that the Indian appropriation bill be considered as acted on, except as to those two amendments which are to be pending in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is right.

The SPEAKER. There is no use in making a circuitous understanding about a simple point. If the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE,] who has charge of the bill, does not demand the previous question when the bill comes into the House, then a motion to strike out the amendments in relation to the Chickasaw and Choctaw claims will be in order. That is the simplest way of getting at it.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I think the other understanding would be better, that when the bill comes back into the House these two amendments shall be considered as pending amendments to the bill, to the rest of which we now agree.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Is not this done by unanimous consent? And why should there not be unanimous consent to take a vote now on these amendments in the House?

The SPEAKER. Directly, without going into Committee of the Whole?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Exactly.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Vermont [Mr. WILLARD] suggests that the bill be brought before the House and a vote taken on these two amendments only.

Mr. HOLMAN. That they be considered as in Committee of the Whole, and that the yeas and nays be taken upon them. I do not know that any gentleman desires to discuss the matter further.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Then I suggest that the bill come before the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule.

Mr. FORT. I shall object to that unless I can be permitted to offer another amendment.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will understand precisely the limitations of that understanding, that a motion to reconsider and lay on the table would not be in order, but that the yeas and nays would be in order.

Mr. BECK. Does not the bill go back into Committee of the Whole with the right to amend it all through?

The SPEAKER. In Committee of the Whole?

Mr. BECK. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. If the House goes into Committee of the Whole on the bill without any understanding, the bill must be read all through, and amendments will be in order to it.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I will ask that nothing but the two controverted amendments shall be regarded as under consideration.

Mr. FORT. I have no objection to that, if the gentleman will allow another amendment which I wish to offer to be considered.

Mr. GARFIELD. It involves the matter of several days' time of the House whether we can or cannot make this arrangement.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I think the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] will give way.

Mr. BECK. What I desired was this: I have some amendments which I desired to offer to the bill which were not offered when it was before under consideration, and I desired to offer them in good faith; but understanding from members of the Committee on Appropriations that they will have them considered in the Senate, I will not further insist, but I will take my chances of their being considered in the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that it is proposed that the bill shall be brought before the House with all its provisions agreed to except the Chickasaw and Choctaw amendments, and that those amendments are to be considered in the House under the five-minute rule as in Committee of the Whole. If there be no objection to that understanding, the bill is before the House.

Mr. FORT. I want it understood that I shall have an opportunity to offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. To any other part of the bill than those amendments which the Chair has named?

Mr. FORT. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. To any other feature of the bill?

Mr. FORT. Yes, sir.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. FORT. I wish to offer an additional section to the bill, which I ask to have read.

The Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That if the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War shall deem it expedient, the Army clothing now on hand of patterns or style not in use shall be issued and delivered to Indians at the regulation price thereof, which shall be in lieu of any money hereinbefore specially appropriated for clothing; in which case the clothing to be so issued shall be turned over from the War Department to the Interior Department and properly receipted for.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to allowing the gentleman from Illinois to offer this amendment?

Mr. SHANKS. I object; it is forcing old clothing upon my friends. It is bad enough to be an Indian without having old clothing forced on you.

Mr. FORT. Then I will insist upon my objection.

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] persists in his objection it will not avail him anything, because should he offer his amendment in Committee of the Whole the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] or any other gentleman could raise the point of order that it was new legislation, and therefore must be excluded.

Mr. FORT. If he chooses to take that responsibility—

Mr. SHANKS. I take the responsibility not to have old clothes forced on my friends.

Mr. FORT. Then I will insist upon my objection.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Then I must move to go into Committee of the Whole on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I suggest to the Committee on Appropriations to take up some other appropriation bill and let this go over until Monday next, when the rules can be suspended.

Mr. RANDALL. There is the pension appropriation bill.

Mr. SHANKS. I will withdraw my objection in order to facilitate business.

Mr. FORT. Then I will withdraw my objection.

The SPEAKER. Objection being withdrawn, the bill is now before the House, and agreed to by the House, except the provisions in relation to the Choctaw and Chickasaw claims, which are to be regarded as pending amendments, and to be considered under the five-minute rule as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I now ask permission to correct an error in the printed bill now before the House. The two provisions relating to the Choctaw and Chickasaw claims are printed as one section. The clause in relation to the Chickasaws was a separate amendment, put on by a distinct vote, and should not be connected with the Choctaw provision at all. I therefore ask that the Chickasaw provision be regarded as a separate section, as section 11.

The SPEAKER. They were separate amendments, there is no question of that; they were so considered in the understanding just agreed to, and will be now so treated.

The amendment in relation to the Choctaw claim, printed as section 10 of the bill, was then read, as follows:

SEC. 10. That in order to fulfill and discharge the obligations of the United States under the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes or nations of Indians, concluded June 22, 1855, and in order to provide for the payment and satisfaction of the award of the Senate, made on the 9th day of March, 1859, under the provisions of article 11 of said treaty, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required, upon the passage of this act, to pay to the treasurer of said Choctaw Nation, or to such other agent as the council may designate, in bonds of the United States, bearing interest at 4½ per cent., of the description authorized by the act of Congress approved July 14, 1870, entitled "An act to authorize the refunding of the national debt," the sum of $2,332,561, the amount of the said award, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, from the date of said award until the payment thereof, as herein provided: Provided, however, That the sum of $250,000, heretofore paid in part discharge of said award, shall be deducted from the amount at the date of said part payment; and that the payment of said award, as herein directed, shall be in full satisfaction and discharge of all the claims of the said nation, and of those of the individual members thereof, on account of said award: And provided further, That the said sum shall be paid by said treasurer or agent under the direction and supervision of the United States Indian agent to the claimants entitled thereto, as is provided and required by the twelfth article of said treaty of 1855: And provided further, That before the Secretary of the Treasury shall pay the said award, as herein provided, the national council of the Choctaw Nation shall pass an act in approval of this act, and shall accept the payment of the said award, as herein provided, as a full discharge and satisfaction of all the claims of the said nation, or of individual members thereof, on account of the said award: Provided, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall not recognize, allow, or pay any claims, or pretended claims, which have heretofore been demanded, or which may hereafter be demanded, by any attorney or claim agent, or any pretended owner of said award, or any part thereof, or any pretended purchaser, or any contract, or pretended contract, made on behalf of said Choctaw Nation for the payment of any compensation or fees for the prosecution of the claim of said nation against the Government of the United States.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I desire to move a substitute for the section just read.

Mr. CESSNA. Before that is done, I desire to state that there is a slight difference of opinion among members as to the true condition of this bill. Some are of opinion that this bill, as it stands upon the Journal, contains what are called the two amendments, the Choctaw and Chickasaw amendments, and that we are to proceed upon motions to strike them out. Others regard the position as this: that the bill does not contain those two provisions, but they are to be treated as propositions to be added to the bill. Before proceeding further it is of importance that this question should be determined, so that we may know exactly the true position of the case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore, (Mr. POLAND.) The Chair understands the arrangement to be that sections 10 and 11 are to be treated as amendments pending to the bill. The Chair did not pay very particular attention to the proposed arrangement, but he understands that those sections are to be treated as amendments pending to the bill.

Mr. CESSNA. And the bill to be regarded as not containing those two sections?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As the Chair understands, they are to be treated as amendments pending.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I understand, and I made the proposition, that these sections were to be considered as in the bill when the bill came before the House, and that there should be a vote upon them in the House.

Mr. SPEER. O, no.

Mr. FIELD. That was the bargain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands from the Clerk that it was understood at the Clerk's desk that these two sections were to be treated as amendments pending to the bill, and not as portions of the bill itself.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. That was precisely the understanding. After the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] had made his proposition, it was suggested that as we were asked to agree to all the rest of the bill, it might be brought before the House as a bill agreed to with these two propositions pending as amendments. That was so stated by the Speaker before the agreement was made.

Mr. CESSNA. I submit it can make no possible difference in the world, except in the case of a tie vote, whether it is a motion to add to or a motion to strike out.

The SPEAKER. The understanding submitted by the Chair was that these two sections were to be regarded as pending to the bill, but it makes not a particle of difference.

Mr. CESSNA. Certainly not.

The SPEAKER. That is the understanding, and there is no necessity of making any point upon it.

Mr. CESSNA. I do not want to make any point at all, but I want the House to understand what the fact is.

The SPEAKER. The two sections, sections 10 and 11 in the printed bill, are to be treated as amendments pending to the bill. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PARKER] moves a substitute for section 10.

Mr. FORT. I would like to know how the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri can be pending under the arrangement. I thought it was distinctly understood that there were only two questions to be voted on—one the Chickasaw amendment and the other the Choctaw amendment.

The SPEAKER. They were to be open to debate and amendment as in Committee of the Whole. Amendments are not in order except to those portions of the bill. But it was the distinct understanding that to these particular parts amendments might be offered.

Mr. FORT. But I do not understand that that amendment was proposed at all.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knew nothing about any particular amendment; but the understanding was that the Choctaw and Chickasaw amendments should be open to debate and amendment as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CESSNA. And under that arrangement any gentleman can offer an amendment to either section if not prevented by a call of the previous question.

The SPEAKER. Certainly; these amendments are open to amendment until the previous question shuts off amendments, which in this case is synonymous with the Committee of the Whole rising. The amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PARKER] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out section 10 of the printed bill and insert the following:

SECTION.—That in order to fulfill and discharge the obligations of the United States under the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes or nations of Indians, concluded June 22, 1855, and in order to provide for the payment and satisfaction of the award of the Senate made on the 9th day of March, 1859, under the provisions of article 11 of said treaty, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required upon the passage of this act to execute bonds of the United States, bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent. per annum, of any issue heretofore authorized by law, to the amount of $2,332,560.85 and the interest thereon at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum from the date of said award until the payment thereof as herein provided: Provided, however, The sum of $250,000 heretofore paid in part discharge of said award shall be deducted from the amount at the date of said part payment; and that the payment of said award as herein directed shall be in full satisfaction and discharge of all the claims of the said nation, and of those of the individual members thereof, an account of said award: And provided further, That the said bonds when executed shall be held by the Secretary of the Treasury for the exclusive use and benefit of the Choctaw Nation until such time as all the claims due the individual members of said Choctaw Nation from said nation shall be audited and allowed by a tribunal to be legally constituted by the Choctaw Nation; a full and complete list of said claims, properly and lawfully certified, shall be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury, when said Secretary shall pay to the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation such an amount of said bonds as shall be necessary to pay said individual claims; and if any of said amount hereby appropriated shall remain after paying said individual claims, the same shall be held in trust by the Secretary of the Treasury to constitute a general Choctaw fund, yielding an annual interest of not less than 5 per cent., and no part of which shall be paid out as annuities but shall be regularly and judiciously applied under the direction of the general council of the Choctaw Nation to the support of their government for the purposes of education and such other objects as may be best calculated to promote and advance the improvement, welfare, and happiness of the Choctaw people and their descendants. But if the amount hereby appropriated shall not be sufficient to pay the whole of said claims of individual Indians against the Choctaw Nation, then said claims are to be paid pro rata, under the award of the Senate made on the 9th day of March, 1859, under the provisions of article 11 of the Treaty of June 22, 1855: Provided, That nothing is to be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury until the provisions of this law are accepted by the Choctaw Nation through their general council: And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall not recognize, allow, or pay any claims or pretended claims which have heretofore been demanded, or which may hereafter be demanded, by any attorney or claim agent, or any pretended owner of said award, or any part thereof, or any pretended purchaser, or any contract or pretended contract, made on behalf of said Choctaw Nation for the payment of any compensation or fees for the prosecution of the claim of said nation against the Government of the United States.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I desire to say but a few words in explanation of this amendment. The eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty of 1855 provide that the claims of the individual Indians shall be first satisfied, and that if any amount remains after settling these claims, it shall be held in trust by the Secretary of the Treasury. The amendment provides that these bonds shall all be held by the Secretary of the Treasury until these people audit and adjust these individual claims and present to the Secretary of the Treasury a certified list of them, legally and properly ascertained; that when this is done he shall pay to the treasurer of the tribe, out of this appropriation, such amount as is necessary to satisfy these individual claims; that if anything remains after paying these claims as thus ascertained, the Secretary of the Treasury shall retain that amount as a trust fund. Thus the amendment is in exact accordance with the requirements of the eleventh and twelfth sections of the treaty of 1855.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I wish to put an inquiry to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. PARKER] in regard to the effect of his amendment. It is reliably stated that these claims have been bought up by speculators at a small price, and are now held by them. I wish to know whether there is anything in the gentleman's amendment which will prevent this money from being paid to these speculators, who now own or control these claims.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. As I understand the language of my substitute, it prevents the payment of any of this money to that class of persons. That is my object at least. My amendment contemplates that the money shall be paid to the Indians; that it shall be held by the Secretary of the Treasury until these Indians shall have ascertained the amount of liabilities of the tribe to the individual Indians; and when such liability has been presented in a certified form to the Secretary of the Treasury, he is to pay to the treasurer of the nation such amount as is necessary to satisfy those claims. If any amount remains, that is to be retained by him as a trust fund, the interest upon which is to be paid by him as on other trust funds. The last part of the amendment, as I understand, cuts out all claims whatever except those designated in the amendment; that is, those of the Indians.

Mr. GUNCKEL. I ask the attention of the House to the last clause of the amendment. The amendment has not been printed, and I only speak from hearing it read; but I am very sure that the last clause provides simply that no attorney or claimant for fees shall receive any part of the money. There is no provision that the speculators who are said to have bought up these claims at a very small price shall not be paid in full. It is desirable that the House should know whether we are appropriating these millions of money for the benefit of the Indians or for speculators.

Mr. SHANKS. I would like to have read a provision of the act of May 21, 1872, regulating the mode of making private contracts with Indians. Under this provision no one can get this money unless entitled to it under such circumstances as leave no doubt of the propriety of the payment.

The SPEAKER. The last proviso of the amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And provided further, That the Secretary of the Treasury shall not recognize, allow, or pay any claims, or pretended claims, which have heretofore been demanded or which may hereafter be demanded by any attorney or claim agent, or any pretended owner of said award, or any part thereof, or pretended purchaser of any contract, or pretended contract, made on behalf of said Choctaw Nation for the payment of any compensation or fees for the prosecution of the claim of said nation against the United States.

Mr. GUNCKEL. That proviso merely guards against the payment of fees or like compensation; but what is there to prevent the payment of these claims?

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. It covers all manner of claims, whether parties claim title by reason of service or by reason of purchase. I do not possibly see how we can make the language stronger.

Mr. McNULTA. Does not this, while directing the Treasurer of the United States shall not recognize or pay any claims for attorney's fees or other compensation, in fact direct the payment of this money to the treasurer of this tribe of Indians, who will of course pay the lobby? In other words, it prohibits the payment of the lobby by the Treasurer of the United States, but puts the money in the hands of the treasurer of the Choctaw tribe, who is bound to pay the lobby under the contracts with these Indians. I should like to ask the gentleman further whether he believes the Choctaw Indians will ever get one dollar of this money?

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. The gentleman from Illinois indicates by his question that the only way by which the Indian can get any of this money is to provide that it shall not be paid to anybody—to the Indians or anybody else.

Mr. McNULTA. Not at all; but I wish to have the money paid to the individual Indians or to their heirs. The Indian Commissioner unites with us in this view.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, in 1855, when the Senate made this award, they thought these Choctaw people were capable of taking care of themselves. Therefore by the terms of the award, and by the terms of the treaty, the award being made in 1859 and the treaty in 1855, they provided that this money should be paid in a certain manner. This amendment provides it shall be paid in the precise method prescribed by the treaty of 1855 and the terms of the award in 1859.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. McNULTA] suggests that it should be paid to the individual Indians. Well, who are you going to have pay it to these Indians? Are you going to have each individual Indian of that tribe, with his squaw and papoose, come here to the door of the Treasury and demand of the Treasury of the United States, "I want my pro rata share of this money?" From my observation of the way Indians are treated when they come here to Washington I think they would respectfully decline to come here to draw this amount of money in that manner, or any other amount.

There is no other way of making this possible unless you pay to somebody for this people. It is an absolute impossibility the individual claimants of this money in the nation should come here in a body to get it. The treaty contemplates these men should not come to the Treasurer of the United States for it, but that they should go to the tribe. Their claim is a claim against the tribe. The tribe under the treaty obligates itself by reason of its relation to the individual members of the tribe to make the claim against the Government of the United States, to collect it and distribute the award among the members of the tribe.

If there is any other way to make it safer than we prescribe in this amendment, I profess I do not know what it is. The Committee on Appropriations believe it is the safest way in which it can be paid. I understand the Committee on Indian Affairs have come to the same conclusion.

Mr. McNULTA. I do not understand it that way.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I understand the report of the majority of a committee is the committee's report, and the majority of the Committee on Indian Affairs have reported almost precisely this very amendment, or agreed upon it for report to the House. Therefore the majority of that committee, being the committee so far as reporting is concerned, have agreed to the same thing.

When gentlemen assert it can be paid to the individual members of the tribe, it seems to me to be only an indirect way of avoiding the payment of our obligation to these Indians. Why not come manfully, boldly, and bravely and say we ought not to pay these Indians and will not pay them? My friend from Illinois [Mr. FORT] meets it in that way. Here is another gentleman who says he will meet it in the same way.

A MEMBER. And so do I.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. These gentlemen came to it by induction. When you do that you simply say, after the Senate fixed the amount of money due these people, after Congress has recognized this contract as binding by appropriating the sum of $500,000, you will at this late day repudiate your obligations after they have been determined and fixed by the highest court known in the world. There is no principle of international law which has ever been known to a civilized nation which permits a nation to go back of an award when that award is in the precise terms of the treaty submitting the matter to arbitration. No writer of international law has ever laid down any such principle. Suppose the Geneva award had been made within the terms of the treaty submitting the differences between this Government and Great Britain to arbitration, and the payment of that award had been withheld for fifteen years, and that the British Parliament then, when the appropriation of money was to be made to pay that award, should say, "We repudiate it; we will not pay it." Yet that is the case precisely. It is precisely parallel to the case here when we propose, after the Senate has made the award in favor of the Choctaw Indians of the amount due them, to say we will repudiate the payment of that award.

Well, that is a matter that gentlemen can settle with themselves; but I assert it as a principle that there never was an award, where that award was within the precise terms of the proposition submitting it to an umpire, that has ever yet been repudiated by a civilized nation. You may repudiate this, but when you do it you say to these men that you make a treaty with them by the terms of which you hold them fast while at the same time you propose to be loose.

Suppose the Senate had decided in 1859 that there was nothing due these people; is anybody so foolish as to believe that any gentleman on this floor would have got up here and asked that we should repudiate that finding? It would have been all right then. And it is a very different thing for us to do this from what our doing it would be if this nation were powerful; if they could hold us responsible before that great tribunal which makes and unmakes nations, the tribunal of war. But they are weak; they are an inoffensive people, with no power to compel the enforcement of this. This is all in our own hands, and when we repudiate our obligation we do it contrary to every principle of law, contrary to every principle of justice, and contrary to every principle of right that has ever been recognized among civilized people.

When the Senate made this finding it had all the documents in its possession.

Mr. THOMPSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Yes, sir.

Mr. THOMPSON. I wish to inquire whether the gentleman from Missouri holds that the Senate of the United States, without the knowledge of this branch of the Legislature, can enter upon an agreement with the Choctaws or any other persons, constituting themselves a board of arbitrators, and find an award without the knowledge or consent of this body that will be binding either in law or in honor upon the nation?

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I answer the gentleman from Pennsylvania in this way. Ever since the foundation of our Government the power to make treaties with foreign nations and with domestic nations known as Indian tribes has reposed in the President and the Senate. When that treaty is made it is tantamount to a law of Congress. It can be repealed by a law of Congress, and until it is repealed it has an equal dignity and an equal power with a law of Congress. This award made by the Senate of the United States was made in pursuance of a solemn treaty entered into by the treaty-making power and consequently the law-making power; and in pursuance of that law, which is known as a treaty, this award and this finding were made by the Senate of the United States.

Mr. THOMPSON. The gentleman does not answer my question. It is this: Does the gentleman hold that the Senate of the United States, disregarding the duties and rights of this body, can make a treaty and by that treaty constitute itself a tribunal to whom are to be referred this important question, and then decide one way or the other, and that that decision shall be final in law or honor?

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I will answer the gentleman: The Senate of the United States can, with the President, together, make a law by which they agree to submit a proposition in pursuance of and within the terms of that law to anybody they please. They have the right to make treaties. It is true that, if there is any money to be provided for under the provisions of the treaty, that has to be appropriated by the whole of Congress, consisting of the House and the Senate. And the Senate in this treaty recognized that fact, and it provided solemnly, after deliberate investigation of the thing, that the treaty made by it, or that the finding made by it, in 1859 should be final, and that the commissioner in chancery, in that case the Secretary of the Interior, should report his action not to the Senate but to Congress. He did report it to Congress. Congress approved that action by passing in 1861 an appropriation in part payment of it, thereby recognizing the power of the Senate, thereby recognizing the validity of the claim, thereby recognizing the justice of the demand.

Mr. THOMPSON. I will make this further inquiry of the gentleman. I wish him to answer distinctly whether he bases the liability of the Government to pay this award on the validity of the treaty and the award itself, or whether he alleges that the act of 1861, appropriating the money, operated as an estoppel?

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. The Senate of the United States and the President, I will answer the gentleman, made a treaty, by which they agreed to submit certain things to a board of arbitrators at Geneva. That board made a finding. We have accepted the money as the result of that finding. And do you now undertake to say that the Senate had no right by treaty to provide for that award in that case? This is precisely a parallel case.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McNULTA rose.

Mr. FORT. I would like before my colleague [Mr. McNULTA] goes on to have an understanding how this debate is proceeding. Is it under the five-minute rule?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri got a liberal allowance for his five minutes.

Mr. FORT. We have not had a show on this side of the question yet.

Mr. McNULTA. Inasmuch as the gentleman from Missouri has referred to the action of the Committee on Indian Affairs, I may say that I do not understand that the manner of the payment of this money has ever received the full indorsement of that committee, or if it has, it has been without my knowledge as a member of the committee. I believe it is conceded, or at least I concede the point, that this money is due to the Choctaws.

Mr. SHANKS. I want to say that the committee has passed upon it, but the gentleman from Illinois, who is often absent, was unfortunately not present on the occasion.

Mr. McNULTA. I am very often there, however, when my colleague on the Committee on Indian Affairs from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] is absent. I have attended every meeting of that committee, except when prevented by sickness, which has occurred several times within the last two weeks. I was not there on the morning when I am informed this matter was discussed; but I was there when there was a motion pending representing the views of the minority of that committee providing for the payment of this money directly to the individual Choctaws.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I desire to say to my friend from Illinois, [Mr. McNULTA,] if he will permit me, that in his absence a sub-committee of the Committee on Indian Affairs prepared an amendment very carefully, which it was supposed would be adopted by the Committee on Appropriations. That amendment is now in the hands of the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. COMINGO,] who is trying to get an opportunity to offer it. I think it will cover the whole ground.

Mr. McNULTA. I shall be glad to yield to the gentleman from Missouri when the five minutes allowed me have expired. Mr. Speaker, I believe that justice and the honor of the nation demands that this payment should be made to these individual Indians; but the reason the minority resist this measure is that they believe that the Choctaw Indians will never receive a dollar of this money under the pending bill. I will in the committee or in the House cheerfully support a proposition to pay this money to the individual Indians, to whom it is actually due, and exists as a just and subsisting demand upon the Government, not only for the amount proposed to be appropriated in this bill, but for the full amount reported by the committee to be due to the Indians.

Mr. ATKINS. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to tell us why he does not believe that the Indians will ever get this money.

Mr. McNULTA. In the first place, I believe they would not get this money because every proposition made to pay it directly to the individual Indians is resisted by gentlemen favoring this amendment. That is one reason. I do it, for the second reason, that around the committee room there is a rumor that the lobby that hangs around Washington owns every dollar of this claim; and while I have no direct tangible evidence of this, I doubt not such is the fact. The spirit of the treaty is for the protection of the individual Indian claimants. This spirit and purpose are not being pursued by any proposition so far, but are being destroyed in a strained effort to maintain what is claimed to be the letter of the treaty. My colleague from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] will, I think, admit that the individual claims under article 12 amount to nearly a million dollars in excess of the Senate award. If these Indians and their heirs are to receive this money, it is manifestly the best way to pay the individuals direct from the Treasury, without the interposition of the treasurer or other agent of the Choctaw Nation; and if it should appear that there is a surplus, let it go direct to the general Choctaw fund, held in trust for their benefit by the Government. The conferring of power of payment upon any agent of the Choctaws, who is in no way accountable to the United States Government, can only operate to give an opportunity for pretended owners of this claim to get possession of the money appropriated for the Indians; and my limited experience in Indian affairs teaches me to believe the Indians get their just dues only where the greatest care is exercised by the representatives of the Government and the strongest safeguards thrown around their property—such safeguards as do not appear in this measure. I yield to my colleague from Missouri, [Mr. COMINGO.]

Mr. COMINGO. I propose to offer a substitute for the substitute of my colleague from Missouri, [Mr. PARKER,] and I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Sec. 10. That in order to fulfill and discharge the obligations of the United States under the eleventh and twelfth articles of the treaty between the United States and the Choctaw and Chickasaw tribes or nations of Indians, concluded June 22, 1855, and in order to provide for the payment and satisfaction of the award of the Senate, made on the 9th day of March, 1859, under the provisions of article 11 of said treaty, the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required, upon the passage of this act, to execute bonds of the United States, of any issue now authorized by law, bearing interest at the rate of 4½ per cent. per annum, to the amount of $2,332,560.85, with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the date of said award to the passage of this act: Provided, however, That the sum of $250,000 heretofore paid in part discharge of said award shall be deducted from the amount as of the date of said part payment. And said bonds when executed as aforesaid shall be held by the Secretary of the Treasury for the purpose of satisfying said award as hereinafter provided: And it is hereby further enacted, That as soon as the proper authorities of said Choctaw Nation shall have ascertained and determined the amount of the claims due to individuals of said nation, the payment of which is assumed by the terms of the twelfth article of said treaty, and shall have filed with said Secretary of the Treasury a list of the same showing the amount thereof, properly authenticated, said Secretary shall deliver to the treasurer of said nation such an amount of said bonds as shall be equal to the amount of said claims so ascertained and certified; and if any part of said bonds shall remain they shall be held by said Secretary in trust as a part of the general Choctaw fund, as provided in the thirteenth article of said treaty; and out of the proceeds of said bonds so delivered to the treasurer of said nation he shall, under the direction and supervision of the United States Indian agent, pay to the claimants found and determined to be entitled thereto as herein provided the amount of their respective claims: And provided further, That before the Secretary of the Treasury shall deliver said bonds as herein provided the national council of the Choctaw Nation shall pass an act in approval of this act, and shall accept its provisions as a full discharge and satisfaction of all the claims of the said nation, or of individual members thereof, on account of the said award. And if the proceeds of said bonds shall be insufficient to pay the amount of said claims, the same shall be paid pro rata: And it is further provided, That no part of the proceeds of said bonds shall be paid to any assignee of said claimants, but that all payments made in pursuance of this act shall be made to the original claimants, or their lawful heirs, devisees, or personal representatives.

Mr. COMINGO. I wish to state to the House that the amendment just read is one that was agreed upon by a sub-committee of the Committee on Indian Affairs. We have endeavored as far as possible to steer clear of the objections that have been urged by gentlemen against the payment of this money. The idea seems to obtain to a very great extent either that this money is to be stolen from the United States, or is to be stolen by the lobby. As a matter of course gentlemen who entertain that idea will refuse to place this fund where it can be absorbed by the lobby. I think if my amendment is sufficiently understood no gentleman will further urge the objection that this money will not go into the hands of the Indians, or will not be used to pay the debt that is now resting upon the nation.

I believe I am correct in stating—I at least may assume so for the purpose of my argument—that there are not a dozen members on this floor who object to the payment of this money. I apprehend there are not a dozen members on this floor who do not admit the justice of this Choctaw claim. It is passing strange that any gentleman will assume that we do not owe this money, when the fact has been so conclusively determined. Admitting even that the Senate of the United States could not make an award which would be binding upon the Government, admitting even that we may reopen this case and reinvestigate it from beginning to end, there can be no good reason assigned why we should not pay the amount awarded. If gentlemen desire to do justice in the premises and wish to reinvestigate this whole claim, I presume the Choctaw Nation will not object.

I maintain, however, that the action of the Senate is final, that this is an award binding upon the people of the United States, and when we hesitate or delay to pay it we are disgracing the Government. It is manifest to every one who will examine this claim that we have done this people injustice in withholding this money from them. Not only that, but we have disgraced ourselves, if I may be allowed the use of that expression here, in refusing or delaying the payment. If gentlemen will refer to a report to which the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] alluded, they will find that we have made these Indians bear the expense of our own bounty. Instead of paying them for their land, as was contemplated when the treaty of 1830 was consummated, we have deducted from the amount due them for that land every imaginable sum that we could conjure up against them as a debt. Not only so, but I state it here with shame that in this report, which was made by Mr. Sebastian, and which has been virtually adopted by this House, we make these poor people pay the expense of our own bounty. We make them pay the 5 per cent. on the proceeds of the sales of land, which 5 per cent. our Government in its beneficence gave to the State of Mississippi; we take it from these Indians and put it into the pockets of the people of Mississippi.

Not only that, but when our Government felt strong and rich enough to give every man a farm, we gave to the State of Mississippi nearly if not quite three hundred thousand acres of swamp and overflowed lands embraced within this Choctaw grant, and we make these people bear the expense of that munificence of the Government. We take from them the $600,000, as proposed by Mr. Sebastian in his report, and as this Congress has done by an amendment ingrafted upon the original provision of the appropriation bill.

In view of the fact that these lands were sold by the Indians to the United States, and we have deducted from the amount due for the lands more than any man with a good conscience could deduct, is it right that we should still continue an act of injustice toward a weak and defenseless people which we never would attempt to commit against a nation with power to assert its right with a strong arm? I hope gentlemen will no longer delay an act of justice to a people who cannot compel the performance of it. I say with shame that I am to-day advocating the payment of a debt which should have been paid half a century ago.

Mr. FORT. There are many grave reasons why I oppose this amendment. The principal reason is that I am opposed to considering matters of this importance in connection with an appropriation bill. They cannot be fully discussed and understood. When they are brought before the House as amendments they are not printed, and there is no opportunity to understand and fully consider them. This amendment is longer than the average of bills that come before this House for consideration, appropriates a larger sum of money, and is ten times as important as most of them are. It is only in manuscript, and is read at the Clerk's desk, and with no opportunity offered for members to examine and see what its bearings may be. In my judgment this system of legislation is dangerous and is wholly vicious.

If this is an honest claim, if it has equity and justice with it, if it has the effect of an award to sustain it, then it does not need to be brought forward in this manner; it should have been introduced as a separate bill and referred to an appropriate committee, reported back to the House, and considered as other bills are considered, and then we could have voted upon it as an independent measure. If any one of my constituents or a constituent of any other gentleman here has a little claim of $100 or more or less for a horse lost in the Government service, or any other claim, he is compelled to come here, have his bill introduced, printed, referred to a committee, and considered by itself. His application, if any member were so foolish as to make it, to ingraft it upon any appropriation bill, would be spurned at once and treated with contempt and derision, as it should be.

The regular appropriation bills, such as the one now before the House, should contain no provision nor appropriation of any sum of money except for the expenses of the Government for the current fiscal year.

This must have been the view of the Committee on Appropriations when they reported this bill to the House; and I wish to respectfully and distinctly call the attention of gentlemen to the fact it did not then contain either the Choctaw or Chickasaw clause.

And further, Mr. Speaker, let it be remembered that no committee of this Congress has taken the responsibility of reporting in favor of either of these claims. It is brought in here by way of amendment. I believe this practice is dangerous and wrong, and I am reminded that most of the objectionable measures by way of appropriations which have passed this House recently came up in this very way as riders tacked on to appropriation bills. It occurs to me we have had some sad experience in this direction, which ought to warn us at least. I am reminded by my friend near me that the Pacific Mail subsidy, which has created some stir, was tacked on to an appropriation bill and went through the House in this way. I take it, sir, that it is not right to attempt to load down an appropriation bill with these objectionable riders; it is not right to use an appropriation bill to carry through an objectionable measure. If this claim is right and just, let it be presented in the ordinary way, and let it stand upon its own merits. Let a bill be brought in by the committee having charge of Indian affairs; let that committee indorse and manage the matter before the House, and then it can properly be considered.

I have other objections to this measure. The gentleman's amendment, even if the claim were just and right, is not in proper form. It makes the Treasury of the United States in a great measure the tribunal before whom these claimants and attorneys interested who claim they have rendered service for the Choctaws are to appear and prove their claims. It imposes on this officer a duty totally foreign to his legitimate business. If any persons have rendered any service for or advanced any money to the Choctaws, let them go to these Indians at their homes and demand to be paid. I consider this a scheme to enable attorneys to collect their enormous fees.

I am informed, but for the truth of which I do not vouch, that one single attorney claims a fee of $125,000 for an opinion given to the Choctaws on this claim, and he is expecting to collect it under this amendment at the Treasury of the United States. Very convenient for him, but it might be very unfair for the Choctaw.

Mr. COMINGO. The gentleman misapprehends the amendment. These claims are to be audited by courts appointed by the council of the Indians, and a list of the claims is to be filed with the Secretary of the Interior; the Treasurer of the United States is not to adjudicate the claims.

Mr. FORT. Well, Mr. Speaker, why do we hear anything about these claims? Who knows anything about them? Who has a right to know? Why are we called upon to consider them here? My good friend from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] will certainly admit that it is a very strange thing that we should be called upon to consider these pretended claims against the Choctaws at all. This amendment is offered upon the presumption that we owe the Choctaws and therefore ought to pay them. But considering the phraseology of this clause offered it would seem, and indeed we can hardly escape the conclusion, that it is claimed that the Choctaws owe somebody, and this was offered to assist such persons to make good their collections from the poor Choctaws. The Choctaws are now, I am informed, the richest community of people on the face of the earth, and if they owe anybody, let such persons go to the Choctaws and collect their claims.

Mr. COMINGO. If the gentleman will allow me to answer, I will state that the payment of these claims is provided for in the treaty of 1855. They are claims against the Choctaws themselves.

Mr. FORT. One single attorney has a bill of $125,000; and since the gentleman has opened up the question and driven me to it, I will say that there now sits in the galleries, looking down upon us, men who within the last few days have said that they had stock in the Choctaw claim; some to the amount of $1,000, some more, some less, to make it go. In fact, from what I am informed, I do believe this claim is nothing but a "pool" and a plaything, that is knocked and kicked from one end of Pennsylvania avenue to the other.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Will the gentleman name the man to whom he refers?

Mr. FORT. I can give a committee the names of the persons if he desires it to be investigated. He can have more than one name, if I am not misinformed.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Name them here. I want to know these facts myself.

Mr. FORT. I will give the gentleman the names whenever a committee is appointed to investigate this matter; and I hope one will be appointed. I know what I am talking about. I am not to be frightened by the gentleman from Missouri.

Now, sir, if this were a fair claim for money due to these Choctaws to be paid to them individually, we would hear very little said about these other claimants, about which there now seems to be some concern. If they are to be paid at all, I desire them to be paid in some way that they will actually get the money. It may be the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] would accomplish that result, but I fear it will not. If we are to pay them at all, let us make a muster-roll of the whole Choctaw tribe, and send a paymaster out there and pay the money to them. But, sir, I maintain that even if this proposition is right, this is no time or place to consider it. The matter is too important to be tacked on to an appropriation bill and brought before the House to be voted upon without the amendment being even printed.

Here is over four $4,000,000 to be appropriated by this clause upon an amendment not printed, and which has not been recommended to this House by the report of any committee.

Mr. COMINGO. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that every committee that has ever considered this claim has reported favorably upon it?

Mr. FORT. O, yes; I am glad the gentleman has called my attention to that point. We have been told heretofore and often, and with great emphasis, and we are told to-day, that committee after committee for forty years has examined this claim and reported favorably upon it. I repeat to the gentleman that no committee of this Congress has so reported; and if that be true, as they state, is it not likewise true that the Senate and House of Representatives during those same forty years have never sustained the report of any of these committees? Congress has steadily and persistently, time after time, refused to make this appropriation. Now, who have been wrong—these committees of which gentlemen speak or Congress? If committees have been in favor of the claim, Congress has year after year rejected it until it has grown old and hoary with age; and the only thing that seems to entitle it to respect to-day is its antiquity.

The very first session of the Senate that convened after this treaty and pretended award mentioned by gentlemen refused to appropriate any money upon it, and virtually rejected the claim.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that all the claim that ever did exist due from the Government to these Choctaws has been paid, and I ask the Clerk to read what the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. BOUTWELL, says on this question. I think we should pause and take our reckoning before we launch out into this sea of sentimentalism and appropriate four millions of the people's money in response to the fanatical cry of "Lo! the poor Indian," and in response to this incessant hum that we hear from strange quarters about the "poor red man's wrongs." God knows I have no prejudice against the Indian. I claim to be his true friend. I want to pay these Choctaws if we owe them. But I am not yet convinced we owe them a single cent. I do not believe we do. They are not poor; as I said before, these Indians are the richest people on the earth. Yet if we owe them I want to pay them, but I would appropriate the money in a separate bill.

Mr. Speaker, I ask gentlemen to hear what the Secretary of the Treasury says about this claim.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
January 6, 1873.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith a report made by the Solicitor of the Treasury upon the claim against the Government known as the Choctaw claim. In this report the origin, nature, and history of the claim are fully presented. The Solicitor finds that the claim has not only been paid, but that it is barred by a receipt or acknowledgment of full satisfaction given by the authorities of the Choctaw Nation in the year 1852. A photographic copy of the paper referred to is also transmitted.

After such an examination as I have been able to give to the subject, I concur in the conclusion reached by the Solicitor.

By the acts making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department of March 2, 1861, and March 3, 1871, the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to issue to the Choctaw tribe of Indians bonds of the United States to the amount of $250,000.

The issue of these bonds has been delayed by the investigations that have taken place, chiefly with reference to the authority of certain persons claiming to be agents for the Choctaw Nation, but partly by proceedings in the supreme court of this District and in the Supreme Court of the United States, instituted for the purpose of compelling the Secretary of the Treasury to issue the bonds to one of the parties claimant.

These questions will be disposed of in the ordinary course of proceedings, and there will then remain no legal, and perhaps no valid, reason why the Secretary of the Treasury should not issue the bonds, unless Congress shall see fit to interpose by legislation.

Very respectfully,

GEO. S. BOUTWELL,
Secretary.

Hon. JAMES G. BLAINE,
Speaker House of Representatives, Washington, District of Columbia.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I have in my hand the receipt, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas by an act of Congress entitled "An act to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the service of the fiscal year ending the 30th of June, 1852, it is provided that after the 30th day of June, 1852, all payments of interest on the amounts awarded Choctaw claimants, under the fourteenth article of the treaty of Dancing Rabbit Creek, for lands on which they resided, but which it is impossible to give them, shall cease, and that the Secretary of the Interior be directed to pay said claimants the amount of principal awarded in each case respectively, and that amount necessary for this purpose be appropriated, not exceeding $572,000; and that the final payment and satisfaction of said awards shall be first ratified and approved as a final release of all claims of such parties under the fourteenth article of said treaty, by the proper national authority of the Choctaws, in such form as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior: Now, be it known, that the said general council of the Choctaw Nation do hereby ratify and approve the final payment and satisfaction of said awards, agreeably to the provisions of the act aforesaid, as a final release of all claims of such parties, under the fourteenth article of said treaty.

NOVEMBER 6, 1852.

Passed in the senate.

Approved.

A. NAIL, Speaker.

D. MCCOY, President.

GEORGE W. HARKINS.
GEORGE FOLSOM.

Mr. SHANKS. It will be observed that the receipt just read is dated November, 1852—just three years before the making of the treaty on which this claim rests!

Mr. LAWRENCE. This receipt is appended to an opinion of the Solicitor of the Treasury to the Secretary of the Treasury, in relation to the Choctaw claim, and is dated November 14, 1872. The opinion covers forty-six printed pages; and it is a full and masterly statement of the whole case, showing that the claim is utterly unfounded and ought not to be paid.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, a short time ago, in an impassioned appeal made by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PARKER,] we were implored not to repudiate the solemn obligation of this Government. I hope I may escape any just aspersion on that ground. Great stress is laid upon the fact that this is based upon a treaty, and it is sought to carry along with it the idea that this is the same sort of a treaty which is made with foreign and independent powers. I know of no express grant of power in the Constitution to the President or the Senate authorizing them to make and ratify treaties with the Indian tribes. I take it these treaties have come down to us in accordance with usage; and all the difficulties we have had in reference to these Indians, and especially on subjects like the one now pending, have arisen from this usage.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Let me interrupt the gentleman from Indiana to have read a paragraph from the decision of the Supreme Court in regard to these Indian treaties.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. I do not like to be interrupted.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I only ask to have read a short extract from the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. I understand what the gentleman asks to be read is a decision of the Supreme Court that we have power to make treaties with these Indians.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. It will not take more than a minute.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. Very well; let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

It will scarcely be doubted by any one that, so far as the Indians as distinct communities have formed a connection with the Federal Government by treaties, such connection is political and is equally binding on both parties. This cannot be questioned except upon the ground that in making these treaties the Federal Government has transcended the treaty-making power. Such an objection, it is true, has been stated, but is one of modern invention which arises out of local circumstances; and it is not only opposed to the uniform practice of the Government, but also to the letter and spirit of the Constitution.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. Very well. I think our fathers made a serious mistake in the treatment of this Indian question. I think we ought never to have recognized any independent nationality in our midst. How would it have appeared to our fathers had they been asked to recognize an independent Spanish nationality at New Orleans, or an independent French nationality at Vincennes?

Now, I take it that many of our difficulties and troubles have grown out of this usage in making treaties with Indian tribes; and that we had better now, even at this late day, turn back upon that usage and treat these Indians as individuals, bringing them together as we already have done under treaty stipulation in the Indian Territory, giving them reservations upon which they may live, and there holding them responsible for due observance of law.

But that is not the question here. Any treaty made between independent powers is subject to protest by either party. Any arbitration made by parties or by umpires between parties in court may be set aside by any court of competent jurisdiction. Any agreement entered into may be subject to modification by the parties agreeing thereto, and especially where there is any reason to believe there has been haste or inadvertence.

Take this treaty, then, if you please, of 1855, and this award under it of 1859, and what do you see? At the very next session of the Senate, after that award was made by the Senate itself, that body repudiated that award by refusing to make the necessary appropriation under it.

A MEMBER. How?

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. They repudiated it by refusing to vote an appropriation to carry it out in the Indian appropriation bill. I have reference to the first session of the Thirty-sixth Congress.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Why, let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Senate at that time agreed to an appropriation of $500,000 under that award.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. That was in the second session of the Thirty-sixth Congress, while I am speaking of the first session of that Congress, after this award was made, and then the Senate itself refused to pass any appropriation to carry it out.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Did not the Senate adjourn—did not that Congress come to an end within a week from the time the award was made?

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. Yes, sir; that Congress came to an end in less than a week after the award, and the very reason given in the first session of the Thirty-sixth Congress why the Senate would not agree to any appropriation was that this award had been rendered hastily and without due consideration by the Senators themselves.

Now in 1786 the first treaty was made with these Indians. By that treaty they had the right to live and hunt in certain territories in Mississippi. In 1803, 1806, and 1816 subsequent treaties were made with them. We bought certain lands from them and paid for them. In 1820 we made a treaty by which we gave them fifteen million acres of land west of the Mississippi to which we carried them free of charge, getting 10,423,139 acres in return.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. We did not get any ten millions. If the gentleman will look at the treaty he will see the specified amount we got. It shows we got four millions in round numbers.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. I am speaking of the treaty of 1820—

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. So am I.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. Illustrated and carried out by the treaty of 1830. The two treaties go together. We got from them ten millions of land in which they had only an usufruct title, in which they had no fee-simple, and gave them fifteen million acres in fee-simple, very little of which was waste land. That is the report of the Secretary of the Interior.

What is the scope of this treaty of 1855, upon which so much stress is laid? I ask gentlemen to look at it carefully and candidly. Look at it critically, and you will find that there is here in immediate connection with the powers granted to the Senate an express and emphatic disclaimer or denial on the part of the Government of the claim of this tribe of Indians.

A MEMBER. Read it.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. I will read it.

The Government of the United States, not being prepared to assent to the claim set up under the treaty of September the 27th, 1830, and so earnestly contended for by the Choctaws as a rule of settlement, but justly appreciating the sacrifices, faithful services, and general good conduct of the Choctaw people, and being desirous that their rights and claims against the United States shall receive a just, fair, and liberal consideration, it is therefore stipulated that the following questions be submitted for adjudication to the Senate of the United States.

There then follows a statement of these two questions. The first question is whether we shall pay for this land so much an acre, deducting expenses; the second is whether we shall pay a sum in gross; and then the twelfth section provides how it shall be paid, if any award should be made.

But, sir, I wish to call the attention of the enthusiastic gentlemen supporting this measure to the fact that this claim for compensation for this land ceded to the Government in Mississippi was never made by the Choctaw tribe of Indians until 1853. All the claim prior to that was the claim under the fourteenth section of the treaty of 1830, by which the heads of Indian families were entitled to a section of land on their declaring their desire to become citizens of the United States. All their claim prior to 1853 was based on that and the nineteenth section, which provides for certain specific reservations to individual Indians and individual families. Up to 1853 that was the whole basis of their claims. They had had the claim which is referred to in the receipt that has been read from the Clerk's desk settled by a commission; and after they had received their pay for that, then they come in with this claim. I submit that it is not a proper adjudication, and that we ought to look to it very carefully, especially after such haste was evinced by the Senate in making the award.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. When this question was last before the House, on behalf of the Indian Committee I expressed a desire to so limit the funds necessary to pay this claim as that it should go directly to the Indians who are supposed to be entitled to it. I then offered an amendment which was subsequently withdrawn. A sub-committee of the Committee on Indian Affairs was afterward appointed to take the amendment which is now before the House, to consider it, to carefully compare it with the treaties and with the statutes, and to prepare a new amendment. That amendment is the amendment which the gentleman from Missouri has just offered, and I desire to have the attention of the House just long enough to explain what that amendment is; for, Mr. Speaker, I have not taken the floor for the purpose of urging on this House the duty of fulfilling its obligations made under a solemn treaty award.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] provides that an amount of bonds of any issue shall be executed by the Secretary of the Treasury; that they shall be placed aside and held by him until that court, which has been very well guarded and very properly established by the Choctaw Nation, shall have decided what claims of the Indians of that country shall be paid; that when the award of that court has been made, a copy of it shall be filed with the Secretary of the Treasury, and that an amount of bonds equal to the amount of the award shall be delivered to the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation, and shall be by him delivered, under the direction of the United States Indian agent, to the individual Indians entitled to the award.

It also provides that in case the whole amount of bonds is not sufficient to meet the whole amount of these awards, then the bonds shall be delivered to them pro rata. It also provides that no bond and no payment under this law shall be made by the treasurer of the Indian nation to any assignee of any Indian, but to the Indian himself, or to his children if living, and, if not, to his legal representatives. It seems to me, Mr. Speaker, if we are ever to pay this award in any form, it cannot be paid under better safeguards than these.

The amendment also provides that if in any event any portion of this should not be required to discharge the liabilities found to be due by the Indian court, it shall be passed into the treasury of the nation as a part of the Choctaw fund.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Will the gentleman explain what constitutes this court?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. By the legislature of the Chotaw Nation a court has been established by which judges, three or more, have been appointed to hear and determine all these claims and to make an award. That court was established soon after the treaty was made. It commenced its operations and is said to be as competent and thoroughly honest a court as any that could be organized.

Mr. McNULTA. Will the gentleman answer me a question?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. My time is very short. Having stated the object of the amendment, and the purpose of it, I want to add a word in conclusion upon the subject of the treaty itself.

I do not propose, Mr. Speaker, to follow those gentlemen who have wandered back to 1850 or 1852, and to the receipt given in 1852 which only relates to one section of the claim. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that in the year 1855, when that treaty was made, the Choctaw Nation surrendered all the claims it had under any treaties made up to that time and in place accepted certain conditions which we now propose to carry out.

Mr. BERRY. I desire to ask the gentleman whether these Indians did not receive fee-simple to lands west of the Mississippi in lieu of the lands which they ceded in the State of Mississippi?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Not unless the gentleman considers it fee-simple that they shall hold the lands in fee-simple so long as they occupy them in their tribal relations.

Mr. McNULTA. I desire to ask my colleague on the committee a question.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. My time is so brief that I must really decline to be interrupted.

This claim has been called a "net-proceeds" claim. I want simply to call the attention of the House to the fact that as it now stands before the House it is a "net-profits" claim and nothing else, for the amount we now propose to pay the Indians is precisely the net profit derived by the Government from the transaction had with them in 1830 and no more. And, sir, we entered into a solemn treaty obligation with these Indians to pay them this. The profits which the Government has received and which it now holds is all that it is proposed to pay to them. Whatever gentlemen may say about treaties, this was a treaty made by the President and the Senate of the United States. It has been recognized as the law of the land from the year 1855 down to this time, and the only question that has ever agitated this House in reference to this claim is, will we obey the obligations of that treaty and appropriate the necessary fund to carry out the awards made under it? I grant you that until the House of Representatives does that it cannot be said to have recognized the binding authority of the treaty.

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Speaker, I shall not vote for this Choctaw claim in any shape or form or at any stage. I opposed it at the last session of Congress, and I shall oppose it consistently and persistently in this. In doing so I concede to the friends of the measure purity of purpose and an honest belief that the claim is just; but I do not believe the claim in the amount now presented is just, nor do I believe that the efforts to pass it are such as any honest man should approve.

Now, the first thing that strikes me as singular is that when this claim was before the House a week ago, its friends had control of the House on every vote except the direct vote to pass the bill containing it. On every dilatory motion, on every vote to reconsider or to recommit the bill, the Choctaw claim had a majority of the House; but when it came to a square, plump vote on the merits of the bill itself, some of them faltered, and finally the enemies of the bill succeeded in recommitting it to the Committee of the Whole.

Another fact is that from the first time this claim was presented to Congress to the present hour no two committees have agreed on the same amount as due to the Choctaws. Gentlemen talk of the reports made by committees in previous Congresses; but the committee in this Congress reported that there were $600,000 more due to the Choctaws than was ever reported before, and the committee of every Congress differed from its predecessors as to the amount due. Some say the amount due is $1,000,000, some $2,000,000, and some that it comes up to nearly $3,500,000.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I desire to say to the gentleman that he is incorrect in this, that no committee of the present Congress has reported in favor of this claim. It was put in the Indian appropriation bill in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

Mr. SPEER. I stand corrected there; but the amount put on the amendment in Committee of the Whole is $600,000 more than any preceding committee has recommended. I am correct in that.

Now, I am told here that Congress is bound by the treaty. I do not recognize any such binding force in the alleged treaty that has been made. It is true that the Senate is the treaty-making power; but I deny that the Representatives of the people in this Congress are bound to sink their judgment on a question involving appropriations from the Treasury. We are here to exercise our judgment and conscience on this as on all other questions, and we are to be governed by justice and the merits of the measure, and we are not bound in this by an alleged treaty, evidently hastily and inadvertently made.

Now, I wish to read an extract from some remarks made upon this subject by Mr. Fessenden, of Maine, as honest and able a man as ever sat in the Senate of the United States, on the 5th of February, 1861, and which will be found upon page 705 of the Congressional Globe of that session:

The Senator from Arkansas says that this amendment only provides for so much as is undisputed. Now, sir, taking the action of the Senate two years ago to have been an understanding, sensible action; supposing the Senate perfectly well knew what it was about at that time, and did not suffer itself by its own inattention to be misled into professing to do something which it did not do, it might be very true that nobody could object to this amount of money being paid. But, sir, last year when the proposition came up it occasioned a very considerable debate, and the debate went to the whole matter from the beginning to the end. I then said in the debate, after listening to it attentively throughout, knowing nothing about the specific claim, that it was evident to my mind the Senate never had understood the question, never had acted understandingly upon it at all, and ought not to be bound by its previous action. I remain of that opinion to this day.

Again, on page 832 he says this:

Mr. FESSENDEN. I do not mean to say anything more against this proposition; but I do protest utterly against this reiterated statement that this amount is undisputed. Nobody admits it, except gentlemen who are in favor of it and have made up their minds about it.

That is the language of as honest a Senator as ever sat in the Senate Chamber, denying the justice of this claim and the binding force of the award of the Senate. And are we to-day to have our mouths closed and to follow blindly under the lead of a manufactured majority to carry out a treaty which passed the Senate hastily and inadvertently years ago? Are we to be bound to the extent of three or four million dollars? I say not.

Again, this same question was referred in 1872 by Secretary BOWWELL to Mr. Banfield, the Solicitor of the Treasury. I hold in my hand his report, from which I read this brief extract:

From this history it appears beyond doubt that its basis is the alleged right to reservations under the fourteenth article of the treaty of 1830; that under this article a large number of reservations beyond what the Choctaws were legally entitled to were allowed by the Government, although, on the evidence, absolutely fraudulent. But however this may be, Congress, before they finally paid them, determined that the Choctaw Nation should give a solemn acknowledgment that they should never thereafter make claim again to reservations under the article, as a condition precedent to its action in paying those which had already been allowed. This the nation having done, the claim, as it seems to me, should be regarded as completely barred by Congress.

The Secretary communicates that opinion to the Speaker of this House with this statement:

After such an examination as I have been able to give the subject, I concur in the conclusion reached by the Solicitor.

Now, is this House to disregard the opinion of the law officer of the Treasury Department, specially directed to examine this claim, free from all prejudice, in the light of the legislation of the country, in the light of his sworn duty as an officer, and his professional knowledge of the law? Are we to disregard the opinion of the Secretary of the Treasury, communicating that opinion of his Solicitor to this House? Are we now, when the cry comes up from the Executive Departments of the Government that we must lay more taxes in order to secure the revenue needed by the Government—are we to appropriate pell-mell three or four million dollars? And for what and to whom? Who is to get it? It is to be paid to the treasurer of the nation. Who is the treasurer, and what is the treasurer to do with it? We are asked to appropriate $3,000,000—

Mr. HALE, of Maine. It is nearly five millions, including interest.

Mr. SPEER. If the interest is added it will be nearly five millions of dollars to be paid to the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation, and by him to be paid to whom? It is an open secret that at least 25 per cent. of these claims is now pledged; and if this money is paid, a million of dollars will go into the hands of men who have been following the business of lobbying here during this session, and during previous sessions. And before many years we shall have the same scandal connected with this appropriation that we have now in connection with the Pacific Mail subsidy.

I implore this House to meet this question fairly and squarely. I deny the justice of the appropriation to this amount, even admitting that the claim has a valid foundation. And I say that the means used in this House and out of it to pass this claim deserve condemnation and should receive it at our hands.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPEER. One word more, in reference to the substitutes now pending. There are two substitutes pending, neither of which has ever been printed; they are read at the Clerk's desk to a House of nearly three hundred members amid great confusion; and under these circumstances we are asked to vote millions of dollars.

Mr. FORT. Four millions.

Mr. SPEER. Four millions of dollars, upon a proposition that has never been printed. We should have the gold of Ophir, in order to stand appropriations and legislation like that.

Mr. SHANKS. I think it is a little ungracious that the Choctaw Indians should be made responsible for our tax bills. I think it extremely ungracious that we should be told, when the Choctaw Indians are asking for the payment of a just claim, that there are Christian lobbyists, white men, around this Capitol. I do not suppose the Choctaw Indians ought to be held responsible for the dishonor of this House or the dishonor of its surroundings. And it adds no virtue to the character of an American statesman for him to step back behind the lobby in order to cheat the Indian.

There is a duty that belongs to this House; and until the men who compose this House can afford to stand on their feet with their faces toward the people, their honor sustained by their conduct, they cannot hide their defamed reputations behind a Choctaw Indian. I am tired of this attempt to cheat these people because rascals somewhere have plundered and stolen somebody's money. That has nothing to do with this matter.

There is another question behind all this. Does the United States of America owe the Choctaw Indians? That is the question. If it does owe them, and the amount due is found, how shall we pay it so that they will get it away from these bad men these gentlemen seem to know so much about? I am glad they do know about them, so that they may know what and where they are.

Now, I want to state clearly and in a few words the basis of this claim. Prior to 1820 the Choctaw Indians owned in the State of Mississippi 14,875,387.69 acres of land lying along the Mississippi River—nearly fifteen million acres of land. A portion of the tribe was opposing civilization. The leading members of the tribe said to themselves, "There is a part of our tribe who are not willing to labor, who are not willing to be civilized; we will sell to the United States 4,150,000 acres of our land for the purpose of obtaining a home west of the Mississippi to which we can send that portion of our tribe not willing to be civilized, and the balance of us will remain upon the other 11,000,000 acres." The purchase of the land west of the Mississippi for these Indians has nothing more to do with the land we got from them in 1830 than the grocery bill the gentleman from Pennsylvania paid last year has to do with the bill for the meat he bought to carry him over last Sunday.

It is disgusting to see men stand here and declaim about a thing that they do not know anything about, or in regard to which, if they do know anything, they are utterly reckless in their statements.

I repeat that the treaty of 1822 transferred to us 4,150,000 acres of land in payment for lands west of the Mississippi River on which the uncivilized portion of these Indians was to remove and did remove. But, sir, the white people wanted the balance of that land; they wanted it for cotton plantations; they pressed upon those Indians. The State of Mississippi assumed control over them. Up to that time there had been no provision by which the United States Government had control of these Indians. The State of Mississippi by her statute assumed the right to tax the lands of these Indians—to control their persons and property as it did those of other persons. It then became necessary to make another treaty; and by the treaty of 1830 those Indians sold us all the balance of their lands. They had over 10,000,000 acres. But they reserved the right to homesteads. After this, however, they were driven from the homesteads. Now, there is no controversy that the other claims arising out of that treaty have been all paid; the accounts show it. The matter in controversy here is as to the homesteads to which the Indians were entitled under their last treaty with us. Intending to remain as citizens of the State of Mississippi, but being driven from those lands, they demanded pay from the Government of the United States. By acts of Congress at different times commissioners were sent down there to determine the amount to which they were entitled; a portion of their claims was determined prior to 1852. For the amount thus determined scrip was issued in lieu of land. For instance, the head of a family being entitled to six hundred and forty acres, scrip would be issued to him to the amount of three hundred and twenty acres, and then it was stipulated that three hundred and twenty more acres should be given to him when he had gone west of the Mississippi River, following the wilder portion of the tribe. Thus a portion of the land to which they were entitled was given to them, but the other portion was not. Subsequently Congress passed an act funding the scrip, making it a debt in money; and after that we ordered it to be paid. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LAWRENCE] had read at the Clerk's desk what he proclaimed was a receipt for this Choctaw claim, but it was simply a receipt for $352,000, the amount of the last half of the scrip. This was in 1852. Three years after that, in 1855, the treaty was made directing that the Senate of the United States—

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SCOFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I have heard a great deal about this Choctaw Nation—

Mr. SHANKS. I ask further time to explain this matter.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I want a few minutes only and then the gentleman may have all the time he wants. I have heard a great deal about this Choctaw Nation, with whom it is said the United States have made not only a treaty but what all the gentlemen who have spoken say was "a solemn treaty," and it is said that we are bound by this "solemn treaty" to give to this great Choctaw Nation about $5,000,000.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I rise to correct the gentleman.

Mr. SCOFIELD. Between four and five million dollars.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Will the gentleman allow me to correct him?

Mr. SCOFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I do not yield, because I notice that every man who gets up to say a word against this claim has a great many Choctaw voices interjected into his remarks.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. The gentleman does not state the amount correctly. I desired to correct him. The amount is between three and four millions.

Mr. SCOFIELD. I knew the gentleman would say that. If gentlemen who have had their turn would sit still they would find that I make no statement which I do not myself believe to be true; and if they do not think my statements correct, they might contradict me in their own speeches.

I was just going to say that I had not figured up the exact amount myself, but I have heard from others who have been figuring it that the amount is between four and five million dollars. Whether it is nearer $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 I am not prepared to say. Call it $4,000,000, if you please—$4,000,000! Now, how large is this great Choctaw Nation with whom we made this awfully "solemn treaty?" I have had the curiosity to look at the report of the Secretary of the Interior for the last year, and I find that this Choctaw Nation has population enough to make a good-sized village or a small city. Sixteen thousand persons constitute the whole of this great Choctaw Nation, for whom gentlemen plead that we should now give them four or five million dollars. The poor Choctaws! They have eleven million acres of land, and scarcely a waste acre in the whole. So says the Secretary of the Interior in his last report. He ciphers it out that they have enough land to make five hundred and fifteen acres for every family. We propose to give four or five million dollars to sixteen thousand Indians who already own eleven million acres of land—five hundred and fifteen to every family. But that is not all that this poor Choctaw Nation has. The Secretary of the Interior tells us that these Indians have also a large endowment. They receive annually from the United States Government money enough to endow four or five schools and academies, enough to furnish school accommodations constantly for every Choctaw child capable of attending school, besides paying all the expenses of their council besides.

Not one dollar of taxation has to be raised for school or civil government, as it all comes from the United States. There are plenty of towns in this country of sixteen thousand population each whose whole assessment does not amount to four or five million dollars.

But gentlemen say it does not make any difference how rich these Choctaws are or how small in number; that we have made a solemn treaty, an awfully solemn treaty, with them, and there has been a solemn award under that treaty by the Senate. I undertake to say (and I do not want Choctaw gentlemen to jump up and say I am mistaken, for they can say it afterward in their own time)—I undertake to say that the Senate of the United States never made any award, solemn or not solemn, under the treaty of 1855. The Senate passed a resolution that the best way to settle was to allow a certain amount of land at $1.25 per acre, deducting certain expenses. It passed another resolution, directing the Secretary of the Interior to make a calculation how much that would be and to report to the Senate.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. To report to Congress and not to the Senate?

Mr. SCOFIELD. To report to Congress; but it does not make any difference whether to Congress or to the Senate. I knew I could not get along very far without some champion for this great Choctaw claim, for these poor, poverty-stricken Choctaws, jumping up to interrupt me.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I simply rose to correct him, as he was not stating the fact, and I was determined he should state it.

Mr. SCOFIELD. You have got it in now. He was directed to report to Congress, and although that was done they never acted on it. And that is the award, the terribly solemn award they talk about! Because of that terribly solemn award they say we must now take four or five million dollars out of the Treasury to give to these sixteen thousand poor Choctaws, who have only eleven million acres of land, with all their schools and expenses of civil government all paid for them.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know I am not fit to debate this question, because its details have gone from my mind. Many years ago, when I was a new member, (and they always bring it up when there are a great many new members present, and every time this Choctaw claim comes up it seems to be increased in amount, for when I was a new member they did not want to take so much out of the Treasury, and it was then only $1,800,000 which was proposed to be inserted in an Indian appropriation bill)—I repeat, many years ago, when I was a new member, as I have said, I thought it was my duty to know something about this matter before I voted to tax the people to that enormous amount. Therefore I carefully studied the case. I went back over all the treaties made with these Indians or which had any connection with this subject. I do not remember all the details of my investigation, but I remember I came to the conclusion step by step, in my examination of the grounds upon which this Choctaw claim is based, that from beginning to end it is a fraud upon the General Government. They would get one Committee on Indian Affairs to make a report; some one outside of the committee would draw up the report and the Indian committee, without much knowledge of the subject, would adopt that report and make it to the House. The next Indian committee would adopt the same report—some man would copy the same report. Now and then members would try to understand it for themselves and would hesitate. When it came before the House we would be told about this solemn treaty and this equally solemn award. It made me almost tremble, Mr. Speaker, when my friend from Massachusetts, [Mr. HARRIS,] with his solemn face, pronounced that solemn word. Then we would be asked to pass an appropriation upon the solemn assurance contained in a report drawn up by somebody outside and which had been copied from time to time. It would take a week's time for any member really to understand all about this claim. I do not pretend that I know all about it. I can only remember the conclusion I arrived at when the whole subject was before me, and that is that I could not conscientiously vote for it.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Let me tell the gentleman from Pennsylvania why I consider this an obligation on the part of the Government. It is because the United States Government obtained ten million acres of land and put into the Treasury $2,300,000 as profit from it for which it has made no return. That is what makes it a solemn obligation in my mind.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, on this solemn occasion, when the House is considering this solemn subject, as the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOFIELD] calls it, it seems to me there is one matter which ought to be taken into consideration. I do not pretend to be sufficiently advised with reference to this subject to express an opinion, and I would not as to the justice or injustice, the merit or demerit of this claim.

But, Mr. Speaker, my colleague has stated that the House has a duty to perform. For the sake of argument, conceding that this claim has all the merits its friends pretend and say it has; conceding for the sake of argument that it is a valid claim against the Government, the House, in my judgment, has an important duty to perform, and that duty is to protect these Indians, who are regarded as the wards of the nation, in its enjoyment. I undertake to say that neither of these substitutes which have been presented to this House do protect these Indians. If this is a meritorious claim, this House will not do its duty unless the bill is so framed that their rights will be protected.

Why, sir, it is charged by gentlemen on this floor—whether the charge is correct or no? I do not pretend to say, but it is charged—that a large percentage of this money is to go into the pockets of what is known as the “lobby.” Now, what is our duty? It is to protect these Indians against any improvident contract they may have made with the “lobby” that is said to infest the halls of Congress. Being the wards of the nation, as their guardians we should not permit them to be imposed upon by improvident contracts made to their injury. And I will say for one that, having examined the substitute of my friend from Missouri, [Mr. PARKER,] and I believe he has acted from the very best and the very purest of motives, it does not in my opinion accomplish what he seeks to accomplish by it. If that substitute is adopted, then every one of these swindling contracts with these Indians, if any such have been made, can be paid, and there is no protection to the Indian against them.

So far as the substitute of the other gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] is concerned—I have not had the opportunity of reading it myself—but from the reading of it at the Clerk's desk it seems to me that it does not answer the purpose of affording the protection which that gentleman manifestly intended. And therefore, Mr. Speaker, I desire to move, if it is proper to do so now, that this whole subject be postponed until the day after to-morrow, that these substitutes may be printed, so that the House, upon this proposition, which seeks to take millions out of the Treasury, shall have an opportunity to know precisely what is being done and where this money is to go. I repeat that upon the merits of the scheme itself I do not feel sufficiently advised to offer any remarks. I make the motion that the further consideration of this subject be postponed until the day after to-morrow, after the morning hour, and that meanwhile the substitutes be printed.

Mr. HOLMAN. I raise the question of order whether that motion is in order under the rule under which the House is now acting.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. Let me say further that even if I were satisfied this were a valid claim, I could not vote for either of these substitutes in the form in which they are presented, because they do not, in my judgment, make sufficient provision against the money being diverted from those who should have it, if it is just, to those who are not entitled to it.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will not insist on that motion. The Committee on Appropriations have had no opportunity to continue their work and send bills to the Senate for more than a fortnight. During the time this matter has been lying over, members have had an opportunity of studying into it as fully as they could wish to do. And if the House is not ready to dispose of it to-day, I do not see that it can ever be.

Mr. SPEER. And this is the only amendment that prevents the immediate passage of the Indian appropriation bill?

Mr. HALE, of Maine. Yes; it is the only thing; but it obstructs the whole bill.

The SPEAKER. The point of order has been raised that under the rule under which the House is now considering this bill as in Committee of the Whole the motion to postpone is not in order. The point is rather a novel one. The Chair does not know of its having been raised before.

Mr. HOLMAN. If the motion of my colleague is simply directed to the pending amendments, I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. WILSON, of Indiana. My motion was that the further consideration of the subject be postponed until the day after to-morrow. In deference to the committee, who desire a vote now, I withdraw it.

Mr. THOMPSON. Could not the matter be arranged by the gentleman who has this special amendment in charge, as an amendment to this bill, withdrawing it, and allowing the House to pass the appropriation bill? That would obviate the difficulty, and this amendment, which I think should never be adopted, would be out of the way of the passage of the bill.

I knew nothing about this matter until within a few days, and consequently I am unbiased and uninfluenced by any previous action either of this House or of any committee of the House. I hold in my hand, however, a report by a committee of the House, as able and upright a report as has been made on the subject; and in it I find some statements made which to me are wholly amazing and astounding. That committee reports that—

The consideration of the cession of this land to the United States is not stated.

Why, sir, the very second article of the treaty states in as explicit language as can be used—

In consideration of the provisions contained in the several articles of this treaty the Choctaws cede to the United States these lands in dispute.

And yet in face of this declaration written in the treaty itself, a solemn covenant as it has been termed here, it is said that there is no consideration expressed or implied.

Now what were some of the considerations? A cession of what turns out to be about fifteen million acres of land, in addition to the usufruct of what was granted by the treaty of 1820; a grant to the Choctaws of that valuable territory in fee. That was a consideration fully equivalent to the entire territory ceded to the United States in 1830.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. It is in fee so long as they occupy it.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is not the language; it is as long as they remain a nation; in other words, as long as the world stands. And my friend's fee is no better in any land he owns. When the world is depopulated and all men turned off it, then it may be true.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. My point is that under the law an Indian nation only holds lands in possession subject to the right of the nation to extinguish their title by conquest or purchase.

Mr. THOMPSON. But it is a title higher than any other title; it is a title in fee-simple, which the Government never can disturb except by force, and which it never can destroy except by fraud, and which it has never attempted to destroy. This committee report that—

In order that the injustice done to these people by this account stated, may be more clearly understood, your committee invite attention to those items of the account for which neither the treaty nor the award of the Senate furnish the slightest authority or justification.

Now, among those items are the cost of removal. Was not that one of the expenses contemplated by the treaty of 1830? Was it not one of the expenses contemplated by the treaty of 1855? Their removal cost $800,000, but about $200,000 more was expended for the cost of schools, and these were assumed by the treaty of 1855, and provided for as a lien on the Government by virtue of that treaty.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. And under the treaty all those expenses were deducted.

Mr. THOMPSON. And they ought to have been deducted. Here is a proposition which is not justified either by the treaty or by the award of the Senate. Here is a proposition that the Choctaws who ceded their lands to the Government and received the money for it and receipted for it in full, shall not only receive the net profits of the land but the gross proceeds. That is the theory on which the present report proceeds.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I desire now to call the previous question upon this question.

Mr. FORT. I think it is time we took a vote upon it.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I rose for the purpose of moving the previous question; but before doing so I desire to say a single word.

Mr. BIERY. I ask the gentleman to allow me to say a word.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I will yield to the gentleman for a few moments.

Mr. BIERY. I only want about three minutes.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I surrender the floor to the gentleman for that time.

Mr. BIERY. In view of the arguments that have been made in favor of this proposition, I deem it my duty to make some observations upon it and to show what the proposition is. I was impressed by the solemnity of the treaty of 1855, which seems also to impress some other members upon this floor; and if I believed this was a just claim, I should advocate it as strongly as I could possibly. But I take it that the consideration set up for the payment of this money is not a valid consideration, and that this claim stands on no just foundation whatever. As I understand the treaties of 1820, 1830, and 1855, the treaties of 1820 and 1830 provided that in lieu of the rights which the Choctaw Nation claimed to lands in the State of Mississippi they were to receive and actually did receive land in fee-simple west of the Mississippi River. That point is disputed. It is said the lands were given in consideration of a part only of the lands ceded by the Choctaws in the State of Mississippi. I desire to call attention to a report upon this subject made by Secretary BOUTWELL, and I ask the careful attention of the House to it:

By this grant the Choctaws got no greater number of acres, it is true; but what they did get was held by a firm title in fee never possessed by them before, and not given them by the treaty of 1820. (Cherokee Case, 5 Peters, 48; Johnson vs. McIntosh, 8 Wheaton, 575; Worcester vs. State of Georgia, 6 Peters, 520.)

This fee was liable to be determined only in the event of their ceasing to exist as a nation. This estate could therefore continue forever, and may be considered in law as a fee-simple determinable.

I regard this feature of the treaty of 1830 one of the greatest importance, and hitherto overlooked in the consideration of these claims; for it did away with the vague title of occupancy, (the only title the Choctaws had up to this time, either at common law or under the prior treaty,) and substituted in its place a grant in perpetuity. So it was considered by the Attorney-General soon after the ratification of the treaty. (3 Opinions of Attorneys-General, 322.)

Now, sir, the consideration on which this claim is based fails. So far as my judgment goes concerning it, its payment would be a payment on the part of the Government for something for which it had received nothing; and if the amendment be ingrafted upon the bill I shall vote against the bill.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. McNULTA. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] is entitled to the floor to move the previous question if he desires to do so.

Mr. FORT. I will let the amendment of my colleague be read and then I will ask the previous question.

Mr. McNULTA. I move to strike out all in the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COMINGO] relating to the payment of this money to the treasurer of the Choctaw Nation, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

Shall sell a sufficient amount of said bonds and with the proceeds pay the several claims so found to be due to the individual Choctaws originally entitled thereto or to their heirs under the Choctaw law, with the advice and under the direction of the United States agent for said tribe with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SHANKS. I object to that amendment.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman admit that amendment?

Mr. FORT. No, sir; I do not admit it, but I will yield a few moments to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] before calling the previous question.

Mr. McNULTA. Does the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] object to the amendment?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman stated that he did object.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have sought the floor for a moment only to call attention to the fact that the gentlemen who are supporting this measure have avoided any reference to that provision of the treaty of 1830 on which it is alleged this award is predicated. I have heard no gentleman insist that by any fair interpretation of the eighteenth article of the treaty of 1830 by that provision the proceeds of the lands ceded after the payment of expenses were to inure to the benefit of the Choctaw tribe. And I say further that no gentleman here or elsewhere can stand up in his place and assert that any possible interpretation of that article of the treaty can be found which will justify the claim that by its provisions this tribe of Indians were entitled to the proceeds of the land sold, after the expenses were paid. No gentleman will assert that.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman allow me to call his attention to what is contained in the treaty upon that subject?

Mr. HOLMAN. I will.

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. The first clause in the treaty speaks of the fact that the Indians have agreed to sell their lands to the United States. One article of the treaty provides that the Government of the United States shall survey and sell this property. And it is upon these two provisions that the claim is founded.

Mr. HOLMAN. No person can claim that there was any foundation for this hasty award, so pronounced in the Senate when this subject was fresh, for Senator after Senator asserted that it was passed without proper consideration. The whole debate at that time did not exceed over three hours. This award stands upon these words in the treaty:

And for the payment of the several amounts secured in this treaty the lands hereby ceded are to remain a fund pledged to that purpose until the debt shall have been provided for and arranged.

Now, there is not another passage in the whole treaty upon which that award can rest; nothing except the words I have read. Yet those words are but a stipulation that the lands ceded shall be charged with the payment of the sum stipulated to be paid to the Choctaws, being the annuities to be paid from time to time. Now, will the gentlemen who advocate the binding force of this award upon this House explain why through a period of twenty years, as long as these annuities were being paid, no claim was set up, for the interpretation was sought to be placed upon this article of the treaty of 1830? How does it happen that a whole generation passed away before such a claim as this was asserted?

Mr. HARRIS, of Massachusetts. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that Mr. Banfield in his report, which has been distributed here, and which has been referred to very often in this debate, declares upon the second page of it that the treaty was hardly signed before the Choctaw Nation claimed the net proceeds of these lands.

Mr. HOLMAN. "Scarcely signed." Why, sir, I have here the statement of the Indian Office exactly to the contrary. When this subject was referred to the Department of the Interior in 1868 by the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, the following was stated by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs upon that subject:

What evidence is there, if any, that the Choctaws expected the treaty of 1830 to secure to them the proceeds or full actual value of their lands?

There is no other evidence known to this office than their own statements, never made until after the expiration of their annuities under the treaty.

And these annuities continued during a period of twenty years. Now, according to this official statement, these claims were not asserted until some thirty years had passed by.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I now claim the right to call the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] made the motion by which the bill was recommitted to the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. It was on my motion that it was taken out of Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. It is not essential who makes the motion for the previous question.

The previous question was seconded and the main question ordered.

The first question was upon the substitute proposed by Mr. COMINGO to the amendment proposed by Mr. PARKER, of Missouri; and being taken, there were upon a division—ayes 31, noes 69; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. COMINGO, and Mr. PARKER of Missouri, were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported that there were, ayes 37, noes not counted.

So the substitute of Mr. COMINGO was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the substitute of Mr. PARKER, of Missouri, for the amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole; and being taken, it was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is, Will the House incorporate in the bill the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Missouri, [Mr. PARKER,] which has been adopted in lieu of the amendment agreed to by the Committee of the Whole?

Mr. SPEER. On that question I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 89, nays 136, not voting 64; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Ashe, Averill, Barber, Barrere, Beck, Bowen, Bright, Buckner, Roderick R. Butler, Cain, Caldwell, Cason, Cessna, Comingo, Crittenden, Crossland, Crutchfield, Darrall, Dawes, Dunnell, Eames, Garfield, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Hagans, Hancock, Harmer, Benjamin W. NOT VOTING—Messrs. Barnum, Barry, Berry, Benjamin F. Butler, Carpenter, John B. Clark, Jr., Freeman Clarke, Clinton L. Cobb, Corwin, Creamer, Crooke, Davis, DeWitt, Eden, Eldredge, Frye, Gooch, Robert S. Hale, Hathorn, Havens, Joseph R. Hawley, George F. Stephens, Stowell, Strawbridge, Sypher, Tremain, Wheeler, Whitehouse, Whiteley, and Wilber—64.

So the amendment, as amended, was not agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. KELLOGG said: My colleague, Mr. HAWLEY, of Connecticut, is absent attending the funeral of the late Senator Buckingham. If here he would vote "ay."

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. HALE, of Maine. I move to reconsider the vote just taken; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 11. That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to pay to the Chickasaw tribe of Indians, upon the passage of this act, the following arrears of interest due to said tribe: Arrears of interest on \$90,000, Arkansas 6 per cent. bonds, from July 1, 1852, to July 4, 1866, \$75,000; arrears of interest on \$616,000, Tennessee 6 per cent. bonds, from January 1, 1861, to July 1, 1866, \$203,280; arrears of interest on \$66,666.66 $\frac{2}{3}$, Tennessee 5 $\frac{1}{2}$ bonds, from January 25, 1861, to July 1, 1866, \$19,010.25; and that the same be paid to the said tribe in bonds of the United States of any issue authorized by law and bearing 4 $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. interest.

The amendment was not agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now recurs on ordering the bill, as amended, to be engrossed for a third reading.

Mr. FORT. There is another amendment pending—one which I sent up relating to the issue of clothing.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understood the gentleman to withdraw that.

Mr. FORT. If anybody objects to it I will not insist upon it; but it seems to me there can be no objection to it.

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

And be it further enacted, That if the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of War shall deem it expedient, the Army clothing now on hand of patterns or style not in use shall be issued and delivered to Indians at the regulation price thereof, which shall be in lieu of any money herein before specially appropriated for clothing. In which case the clothing to be so issued shall be turned over from the War Department to the Interior Department, and properly receipted for.

Mr. SHANKS. I rise to a point of order. As the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] does not know anything about this Choctaw claim, he does not know how to clothe these Indians.

Mr. CESSNA. That is not a point of order.

Mr. SHANKS. Well I make the point that this is new legislation—new legislation and old clothes!

Mr. FORT. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHANKS] prefers to clothe the Indians in "shoddy."

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that the amendment proposes to change existing law so far as regards the payment of Indian annuities; and in that respect it is obnoxious to the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. There is also another ground—that the law provides that this clothing shall be used for the Army. The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BECK. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 30, noes not counted.

The SPEAKER. The vote is so close that the Chair orders tellers and appoints the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. BECK, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. FORT.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—yeas 41, noes 163.

So (one-fifth voting in favor thereof) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 162, nays 62, not voting 65; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Albert, Albright, Archer, Averill, Barber, Bass, Begole, Biery, Bradley, Buffinton, Bundy, Burchard, Burleigh, Burrows, Benjamin F. Butler, Cain, Cannon, Cason, Cessna, Chittenden, Amos Clark, jr., Clayton, Clements, Clinton L. Cobb, Stephen A. S. Williams, William Williams, William B. Williams, James Wilson, Jeremiah M. Wilson, and Woodworth—162.

NAYS—Messrs. Adams, Ashe, Atkins, Banning, Barrere, Beck, Bell, Berry, Bland, Blount, Bowen, Bright, Bromberg, Brown, Buckner, Roderick R. Butler, Caldwell, Caulfield, John B. Clark, jr., Clymer, Cook, Cox, Crittenden, Crossland, Davis, Durham, Finck, Giddings, Glover, Gunter, Hamilton, Henry R. Harris, John T. Robinson, Milton Saylor, Sloss, Southard, Stone, Storm, Waddell, Whitehead, Whitthorne, Willie, Ephraim K. Wilson, John D. Young, and Pierce M. B. Young—62.

NOT VOTING—Messrs. Arthur, Barnum, Barry, Carpenter, Freeman Clarke Creamer, Crooke, Darrall, DeWitt, Duell, Eden, Eldredge, Farwell, Frye, Gooch, Robert S. Hale, Joseph R. Hawley, Hays, Herndon, George F. Ambler Smith, Snyder, Standiford, Alexander H. Stephens, Charles R. Thomas, Tremain, Wheeler, White, Whitehouse, Wilber, Wolfe, and Wood—65.

So the bill was passed.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

DESERT LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. TOWNSEND, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back a bill (H. R. No. 4304) to provide for the sale of desert lands in Lassen County, California, with a substitute; which was ordered to be printed, and recommitted.

And then, on motion of Mr. RANDALL, (at ten minutes past five o'clock p. m.,) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following memorials, petitions, and other papers were presented at the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as stated:

By Mr. BLAINE: The petition of Ara Cushman and others, of Auburn, Maine, for the appointment of a commission of inquiry concerning the alcoholic liquor traffic, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

IN SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 10, 1875.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SAMUEL W. CRAWFORD—RETIRED OFFICERS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed as the conferees on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. No. 2093) for the relief of General Samuel W. Crawford, United States Army, Messrs. LOGAN, SPENCER, and KELLY.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

A bill (H. R. No. 3923) authorizing the Secretary of War to deliver certain condemned ordnance to the Joseph Warren Monument Association of Boston, Massachusetts, for monumental purposes; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4667) granting bounties to heirs of soldiers who enlisted in the service of the United States during the war for the suppression of the rebellion for a less period than one year, and who were killed or have died by reason of such service.

The bill (H. R. No. 4668) for the relief of John W. Douglass was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

The bill (H. R. No. 4669) to provide for the selection of grand and petit jurors in the District of Columbia was read twice by its title.

Mr. SARGENT. I move that the bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and that the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk may accompany the bill and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

CATTARAUGUS AND ALLEGANY INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

The Senate proceeded to consider its amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3080) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations, and to confirm existing leases.

On motion of Mr. INGALLS, it was

Resolved, That the Senate insist upon its amendments to the said bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the Vice-President appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT appointed Messrs. INGALLS, ALLISON, and BOGY as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SCHURZ presented the petition of George Hopp, late of Company H, Seventh Regiment Missouri Volunteers, praying to be allowed a pension on account of disabilities contracted in the service; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented an additional petition of Robert Zum Hagen, M. D., of Saint Louis, Missouri, praying an amendment of the homestead law of January 8, 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WRIGHT presented a memorial of the grand jurors of the district court of the United States for the southern district of Iowa, protesting against the removal of said court and the place of holding it from Keokuk to Burlington, in that State; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MERRIMON presented a resolution of the Legislature of North Carolina, in favor of an appropriation for the building of a post-office and custom-house at the town of New Berne, in that State; which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

Mr. SCOTT presented a memorial of citizens of Danville, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the restoration of duties on tea and coffee or any revival of internal-revenue taxes, and praying for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of the duties upon certain foreign goods made by the act of 1872; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BOGY presented a memorial of citizens of Saint Louis, Missouri, possessing large interests in the navigation of the western rivers, remonstrating against the passage of a bill to promote the efficiency of the light-house service of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BOGY. I will also mention that yesterday I presented a memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of Saint Louis, Missouri, in favor of the opening of the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi River. It was my intention to ask for the printing of the memorial, so as to have it placed on the desks of members for their information. I did not do it. As it is a very important subject, I move that the memorial presented by me yesterday be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS presented the petition of William London, late of Company C, Second Illinois Cavalry, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. INGALLS. I also present a memorial numerously signed by members of the Cherokee Nation of Indians, representing that there has been great irregularity and illegality in the means used to obtain control of the executive authority of that nation, and that that authority, when obtained, has been used for partisan and political purposes; that their funds, particularly those devoted to orphan and school purposes, have been squandered for the benefit of a few individuals, to the detriment of the mass of the people; that the courts in that nation are made the means of political persecution instead of affording protection from crime; that industry and enterprise are paralyzed on account of this insecurity of life and property; that the present condition of the people requires more liberal legislation in regard to capital and labor, and that the interest of the people would be promoted by the institution of Federal courts in the country, and praying for the appointment of a commission to inquire into these alleged irregularities and abuses. I move that the memorial be printed and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS presented additional evidence in the case of Mrs. S. S. Cooper, widow of Major Wickliffe Cooper, in support of her application for a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CONKLING. I present the memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, touching the harbor of New York. This memorial, stating some suggestive facts, asks Congress to make such appropriations as will enable General John Newton to continue efficiently the work in which he is engaged. Could any words of mine secure the attention of the Committee on Commerce to this subject, those words would be spoken. The harbor of New York is so used and so abused now by those who are navigating it, that the time will soon be upon us when we shall all see that it concerns the interest of the nation to care for it and to see that it is not filled up with ashes and refuse cast into it by our own vessels, and that it is secured in time against the probabilities of the future. I move the reference of this memorial to the Committee on Commerce.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HARVEY presented a resolution of the Legislature of Kansas, indorsing the recent special message of the President of the United States relative to the condition of affairs in Louisiana, and expressing the highest confidence in the valor, patriotism, and integrity of Lieutenant-General Sheridan; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. GORDON presented a memorial of the mayor and city council and leading merchants of Atlanta, Georgia, praying the passage of the House bill making Atlanta in that State a port of delivery; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. JOHNSTON presented a resolution of the Legislature of Virginia, in favor of the repeal of that clause of the national banking act which imposes a tax of 10 per cent. upon any circulating medium other than that authorized by Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOWE. I present twenty-four petitions signed by a large number of citizens of Wisconsin, praying that their lives, liberties, and pursuit of happiness may be secured to them by an amendment of the Constitution which will prohibit the manufacture, importation, and sale of all intoxicating liquors, to take effect after the 1st of January, 1876. I move the reference of these petitions to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Such petitions have usually been referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. HOWE. Let them take the usual direction, then.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Finance.

RECOMMITTAL OF A BILL.

On motion of Mr. GORDON, it was Ordered, That the bill (H. R. No. 3474) to establish Atlanta, in the State of Georgia, a port of delivery be recommitted to the Committee on Commerce.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested:

A bill (H. R. No. 4535) providing for the distribution of the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 1546) to correct errors and supply omissions in the Revised Statutes of the United States;

A bill (H. R. No. 4675) to relieve Isaac N. Brown of his political disabilities; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4676) for the relief of actual settlers on lands claimed to be swamp and overflowed lands in the State of Missouri.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for printing fifty-five hundred copies of Professor Hayden's annual report of the geological and geographical survey of the Territories for 1873; in which the concurrence of the Senate was requested.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WRIGHT. The Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the petition of Marcus Walker, praying compensation for ninety-nine bales of cotton taken possession of by the Government, report adversely. This petition was reported upon at the last Congress; the petitioner making additional showing, we have had it again under consideration, and again report adversely. I ask that the report be concurred in so as to get the case out of the way.

The adverse report was concurred in.

Mr. OGLESBY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3693) granting a pension to Mary A. Hough, widow of Joseph Hough, late sergeant of Company B, Sixty-first Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3703) granting a pension to Catharine Lee, widow of Jesse M. Lee, private Company B, Second Regiment Ohio Volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3186) for the relief of Treadwell S. Ayres, of Memphis, Tennessee, reported it without amendment.

Mr. ALLISON, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3276) granting a pension to Davenport Downs, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2354) granting a pension to Mrs. Emily L. Slaughter, reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3688) granting a pension to William O. Madison, reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3711) granting a pension to Martin D. Chandler, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3258) to amend the acts of June 30, 1834, and February 13, 1862, to regulate trade and intercourse with the Indians, reported it without amendment.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Ezekiel Waire and others, heirs of John Waire, praying to be allowed a pension on account of services rendered by their father in the revolutionary war, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of George Tobin, late captain of Company D, Sixty-third Regiment New York Volunteers, praying to be allowed arrears of pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of citizens of Franklin County, Vermont, praying that a pension may be allowed Uriah Bundy, late of the Seventh Vermont Regiment, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1274) granting a pension to Uriah Bundy.

The bill was read and passed to the second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Mary Ryan, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2765) granting a pension to John W. Darby, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. ANTHONY, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1210) to provide for the distribution of the regular official editions of certain public documents and of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SCOTT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 72) to amend the act entitled "An act to restrict the jurisdiction of the Court of Claims and to provide for the payment of certain demands for quartermaster's stores and subsistence supplies furnished to the Army of the United States," approved July 4, 1864, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a memorial of citizens of Arkansas in constitutional convention, asking for an extension of the time for filing claims for payment for stores, &c., furnished the Army by loyal citizens in insurrectionary States, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, the subject being provided for in a bill now upon the Calendar; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the additional petition of Jearum Atkins, asking a rehearing of his case before the Committee on Claims on alleged newly discovered evidence, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT. I am also instructed by the same committee, to whom was referred a memorial and joint resolution of the Legislature of Missouri concerning certain claims of her citizens against the United States for military services and supplies furnished during the war, have directed me to report back the same and ask to be discharged from its further consideration, upon the ground that a previous appropriation has already been made for such claims; and as this memorial only asks for a provision for claims which are now being audited and prepared, they deem it inexpedient to make that appropriation at present.

The committee was discharged from the further consideration of the memorial.

Mr. SCOTT. I am also instructed by the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1041) for the relief of Joseph R. Shannon, of Louisiana, accompanied by the petition of Joseph R. Shannon, praying to be allowed the value of the steamer W. Burton, taken by Admiral Farragut in 1862 at New Orleans, to report back the same and ask that the bill be indefinitely postponed. In making the report I desire to say, and am authorized by the committee to say, that in so far as the action of the committee can make a precedent, they intend this to be a precedent upon this subject. The petition asked for the allowance of such part of this petitioner's claim as was disallowed by the commissioners of claims who were authorized under the act of the 3d of March, 1871, to pass upon such claims. We have considered this petition as presenting the question to the committee whether, after parties have been heard, after an appropriation has been made and they have accepted what was given to them although filing a protest in the Treasury at the time, the committee would again open up the case and hear them. The committee have decided that they will not do so, and I give this public notice, that all other parties situated in such manner may have the advantage of the action of the committee.

The bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. CRAGIN. I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 4502) for the relief of Mary L. Woolsey, widow of the late Commodore Melancthon B. Woolsey, of the Navy, to report it with an amendment. The circumstances of this case are such that I feel it my duty to ask for the present consideration of this bill. It is a very small matter, and I hope the Senate will agree that the bill may be acted upon now.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I object. I shall have something to say on that bill when it comes up. It is time to make some general law on the subject of bills of that character.

Mr. CRAGIN. I apprehend the Senator from Texas knows very little about the character of this bill, or he would not have made the remark he has.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made, and the bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom were referred the following bills, reported adversely thereon; and they were postponed indefinitely:

A bill (S. No. 388) for the relief of William Chandler, late a commander in the Navy of the United States;

A bill (S. No. 885) to authorize the purchase of harbor privileges and lands for the establishment of a naval and coaling station in the Samoan Islands;

A bill (S. No. 234) authorizing the President of the United States to appoint C. W. Cronk a first assistant engineer in the Navy of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 2896) to authorize the appointment of Acting Master Robert Platt as acting lieutenant in the Navy of the United States.

Mr. BOGY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred a resolution of the Legislature of Kansas in favor of the transfer of the Bureau of Indian Affairs to the War Department, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred resolutions of the Legislature of Kansas in favor of a change in the management of the Indians and in the administration of the affairs of the Indian Bureau, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred a memorial in relation to trespasses upon Indian lands of the Pawnees by white men, asked to be discharged from its further consideration; which was agreed to.

Mr. MERRIMON. On the 11th of May last, under instructions from the Committee on Claims, I submitted a report in the matter of the claim of Nathaniel P. Harben, for tobacco seized by United States troops in the State of Georgia in 1864, accompanied by a bill (S. No. 522) for his relief. The committee now instruct me to report another form of bill; and I move that it be printed, to the end that it may be offered as a substitute for the bill heretofore reported when it shall be called in its order.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Elmira E. Crarath and others, praying that Congress pass an act granting a pension to Elmira E. Crarath, widow of Isaac M. Crarath, late captain Twelfth Michigan Volunteer Infantry, submitted a report accompanied by a bill (S. No. 1275) granting a pension to Elmira E. Crarath.

The bill was read and passed to a second reading, and the report was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1089) to amend the act entitled "An act granting a pension to Martha E. Orick, Mary J. Orick, and John J. Orick, minor children of John C. Orick, deceased," reported adversely thereon; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3704) granting a pension to Mary E. Stewart, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. McCREERY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom were referred the bill (H. R. No. 3000) for the relief of Samuel W. Davidson, Henry Smith, John Gray Bynum, and others; and the bill (S. No. 945) for the relief of Samuel W. Davidson, Henry Smith, John Gray Bynum, and others, asked to be discharged from their further consideration, and that they be referred to the Committee on Claims; which was agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. FERRY, of Connecticut. I introduce an amendment to the Indian appropriation bill, which passed the House yesterday, and I suppose will be here to-day. I move that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CLAYTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1276) construing the act entitled "An act to place colored persons who enlisted in the Army on the same footing as other soldiers as to bounty and pension;" which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SCOTT (at the request of the party interested) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1277) for the relief of Captain Bird S. Fletcher; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. SARGENT asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1278) fixing the times for holding the circuit court of the United States in the districts of California, Oregon, and Nevada; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GORDON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1279) removing the political disabilities of O. R. Singleton, of Mississippi; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1280) to remove political disabilities of S. D. Lee, of Mississippi; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1281) to reinstate Charles E. Boggs on the active list of the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. STEWART asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1282) to change the place of holding the district and circuit courts of the United States for the district of Nevada; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CLAYTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1283) for the relief of Mary Thompson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions, with accompanying papers.

Mr. CONKLING asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1285) to amend the act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to patents and copyrights;" which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish to say that this bill is prepared by a highly respectable constituent of mine, at whose request I introduce it, expressing no opinion now touching its merits. I move that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Patents.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CONKLING also asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1284) regulating writs of error in criminal cases; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask consent of the Senate to take up Senate bill No. 749. I will state that this is the bill which was up a few days ago in relation to the establishment of the boundary line between Arkansas and the Indian Territory. The Senator from California [Mr. SARGENT] who then objected to the bill has since examined it and withdraws his objection.

Mr. CAMERON. I am sorry to say I shall be compelled to object to taking up that bill now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no resolutions—

Mr. CLAYTON. Does this objection carry this bill over? It has been up heretofore.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion it does in the morning hour.

Mr. CLAYTON. Is not the morning business finished?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is not yet closed. Resolutions are now in order.

Mr. CLAYTON. After the morning business is finished I will ask to have this bill taken up.

USE OF THE ARMY IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. SARGENT. I offer the following resolution, which I suppose, under the rules, will go to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved, That one thousand extra copies of the message of the President in response to the resolution of the Senate relating to the employment of the Army in Louisiana be printed for the use of the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolution must be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SARGENT. I suppose so. I have had a number of calls for this document, and it is entirely exhausted. I suppose other Senators are in the same condition.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Printing.

POST-OFFICE LAWS.

Mr. DORSEY submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads be instructed to inquire into the expediency of repealing section 134 of the act entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to the Post-Office Department," approved June 8, 1872.

DISTRICT 3.65 BONDS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to take up House bill No. 4444. This bill is upon the Calendar, reported favorably by the Senate Committee on the District Columbia, and the commissioners of the District of Columbia inform me that it is important that it should be passed at once. I presume there will be no objection to it. If any one desires to hear the report of the committee, it can be read.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I understand that this bill is merely to correct an error of engrossment; and of course under those circumstances I shall not object.

By unanimous consent, the bill (H. R. No. 4444) to amend an act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill amends the seventh section of the act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, approved June 20, 1874, by inserting the words "do so" after the fortieth word following the first period in that section; so that it will read:

And the faith of the United States is hereby pledged that the United States will, by proper proportional appropriations as contemplated in this act, and by causing to be levied upon the property within said District such taxes as will do so, provide the revenues necessary to pay the interest on said bonds as the same may become due and payable, and create a sinking fund for the payment of the principal thereof at maturity.

It is further provided that registered bonds may be issued in lieu of coupon bonds as provided in the act of June 20, 1874, or exchanged for coupon bonds already issued; and that the interest of all these bonds shall be payable at the Treasury of the United States.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PROPOSED EVENING SESSION.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that at five o'clock this afternoon the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock this evening for the special purpose of considering the bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CONKLING. I would like to know before we vote on that question what is to be the disposition of the mean time.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I supposed there was a regular order before the Senate. I would be very glad to go on with the District bill at one o'clock.

Mr. CHANDLER. I give notice that I shall press the steamboat bill this afternoon and evening until its final passage to-day.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine that at five o'clock the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock for the purpose of considering at the evening session the bill for the better government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope that motion will not prevail, for the reason that I shall endeavor to press the steamboat bill and secure its passage before the session of to-day closes, if possible. I hope no recess will be taken.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope the Senator will have the good fortune to have his business out of the way before five o'clock.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 15, noes 30.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. MERRIMON. What is the exact proposition?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposition is to have a recess this afternoon and to consider this evening the District bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I ask for the yeas and nays, and after they are ordered I desire to say a word.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Mr. President, I shall not undertake to antagonize this bill against the bill now under consideration as the regular order; but if a session is ordered to-night, that bill being out of the way, we can consider the bill to which I have referred. If we do not and that bill is not closed before that time, this order does not displace it; it will still be in the power of the Senate to proceed with it; but we have come now to that period in the session when we must make the most of our time. I take it for granted that it is the sense of the Senate that we should act on this bill and within two or three days following we shall be in a condition where we shall be obliged to consider other bills which have precedence. I hope therefore that it will be the general sense of the Senate that this order be made now, and if the bill of the Senator from Michigan is out of the way, very well; if it is not, the District bill cannot be in its way. It is the regular order and will have its course if the Senate chooses to sit; but if it does not choose to sit for that purpose, then I think it ought to sit for the consideration of the bill to which I have referred. I am quite surprised that under these circumstances there should be any disinclination on the part of the Senate to make this order. It does not interfere with the regular order at all unless the Senate choose to have it so. If it is the sense of the Senate that it will not consider the bill for the better government of the District of Columbia, then say so, and this is a good opportunity perhaps to say so. I only wish to understand it, and I shall govern myself accordingly. I can hardly see under these circumstances why the Senate should hesitate to make such an order as I have proposed.

Mr. SARGENT. I understand the condition of matters to be in this District that all law for its government expires in a month, and that after that time there will be no law for the levying of any taxes; that there will be no means by which the schools can be kept in operation; that the fire department will have no support; that all branches of administration in the city will cease for want of authority to levy and collect taxes to keep government going. Under these circumstances, either to-night or soon we ought to pass upon some form of bill for the government of the District. I think that I am not mistaken in these premises and in my conclusion, and I trust we may remain in session for this purpose. We are getting now near the close of the Congress; we have only a few weeks left. Very important business is pressing upon us, and this among the most important of all; and it seems to me it would be a matter of pain to ourselves to have to think, after this Congress adjourns until next December perhaps, that we had left this city in a state of chaos without any government, without any power to levy or collect taxes.

For these reasons it seems to me that this motion should carry, especially as the Senator who makes it states it is not his purpose to antagonize any business that may be under consideration during the day, and if that runs over to the evening session let it be attended to in the evening; but if it is disposed of then the Senate may proceed to the consideration of this matter.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. CHANDLER. Will the Clerk be kind enough to read the motion as made?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is that at five o'clock the Senate take a recess until seven o'clock for the purpose at that time of considering the bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia, and on that motion the yeas and nays have been ordered by the Senate.

Mr. CHANDLER. If the latter part of the motion were stricken out I might possibly vote for the recess; that is, for the purpose of taking up any business. As I understand it, the steamboat bill will be the unfinished business, and I give notice that if the recess be taken, I shall still antagonize the steamboat bill against this or any other bill. I served that notice several days ago that when we got the steamboat bill up, I should not give way for anything, and I shall still, if the recess be taken, attempt to antagonize the steamboat bill against this. I hope the Senator will consent to strike out the latter part of his motion "for the purpose of taking up the District bill," and allow the motion for a recess to pass on its naked merits.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is not my purpose to antagonize the District bill against other business. I will withdraw my call for the yeas and nays, and content myself with dividing the Senate again on the question to save time.

Mr. MORTON. I understand the Senator from Maine now to say that it is not his purpose to antagonize the District bill against the bill before the Senate; that is to say, if the steamboat bill is not finished when the Senate meets at seven o'clock, he will not make a motion to substitute for it the District bill, but will let the steamboat bill go on. If that is the understanding, I shall vote for the motion.

Mr. CHANDLER. With that understanding I have no objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Maine withdraws the call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. CONKLING. With that understanding I think the Senator from Maine may succeed in having those who voted before exchange places with each other. If it is possible that the Senator from Maine consents to an arrangement by which when we are only able in the day-time to retain a bare quorum to consider the steamboat bill, an evening session is to be held to be attended by nobody except those who respond to the summons to vote down all amendments, no matter what they are—if the Senator from Maine proposes that, he may rest assured that some of those who voted with him before will not consent to do any such thing now.

As pertinent to this, I beg to make a suggestion, and I ask the attention of those who seem determined, without reference to the nature of amendments, to insist upon the steamboat bill as it is. I ask the attention of every Senator to this statement. The steamboat bill has never been read in any committee of this body; it has never been read in the Committee on Commerce. No amendment to it has ever been considered in that committee. No section of the steamboat bill has ever been considered by the Committee on Commerce. Now if the friends of the bill will allow it to go to the Committee on Commerce; or any other committee of this body—they may select their own committee—and with the understanding that it is to be reported back not later than next Monday morning, I will say in advance and having consulted some other Senators I think they will say the same thing—but I speak for myself—that I will hold myself acquitted in regard of opposition to the steamboat bill. If the friends of the bill will only allow it to be considered by a committee, I repeat, the reference being made with the understanding that it shall be reported back by next Monday, which certainly cannot jeopard its passage, and the committee come in reporting this bill without amendment, I will content myself with a very brief statement of my reasons for voting against it, and then so far as I am concerned the vote may be taken and all can record themselves. But if the friends of the bill persist that it shall be passed without the dot of an i or the cross of a t, that every amendment no matter what its merits, before they hear it, shall be voted down, be it so. I say it has had no consideration for reasons which I do not care to go into and for which I blame nobody; that vacant chair [pointing to Mr. Buckingham's seat] is one of the reasons why this bill has not been considered in the Committee on Commerce. Without imputing any dereliction to any Senator, for I mean no such thing, taking to myself all the blame that I intimate as applicable to anybody else, if there be any, I say that such a bill which has never been considered and passed upon by any committee of this body ought at least to be once considered. Let it go to the Committee on Commerce or to any other committee the Senator from Ohio who leads the bill or the Senator from Michigan who reported it may name. Let it go with the understanding that it shall be reported back in a certain number of days to be fixed, but next Monday is far enough off, and thus allow those of us who feel charged with some duty here to reconcile themselves by having discharged in some sort their duty, and the Senate will not be detained; but on the contrary if the present course is persisted in, all we can do is to present our amendments, to give in the shortest possible time the reasons for them, and ask the vote of the Senate.

Now, I appeal to my friend from Michigan, who has done all that he could to put forward this bill, who has relied, and perhaps justly, upon constituents and others who are in its favor—I appeal to him to allow the bill to go to the Committee on Commerce, or to any committee he chooses to name, making an understanding that it shall come back within a certain number of days a condition of the reference, so as to expose it to no danger from delay, and thus allow those of us who cannot vote for it as it stands to be able to say that we have in some measure at least discharged the duty incumbent upon us. Now, I suggest that that disposes of all this matter.

I submit, in conclusion—I will take my seat when I repeat—that, this being Wednesday, if the bill shall be reported back by Saturday or Monday, certainly my friend from Michigan, who I see has risen, cannot say that it is a movement designed by delay to jeopard the ultimate passage of the bill.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President—

Mr. THURMAN. I rise to a question of order. I want to know what has become of the rule that requires the committees to be called in the morning hour?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The whole debate is out of order entirely.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The debate is out of order, but the motion is not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The business before the Senate is to divide on the motion of the Senator from Maine.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I gain nothing, I perceive, by this motion at this time. I can make it at any time. It is a privileged motion. And therefore, reserving to myself the right to make the motion again, and giving notice that I will make it and call for the sense of the Senate on the District bill to which I will try to get attention at the earliest moment, I withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn.

BUSINESS OF PUBLIC BUILDINGS COMMITTEE.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. As the morning hour has been nearly consumed, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds shall have the usual hour after the close of the morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Vermont asks that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, which is entitled to a portion of the morning hour, have an hour from this time for its business.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I do not know that we shall use half the hour.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills from the House of Representatives were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws of the United States:

A bill (H. R. No. 4535) providing for the distribution of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

A bill (H. R. No. 4546) to correct errors and supply omissions in the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The bill (H. R. No. 4675) to relieve Isaac N. Brown of his political disabilities was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (H. R. No. 4676) for the relief of actual settlers on lands claimed to be swamp and overflowed lands in the State of Missouri was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

HAYDEN'S GEOLOGICAL AND GEOGRAPHICAL REPORT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring.) That there be printed fifty-five hundred copies of Professor Hayden's annual report of the geological and geographical survey of the Territories for 1873; three thousand copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives, one thousand for the use of the Senate, and fifteen hundred copies for the use of the Smithsonian Institution.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT COVINGTON, KENTUCKY.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I call up Senate bill No. 1019.

The bill (S. No. 1019) making an appropriation for public buildings at Covington, Kentucky, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It appropriates $150,000 for the completion of public buildings at Covington, Kentucky.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will state that originally a smaller sum was appropriated, but was found insufficient, and at the last session of Congress an additional sum was authorized to be expended for the erection of public buildings at Covington. The buildings have been commenced, and upon reference to the Secretary of War he says that this amount is indispensable to their completion. Of course we do not like to leave them half completed, and the Committee on Public Buildings, while they have as yet reported no original measure for public buildings, report in favor of this additional sum.

Mr. HOWE. How much has been appropriated?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I think about $100,000.

Mr. HOWE. What is the building?

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. A post-office and court-house.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CUSTOM-HOUSE IN LOUISVILLE.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I now call up House bill No. 2109.

The bill (H. R. No. 2109) for the protection of the United States custom-house in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It empowers the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase from the owner or owners thereof, at a price not to exceed $12,500, all that certain piece of ground in the city of Louisville, Kentucky, situate west of and adjoining the United States custom-house, fronting twenty-five feet on Green street, and extending back one hundred and fifty feet, parallel with and the same depth as the custom-house property; and for that purpose appropriates $12,500.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The committee, on examination, find that this is essential to the security of the public building at Louisville. This ground is closely adjacent thereto, and in case of fire it would destroy that side of the building. Although the sum appears high, no more will be paid than is absolutely necessary; and from the testimony given before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, it is not near so extravagant as was at first supposed. The land there is exceedingly valuable. The committee therefore report the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PEABODY SCHOOL IN SAINT AUGUSTINE, FLORIDA.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I call up Senate bill No. 782.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 782) to grant a site for the Peabody school in Saint Augustine, Florida; the pending question being on an amendment offered by Mr. EDMUNDS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The bill will be read as it stands amended.

The CHIEF CLERK. The bill as amended when before under consideration reads:

That the western part of the lot of land in Saint Augustine, Florida, lying at the corner of Tolamato and King streets, and now the property of the United States, the said part of said lot having a south front upon King street of two hundred feet, and a west end upon Tolamato street of one hundred and sixty-seven and three-tenths feet, a rear upon the north of two hundred feet, and an east end of one hundred and sixty-seven and three-tenths feet, is hereby ceded, given, and granted to the board of education of the State of Florida for the use of a public free school in the city of Saint Augustine, Florida, and to their successors; and the said board of education are hereby fully authorized to erect thereon such a building as in their judgment shall be for the best advantage of the school.

Sec. 2. That this act shall take effect from its passage.

The amendment of Mr. EDMUNDS is to add to the first section the following:

Provided, That if at any time admission to said school shall be denied to any person on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude, the grant hereby made shall cease, and the property hereby granted shall thereupon revert to the United States.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will say that this ground is a portion of land owned by the United States that is of no use to the United States at the present time, and would be exceedingly convenient for a public school that is proposed. The school will be established entirely by the contributions of liberal-minded men of that place.

I will also state that there is a school there for colored children, and that the amendment which my colleague offered is therefore not required, and if he was here I should ask him to withdraw it, as it might interfere with the charity of these persons who propose to establish a first-class school there. I hope the amendment will not be adopted, but that the bill as reported by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds will be assented to.

Mr. MORTON. I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I simply desire to state, so that the Senate may understand it, that this is a proposition on the part of citizens of Saint Augustine to establish a first-class school. They have already there a school for colored persons that is supported by the contributions of the people there, as I understand, fully accommodating all that desire to attend. Now, I do not know that this would injure the bill in the estimation of those parties, but at the same time so anxious am I to have schools established upon any terms in the South either for the white race or the colored, that I would not embarrass the proposition by incumbering it with such a condition as is proposed. In my judgment, the application of that principle upon this bill is not at all necessary.

Mr. HOWE. It does seem to me a little late in the history of the world for the United States to undertake the endowment of schools from which any portion of its people shall be excluded. If there are those in the United States still left who are so anxious for the education of one kind of people, and only one kind, that they are willing to defray the expense of that, I am glad for those people, glad to have such citizens; but I do not want the United States of America to join that fraternity. When the United States lifts its hands or opens its purse or its resources for the purpose of education, I want it to do it for the education of its citizens, or the children of those citizens, without any distinction of race or—what is that other word?

Mr. ALLISON. Color.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Color or previous condition of servitude.

Mr. HOWE. Color. I am obliged to my friend from Iowa; and I am glad that even the Senator from Vermont had not forgotten it as I had. Without any distinction, then, of race or color—

Mr. CAMERON. Or previous condition.

Mr. HOWE. I omit those words; I see no object in them. Mr. President, I shall vote for the amendment, and if the amendment is refused a place on the bill I shall vote against the bill, if I live to vote upon it at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment, upon which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 23, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Clayton, Conkling, Cragin, Dorsey, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Mitchell, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Robertson, Sargent, Stewart, West, and Wright—23.

NAYS—Messrs. Bayard, Boggy, Cameron, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Ingalls, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Vermont, Ransom, Saulsbury, Schurz, Sprague, Stockton, and Thurman—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Boutwell, Brownlow, Carpenter, Chandler, Conover, Edmunds, Fenton, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Norwood, Pease, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Tipton, Wadleigh, Washburn, and Windom—25.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. ALCORN. I dislike very much to oppose the passage of a bill like this, being a friend of education; and yet in the present attitude of the measure I shall be constrained to vote against it. There has been a vote of the Senate here which indicates the fact that the republicans are becoming terribly demoralized upon this colored question. Upon a direct issue here as to whether the colored children of the South shall be excluded from participation in the benefits of this school the Senate has declared that that discrimination shall or may be made. If there had been nothing said in regard to the amendment it might have been held that this school was for the benefit of all the children of the community; but when the question is asked, as it was asked in the form of an amendment, as to whether the trustees of this institution should have power to exclude colored children from that school, the Senate decides that they may have that power. There is an implied license here that they shall exercise that power, and with this implied license following as it does in quick and hot pursuit, I shall vote against the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I merely desire to say that I think the bill is not open to the criticism of the Senator from Mississippi. It says nothing at all about the question, and leaves it entirely open; and I hope the trustees will allow all children the benefits of the school, but I do not know how that will be; I am not informed on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to grant a site for a public free school in Saint Augustine, Florida."

Mr. HOWE subsequently said: I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill making a grant of lands to establish a school in Saint Augustine, Florida, was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion to reconsider will be entered.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TOPEKA, KANSAS.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I now call up Senate bill No. 55, and I will say in advance that I should not call up this bill, it having been reported at the last session and making an appropriation for a building not yet commenced, but that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] assures me that he will offer a substitute merely providing for a site and for a very small appropriation. This is at the capital of the State, where such a building has been asked for many, many years. I think they ought to have it as soon as we have any funds to construct it; and in order that we may be prepared for that, if the Senator from Kansas proposes an amendment which will only authorize the procurement of a site, I do not object to the consideration of the bill at the present time.

The bill (S. No. 55) to authorize the construction of a public building at Topeka, Kansas, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. INGALLS. I am aware that the present is not an auspicious time for appropriations for public buildings. An empty Treasury and an anticipated deficiency in the revenue require the strictest economy and a rigid reduction in all our appropriations. But while I believe that the interests of the Government would be subserved, considering the amount of business transacted at the capital of the State of Kansas, the amount of rents that are already paid there for the accommodation of the various offices, and the risk that the records of those offices constantly incur from unsuitable accommodations, yet, on consultation with the chairman of the committee, I have concluded to offer a substitute for the bill providing for the location of these buildings and a very small appropriation for the procurement of a site, leaving the subject of the construction of the buildings to a more favorable time in our financial history. I offer the following as a substitute for the pending bill:

Strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized and directed to purchase at private sale, or procure by condemnation, a suitable tract of land in the city of Topeka, Kansas, for a site for a fire-proof building for the accommodation of the United States district and circuit courts, post-office, pension agency, land offices, and other Government offices in said city; said tract of land not to exceed in cost the sum of $10,000, which sum is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated; but the same shall not be available until a valid title to the land shall be vested in the United States, nor until the State of Kansas shall relinquish its jurisdiction over the same and all right to tax or assess the same while owned by the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the purchase of a site for public buildings at Topeka, Kansas."

PUBLIC BUILDINGS AT HARRISBURGH, PENNSYLVANIA.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I now call up Senate bill No. 1270.

The bill (S. No. 1270) to authorize the purchase of a site for public buildings at Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It is a direction to the Secretary of the Treasury to purchase at private sale or procure by condemnation a suitable tract of ground in the city of Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, for the erection thereon of a building for the accommodation of the post-office and other Government offices in said city, and an appropriation of $160,000 for the purchase of the tract of ground. The sum appropriated is not to be available until a valid title to the land shall be vested in the United States, and the State of Pennsylvania shall relinquish its jurisdiction over the same and all right to tax or assess the same while owned by the United States.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will say that this bill is for the purpose of procuring a site for public buildings at Harrisburgh, the capital of one of the largest States of the Union, and where they have sought to have public buildings erected year after year. At the last session or the session before the last the Secretary of the Treasury was authorized to ascertain at what price a suitable site could be obtained. The commissioners appointed for that purpose have made an investigation and reported upon the subject. It is not expected that the cost of the land will amount to so much as is here appropriated, but for abundant caution the sum of $160,000 has been inserted in the bill, as the land will have to be condemned and the valuation fixed by the court.

I believe that the public business requires a building there at some early day; and as I have already stated, it is the capital of the State, and it has been the principle and rule of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, where such buildings were asked for, to grant those for the capitals of States first. This bill merely authorizes the purchase of a site.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to suggest to my friend from Vermont, not antagonizing this bill at all, that I notice that the usual—perhaps not exception—but the usual provision found in these bills is not here, "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will accept that as an amendment, "or so much thereof as may be necessary."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to that amendment being inserted.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not know any better occasion to make a question which I have long thought ought to have been sooner made, than on this bill. I have no objection to the bill, but I do object to one of the provisions in it, although that provision is to be found in many laws which have been passed for the erection of public buildings by the United States.

I move to strike out of the bill all that part which requires the State of Pennsylvania to surrender her jurisdiction to the United States. The Constitution provides that the United States shall have exclusive jurisdiction over the District of Columbia and over all real estate obtained with the consent of the States for forts, arsenals, and other necessary buildings. It is manifestly proper that where property is obtained for a fort or an arsenal or a navy-yard or any other military purpose, the jurisdiction of the United States should be exclusive; but there is no good reason why the United States should have exclusive jurisdiction over the ground occupied by a post-office, while there are many reasons why it should not.

The United States can become a property-owner and does become a property-owner throughout the Union. Whenever it rents property for a post-office or a custom-house or a land office, it is a property-owner there, a lessee, and it is at this very moment a property-owner in the city of Harrisburgh by virtue of its lease of ground for a post-office. There is no necessity, therefore, for the State of Pennsylvania to give her consent to a purchase of property by the United States for a post-office; nor is there any necessity that she should surrender jurisdiction in order to enable us to own a piece of property there and a building upon it to be used as a post-office. What possible good, then, can result from her surrender of jurisdiction? None whatsoever; but on the contrary much evil, for the first thing that results from her surrender of jurisdiction is that nobody committing a crime within that building thus under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States can be punished in any judicial tribunal of the State of Pennsylvania. The city of Harrisburgh is ousted completely of her police jurisdiction over that building. No crimes committed there against the ordinances of the city, no crimes committed against the statutes of the State of Pennsylvania, nothing done there, can be made the subject of cognizance in any tribunal of Pennsylvania, whether State or municipal. The police of Harrisburgh, as I said, are as much excluded from it as if it was a portion of Austria instead of a portion of Pennsylvania. There is no reason in the world why that should be so.

This provision requiring States to release their jurisdiction to ground for post-offices and custom-houses has been creeping into our legislation of late. It was not formerly done; it has crept in of late and it is time to stop it, in my humble judgment, and I hope the Senate will now and in every other case of this sort strike out any such provision if it be proposed. I hope the Senate will pay attention to this matter, and manifest by its vote now to the committees having these matters in charge that henceforth they are to put no such provisions in their bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Senator may be right or wrong, but I hope the little remnant that remains of our hour will not be consumed upon so technical an objection as he presents.

Mr. SHERMAN. It is not technical.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. The Government of the United States and the people have got along very well with this provision in every bill, so far as my observation extends, from the foundation of the Government, and I therefore do not think it worth while to discuss the matter at the present time.

Mr. BAYARD. Mr. President, I do not think the honorable Senator from Vermont should term this a technical objection. It is one of great substance, and I think has been very reasonably stated by the honorable Senator from Ohio. The effect of ceding jurisdiction by the State to the General Government over these buildings and the grounds attached to them is in some degree to create those buildings a sanctuary for those who may violate State law, from municipal or local jurisdiction. We all know that the freedom from taxation which accompanies and ought to accompany all grants of this kind can be readily had; that every property-owner is only too glad to have the Government of the United States purchase property and improve it in the expensive manner in which it generally does. It is very far from being a technical question, but is one of substance, and I think the proposition of the Senator from Ohio will recommend itself to every gentleman of the Senate who will give it his attention. Of course these buildings, although belonging to the General Government, are put there chiefly for local accommodation; they are for the accommodation chiefly of the citizens of the place where they are erected, and should be subject to their police control. It is as essential for the safety of the property of the Government as it is for the safety of the community in which the buildings are erected. I trust the honorable Senator from Vermont will see that it is a reasonable and substantial objection, and that he will understand the spirit in which the Senator from Ohio has offered the amendment. I think it is interesting and important both.

Mr. CAMERON. I do not care whether the amendment is put in or not, for I do not think it of any consequence. The bill, however, is drawn precisely as all the bills of this kind have been passed for fifty or more years, and I am sorry that my very good friend from Ohio did not think of his amendment when a large appropriation was made for his city of Columbus, and a larger one for his other city of Cincinnati, and others for other towns in Ohio for this same purpose. I am still more surprised that my friend from Delaware did not make his objection last year when we were giving him an appropriation for a building of this kind in his State capital.

It is rather unpleasant to me that this little lamb of mine should be sacrificed, as it will if we occupy fifteen minutes more, for that is all the time left to this committee. After waiting sixty or seventy years for a post-office at Harrisburgh, we are met by a constitutional question which nobody thought of until to-day. I am not surprised at it, because I know the care in legislation of my friend from Ohio. I know his watchfulness for the Constitution which we have all sworn to live and die by; but I wish he had let his objection rest for another day or until a case in another State came up. Remember we have a population of over forty thousand people in Harrisburgh; we have no public building of the United States there at all. The house in which the post-office is now kept is unfit for its use. We belong to one of the largest States, a state having nearly four millions of people. But, sir, I see how the hands of the clock are moving, and rather than loose my bill, I am willing that the amendment shall be carried, if that will stop the debate.

Mr. THURMAN. My friend from Pennsylvania cannot have had both his ears open or he would have known that I said I was for the appropriation. I want the bill to pass but do not want this objectionable provision in it, and I hope the Senator having the bill in charge will accept my amendment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I cannot accept it, but it is entirely immaterial to me, so far as I am concerned, whether it is voted in or out. I think it unnecessary but I regard it as entirely immaterial.

Mr. THURMAN. Let the amendment be sustained then, and there will be no objection to the bill.

Mr. CAMERON. Very well.

Mr. CONKLING. Let us hear the amendment read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. The amendment is to strike out in line 14 "its jurisdiction over the same and;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That the sum hereby appropriated shall not be available until a valid title to the land shall be vested in the United States, and the State of Pennsylvania shall relinquish all right to tax or assess the same while owned by the United States.

Mr. CONKLING. I wish the Senator from Ohio would make this question in another way and make it in such wise that a committee can examine it and report upon it, and not move it as an amendment to one single bill. Were the amendment to prevail, we should have this anomaly: an unbroken current of precedents on this subject for a long time one way, containing this stereotyped phrase—the Senator from Ohio shakes his head, partly because he is so accustomed to do it when I say anything that it becomes almost involuntary. Therefore I take occasion to repeat that these words as they stand are contained in a long line of precedents going back precisely how far I do not know; I know of several of them in my own State; I have had occasion to look at them; and although the Senator from Ohio shakes his ambrosial curls, I repeat that such are the precedents. Now without the report of any committee, without anything but a passing vote in a very thin Senate to provide that in the capital of the State of Pennsylvania the rule on this subject shall be one way when in the capital city of New York, since the Senator has been in the Senate, he not objecting and nobody objecting, the other rule has been affirmed and established, the same thing in the city in which I reside, the same thing in other cities of the State of New York and in other States, I submit would be an anomaly which would be quite unwarrantable. If it is right for us to change not only the form but the substance in this regard, I submit it should be done upon the report of a committee, done with deliberation, and should then by a general bill be made applicable to the cases which it befits. But to take out one isolated case and do it there proposing no general provision which is to correct this, if in truth it be wrong, in other cases, I think would be illogical and unjustifiable; and therefore, without expressing any opinion now upon the question raised by the Senator from Ohio, although as he is aware that question has been considered beyond the confines of this room and considered recently with great care and is a question the consideration flowing from which (not to speak of its own importance) require grave deliberation and deliberate action; assuming that the Senator is right, I submit to him that he ought to offer at some time some general measure which shall cure this and all these cases if it ought to be cured, and not leave the provision stand here, should it be adopted, applicable to one single instance picked out of the whole flock.

Mr. THURMAN. We have to begin somewhere, and we must begin when the first bill comes up. If the Senate manifests its disposition not to enact this provision into a law here, we are to presume that no committee hereafter will report it in any bill. At any rate by our vote now we can put a stop to this in my judgment very erroneous practice, and which if Senators will look into the legislation of the country they will see is by no means as universal as the Senator from New York supposes. I hope the amendment will prevail.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. THURMAN. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 15, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Bayard, Boggy, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sprague, Stockton, and Thurman—15.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boreman, Cameron, Conkling, Edmunds, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Hitchcock, Ingalls, Jones, Mitchell, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Patterson, Pratt, Ramsey, Robertson, Sargent, Scott, Stewart, and Wright—24.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Boutwell, Brownlow, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dorsey, Fenton, Ferry of Connecticut, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Johnston, Lewis, Logan, Morrill of Maine, Morton, Norwood, Pease, Schurz, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Tipton, Wadleigh, Washburn, West, and Windom—33.

So the amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT THE DALLES, OREGON.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I call up Senate bill No. 1097.

The bill (S. No. 1097) to donate to the State of Oregon a public building, lot, and material, situated at The Dalles, Oregon, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It donates the mint building, material, and lot on which it is located, at The Dalles, Oregon, to the State of Oregon, on the condition that the building and lot shall be appropriated by the State to the use of some educational or charitable institution.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I merely desire to say that this building has been for several years and is rapidly being so much injured by the weather that it will soon be valueless. The Government of the United States has no use for it whatever, and I do not know what better we can do with it than donate it to the State of Oregon and get rid of having charge of it. It is some expense to take charge of it.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILROADS IN WASHINGTON.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I now call up Senate bill No. 861.

The bill (S. No. 861) for a commission to regulate and arrange tracks and depots for steam-railways within the city of Washington was read the second time, and considered as in Committee of the Whole. It constitutes the chief officer of engineers of the Army of the United States, the engineer officer in charge of public buildings and grounds in the city of Washington, and three other suitable and competent persons, to be selected by the President of the United States, a commission to examine the whole subject of steam-railway tracks entering the District of Columbia, both as to existing roads and those in course of construction, and especially as to connections which will best accommodate travel and trade by land and water; the location and construction of tracks and depots, so as to diminish and limit the obstruction of streets, avenues, and public grounds as far as possible; and also to examine as to the location of horse-railways now existing or authorized, and what more are or will be required for the future accommodation of the city of Washington, and where such railroads may be properly established without interfering with public grounds and with the least convenience to avenue and streets; and further to examine and report upon some just and equitable system of taxation for horse-railways, based upon the amount of gross or net receipts, and to report a full and comprehensive plan, embracing all the points herein mentioned, and all matters properly connected therewith, to Congress, on the 1st of December, 1875.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move that that bill be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I trust that will not be done. I supposed that the Committee on the District of Columbia had no opposition to this provided they got their railroad bills through; I understood that they would even aid in the passage of this bill. I take it that there is not a member of the Senate who does not recognize the policy of having a commission of this sort. Here is the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company waiting for the action of the House before they establish their depot. The question is of sufficient magnitude to be assigned to a competent commission. I do not desire to occupy any time discussing it. I trust that the motion to refer the bill to another committee will be voted down and that we shall pass it at the present time.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The bill will create three more fat offices in this District, to which I am opposed. The Committee on the District of Columbia is the proper reference for the bill, and I therefore move to refer it to that committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from South Carolina.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the yeas were 5—

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. We shall have to call the yeas and nays in order to get a quorum, I suspect.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll. Mr. ALCORN answered to his name.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I ask that the bill be read. I think Senators do not understand it. It creates additional offices, and I want Senators to know what they are voting on.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The roll-call cannot be stopped to read the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That point is correct; the roll-call will proceed; the reading of the bill is out of order now.

Mr. MORTON. I inquire if the morning hour has not expired?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not for five minutes yet. This committee has until ten minutes past two.

The Secretary continued and concluded the calling of the roll.

The result was announced—yeas 18, nays 30; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boggy, Davis, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hitchcock, Johnston, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Patterson, Ransom, Robertson, Saulsbury, Sprague, and Thurman—18.

NAYS—Messrs. Anthony, Boreman, Cameron, Chandler, Conkling, Cooper, Cragin, Dennis, Ferry of Connecticut, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Gilbert, Harvey, Ingalls, Jones, Mitchell, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Morton, Oglesby, Pratt, Ramsey, Sargent, Scott, Stewart, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—30.

ABSENT—Messrs. Allison, Boutwell, Brownlow, Carpenter, Clayton, Conover, Dorsey, Edmunds, Fenton, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Howe, Lewis, Logan, Norwood, Pease, Schurz, Sherman, Spencer, Stevenson, Stockton, Tipton, and Washburn—24.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I call for the regular order.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. If the hour has expired, I move the postponement of all prior orders that we may finish the voting on the present bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves the postponement of all prior orders.

Mr. THURMAN. Before the Senator makes that motion, I—

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It will take but a moment.

Mr. THURMAN. What I was going to say is this: I understand a motion will be made to recommit the steamboat bill, and if that motion is to prevail it ought to be done immediately.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. It will take but a few moments to dispose of this bill. I do not think there is a Senator here who desires to debate it. It is well understood what the purpose of it is, and I believe that every Senator approves of the object of the present bill. I know of no one who does not.

Mr. THURMAN. I should like some determination to be come to in regard to the steamboat bill. Let it not be postponed, but passed over informally.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. If no one objects, I will agree to that.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont moves that all prior orders be postponed for the purpose of continuing the consideration of this bill.

Mr. THURMAN. I hope that will not be done. That displaces the steamboat bill. If the Senator will move to postpone it for half an hour, I will agree to that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I will say half an hour, though I do not think it will take three minutes.

Mr. THURMAN. Very well; if it is disposed of sooner, let the regular order then come up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Vermont to postpone the regular order for half an hour in order to continue the consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Let me suggest to the Senator from Vermont that instead of moving to postpone all prior orders, he move to extend the hour of his committee.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. I move to extend the hour long enough to dispose of this bill.

The question being put, there were on a division—yeas 23, noes 7; no quorum voting.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont. Let us have another division. I presume we can get a quorum to vote without calling the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again put the question on extending the time of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds for the purpose of concluding the consideration of the pending bill.

The question being again put, there were on a division—ayes 33, noes 6.

So the motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill (S. No. 861) for a commission to regulate and arrange tracks and depots of steam railways within the city of Washington is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I ask that the Clerk read the bill through. I do not think the Senate understand it. It is a bill to create more officers in this District.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the bill.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move to add the following proviso to that bill:

Provided, That said board shall serve without compensation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Now I will vote for the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had concurred in the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. No. 2103) giving the approval and sanction of Congress to the route and termini of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad, and to regulate its construction and operation.

The message further announced that the House requested the return of the bill (H. R. No. 3780) to relieve the political disabilities of Robert Tansill, of Prince William County, Virginia, that an omission in the engrossment may be supplied.

AMENDMENT TO APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. INGALLS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed to the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department, and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

STEAMBOAT LAW.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business of yesterday is the bill (H. R. No. 1588) to revise, amend, and consolidate the laws relating to the security of life on board vessels propelled in whole or in part by steam, and for other purposes, which is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to state in justice to the Committee on Commerce that the Senator from New York, who misapprehends the case somewhat, has made a slight mistake. This steamboat bill—substantially this bill—has been before Congress for about four years. It passed this body once or twice, passed the other House once or twice, and finally came to us on the report of a committee of conference, but was defeated for want of time in the closing days of a session. This bill was read more than once and occupied more time of the Committee on Commerce of each House than any bill I think that has ever been before it.

Mr. CONKLING. When was it read in the Committee on Commerce? Will the Senator state?

Mr. CHANDLER. Years ago. This identical bill was referred to a sub-committee, of which the Senator from New York was a member, and we never could get it out of the hands of that sub-committee for reasons which I cannot explain. It lay in the hands of that sub-committee for months; and finally, when we got action before the committee, it was in the hands of that sub-committee; but the bill itself substantially, as it now stands, is the bill that passed the Senate, passed the House, came to a committee of conference, and was defeated for want of time to act on the report of the committee. I say this as a simple act of justice to the Committee on Commerce. They spent more time on this bill, and have for the past four years, than on any bill that has been before them.

Now, Mr. President, I am disposed to accept the proposition of the Senator from New York to allow the bill to go back to the Committee on Commerce, with the understanding that they shall consider it from now until Saturday or Monday, and that on Saturday or Monday it shall be reported to this body and the Committee on Commerce shall ask action on it. I therefore move its reference to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. CONKLING. I shall acquiesce in that motion of course; but before doing so justice to somebody besides the Committee on Commerce requires a word in reply to the statement of the Senator.

I repeat that since I have been a member of the Committee on Commerce this bill or the equivalent of this bill has never been read in the committee, and in order to fortify myself upon that statement, I have consulted every member of the Committee on Commerce who was accessible, and every member has informed me that never in his presence or hearing was this bill read. So much for that part of the Senator's statement.

I come to another matter to which I should not, in spite of the rule, have ventured to refer; but now that the Senator has opened the door, I am very glad to be able at last to do justice once for all to myself, who have been referred to by the Senator from Pennsylvania as a member of the committee who ought to know, and at the same time to other members of the committee. I refer of course to the statement of the Senator from Michigan, that the bill having been committed to a sub-committee, it was impossible to get it out of the hands of that sub-committee, and he says it there remained for months; a statement which my honorable friend will find utterly wrong if he will refer to recorded dates. But no matter about that. Now, Mr. President, for the facts.

This bill was referred by the Committee on Commerce to a sub-committee consisting of the Senator from Massachusetts not now in his seat, [Mr. BOUTWELL,] the honorable Senator from Connecticut [Mr. Buckingham] not now in his chair, and never to be with us again, and myself. That sub-committee was guilty of no dereliction and no delay. The Senator from Massachusetts fell sick, and was for some weeks so seriously ill as rarely to be able to attend the Senate. Notwithstanding that, and by the aid of an expert whom he summoned to his side, that Senator diligently pursued the examination, and so did the honorable Senator from Connecticut, now no more. It would not be becoming in me to attribute diligence to myself; but I will deny whenever the charge is made that I was guilty of any default or delay whatever on this subject. On the contrary, I have on paper and now within my reach the evidence which will show that whatever error I committed, a want of diligence in gathering information was not a part of that error.

The sub-committee having gone substantially through this matter, being substantially ready to report, learned to its utter amazement that, under circumstances which I will not speak of, assent was obtained of the Committee on Commerce, without the sub-committee knowing anything about it, to take bodily from the committee the bill without dotting an i or crossing a t and bring the whole thing back into the Senate; and that knowledge never came to a member of the sub-committee until after the bill had been called up in the Senate, excepting that my friend from Michigan tells me that one member of the sub-committee, the Senator from Massachusetts, was present on an occasion when it was spoken of in committee, but the other two members of the sub-committee certainly never heard that the bill had been reported from the committee until a proposition was made to call it up here in the Senate.

Mr. President, I say this in justice to all concerned. I impute nothing to anybody; I complain of nothing; but the truth undoubtedly is, first, that this bill or any bill equivalent to it has never, within the last three years at all events, been considered by the Committee on Commerce. The truth is that no question was ever taken upon a section of the bill or an amendment to it, and that while the sub-committee was diligently and faithfully working by the aid of experts to amend the bill as it should be, they were suddenly, without their knowledge, ousted of jurisdiction and the whole bill without a change in it brought back into the Senate and we confronted with this technical report.

I am very glad, I repeat, to have had the opportunity to say this, because I wish to disabuse the mind of every Senator of the idea that I or anybody acting with me have been making factious opposition to the bill or doing an unusual thing. We have simply been insisting that consideration should be given to those amendments which we were not permitted in committee to consider, and particularly as ever since the bill came up on the present occasion a bare quorum only has been present, so that no majority of the Senate has ever yet voted against one of these amendments; Senators will see if they look at the yeas and nays that they have been voted down usually by less than two-fifths of the Senate.

But, Mr. President, if the bill can go to the Committee on Commerce with the understanding that it is to be reported back not later than Monday next, I promise the honorable Senator from Michigan that I will attend his call as a member of the committee, and I hope others will do so; we will consider it, and I have no doubt that it will abbreviate and substantially put an end to all delay by way of consideration of the bill in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion to recommit the bill to the Committee on Commerce, with the understanding that it be reported back on Saturday or Monday as the committee may agree.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. McPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (H. R. No. 3821) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BILLS RECOMMENDED.

Mr. HOWE. I ask to have the bill (H. R. No. 4466) permitting Lieutenant-Commander Frederick Pearson, of the Navy, to accept a decoration from the Queen of Great Britain recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill was indefinitely postponed. Does the Senator ask to have that motion reconsidered?

Mr. HOWE. I move that the vote indefinitely postponing the bill be reconsidered, and that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair hears no objection, and the order will be made.

On motion of Mr. PATTERSON, it was Ordered, That the bill (H. R. No. 3725) granting a pension to Mary Ann Eaton be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. OGLESBY. The bill (H. R. No. 1644) granting a pension to Hannah E. Currie was reported back from the Senate Committee on Pensions some time ago and indefinitely postponed. I ask that the Senate give consent that the motion to postpone indefinitely may be reconsidered and that the bill may be recommitted to the Committee on Pensions to hear evidence which ought to have been, and was intended then to have been, laid before the committee, but through neglect was not laid before it. For that purpose I think the bill ought to be recommitted, and I ask unanimous consent of the Senate that the vote to postpone may be reconsidered and the bill recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent to reconsider the vote indefinitely postponing the bill (H. R. 1644) granting a pension to Hannah E. Currie.

The motion was agreed to; and the bill was recommitted to the Committee on Pensions.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. No. 3321) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Indian Department and for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes for the year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill for the better government of the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. MORTON to strike out in section 3, commencing in line 3, the following words:

To be severally appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to be known as the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia; and the members first to be appointed shall be nominated and confirmed, respectively, to and for the terms following, in the order of their appointment, namely:

And in lieu thereof to insert:

To be elected by the qualified voters of said District.

So as to make the section read:

There shall be at the head of said Department a board of commissioners, to consist of three members, to be elected by the qualified voters of said District, &c.

Mr. MORTON. As I offered this amendment, before the vote is taken I desire to call the attention of the Senate to its importance and to the great interest that is involved. In a bill which passed Congress at the close of the last session suffrage in this District was stricken down, and the Government committed to three commissioners, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. That bill passed hastily, without much consideration, and under what seemed to be an apparent necessity at the time, but it was understood to be temporary, that it was simply to bridge over the interregnum until this session of Congress when another form of government would be considered and devised. If it had been understood then that suffrage in this District was to be permanently destroyed, I do not believe the bill could have been passed with all the pressure and the apparent necessity for its passage. That bill has been made a stepping-stone, and we now have the proposition in Congress permanently, for a long series of years, to destroy the right of suffrage both of white and black people. I am opposed to this upon principle; I am opposed to it upon the ground of expediency; I believe it is wrong in every way; and if it shall become a law, it is a precedent that will come back to plague us. It will come back from States to plague us, and will be the recognition of a fact upon our part the effect of which we can scarcely get clear of before the people. Put this bill upon whatever ground you choose, make whatever arguments you may in favor of it, so far as this part of it is concerned it will be said, and everybody will understand whether it is so said or not, that suffrage has been stricken down in this District to get rid of the colored vote. That is the use that will be made of it. During the last canvass in my own State the leading democratic orator upon the other side threw it into our faces, in his argument against colored suffrage, that we ourselves had found it an intolerable burden in this District, and that to get clear of it we had disfranchised everybody. There was then, it was said, no time to reorganize the government of the District, and, as I before remarked, it was understood that it was to be a temporary thing; but that use was made of it, that argument was constructed from it, and now if we shall strike down suffrage permanently we shall do a thing that is anti-democratic, anti-republican, and which will be made an excuse and a precedent for the destruction of colored suffrage in every southern State.

To show that I am not mistaken about the view taken of this, I propose to read a brief extract from the speech of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BAYARD] when this bill was up a few weeks ago. He said:

If the evil of negro suffrage has resulted in injury to the people of this District, he and his party friends caused it; and if they have destroyed suffrage, if they have wiped it out as a motive-power in the government of this District, it is their act, and they are peculiarly and solely responsible for it. And now it is again for them to determine whether they shall again renew this system, which has been so fruitful of loss and injury morally and pecuniarily to this community, or whether they will abandon it; and I can well understand the quandary in which they find themselves placed.

I stop here now to make one comment upon the statement of the Senator from Delaware. He attributes what he pleased to call the misfortunes of this District to the creation of colored suffrage, or to suffrage. I think the Senator is mistaken entirely. The troubles of this District have not come from suffrage; they have not come from elective officers, whether elected by white or by black men. Suffrage is not peculiarly and especially responsible for it; but the Senator would make the impression, and thus have the understanding to be, that what are called the troubles of this District have arisen from the existence of negro suffrage, and he utters the understanding that we have stricken it down because we found it too intolerable to carry.

Mr. President, it was in this District that colored suffrage was first established; and shall it be that this District shall furnish the first examples of its destruction? Does anybody believe for one moment that if suffrage was confined to the white people here there would be an effort to take suffrage from them and to establish a government that is purely arbitrary in its character, over which the people of this District have no control? I cannot believe it; and yet when we come right down to the facts it is impossible for any man to show that colored suffrage has brought upon this District the troubles which are complained of, or that it has wrought injury. There are in this District now about one hundred and fifty thousand people, a larger population than four States of this Union, I believe, contain to-day, and it is growing faster than some States are growing. Yet we have the proposition to deprive this people of the right of suffrage for all time to come, and to give the control of their affairs to three commissioners, to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. As I said before, this is against the very spirit of our institutions. It is contrary to the theory upon which our Government is based. We go upon the principle, and that is the foundation principle of our Government, that governments should exist by the consent of the governed, and that there should be no taxation without representation. That was one of the causes which led to the Revolution. Our fathers claimed that there should be no taxation without representation, and professed to believe that people could govern themselves better than others could govern, whether sent by a king or whether sent by a president to act as their governors. We professed to believe that people understand their local wants, and can administer to them better than a governor appointed without their consent and not responsible to them in any way. We have always professed to believe that a local, elective, representative government, directly responsible to the people whom that government controls, is a safer and better one than any appointed government can be. I have been taught to believe so from my boyhood, and I believe it to-day as much as I ever did. There is no experience in this District, or in this country, or anywhere else that in my opinion contradicts this theory. I stand by it in regard to this District as much as I have ever done.

We are told that the Constitution of the United States gives to Congress exclusive jurisdiction to legislate for this District, and that therefore we cannot create a local government in which the people shall control their own affairs without a violation of that provision. If we can delegate the power to govern this District to three men to be appointed by the President, we can delegate it to a hundred men to be appointed by the President, and if we can delegate it to a hundred we can delegate it to the whole people to be exercised by way of suffrage under rules and regulations that may be provided in this or in some other bill. The same power that appoints and clothes three commissioners with the power to govern this District can refer the whole question to the people and authorize them in the form of suffrage to elect mayor and common council, or a governor and legislature, or to elect these commissioners direct. There is no possible difference in principle.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] said that there was no natural right involved in this question. When this bill was up before, and he will correct me if I misrepresent him, he said that there was no natural or moral right which required us to give to the people of this District the power to govern themselves. I take issue with that proposition entirely. I say that the power of Congress to govern this District ought to be exercised in accordance with the theory of our Government; that it ought to be exercised in accordance with the doctrine of natural rights, and that it should be so exercised as to give to the people of this District, as far as possible, the same right to govern themselves that we give to the people of a Territory, or that the people of a State have, and there is no trouble about it. For some sixty years the people of this District had a local government, and they got along, I believe, very well with it; but times changed, the basis of suffrage was enlarged, the city was growing rapidly since the beginning of the war, and a new government was devised, partly elective and partly appointive, and it is impossible now for any Senator to say that the troubles which have come upon this District have grown out of that part particularly that was elective.

It is the duty of Congress in providing a government to assimilate that government as far as possible to the theory of our institutions, to recognize the natural right of men to govern themselves as far as that is possible; and if we set the example here of striking down suffrage, we may rest assured that that example will be quoted, ay, quoted before we have gotten away from the city, as a precedent for striking down suffrage in States where they are now complaining of it. Does any one doubt that when the time shall come and with such an example, with a change of administration here, if you please, with a democratic President educated in hostility to universal suffrage, taught to believe that colored men have no rights of a political or civil character, suffrage in Southern States will not be changed and that pretexts will not be found—perhaps no pretext but force will be found—to strip the colored men of the right of suffrage? We shall then be told that in this District where the experiment was first tried it was first a failure, and that a republican Congress upon a very thin pretext, with very transparent disguises, took the first opportunity to get clear of colored suffrage, and that for the sake of doing that they were willing to destroy suffrage altogether.

I can understand the offer of a large part of the people of this city, who have been outraged from the beginning as they believe by the establishment of colored suffrage, to be deprived of suffrage themselves in consideration that it shall be taken from the colored people. What is to be gained by it? Will this city be better governed by three commissioners to be appointed by the President than by three commissioners to be elected, or by some sort of an elective government? I do not believe it. I would rather trust three commissioners elected by this people, responsible to this people for their conduct in office, than three men to be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, who would not be responsible to anybody but the appointing power. There is no safety in that form of government. The principle of it is wrong. There is no occasion for its application. I reject it utterly except where it may be an absolute necessity, and I know of no such necessity here.

But I had not finished the quotation from the remarks of my friend from Delaware:

The committee which has reported this bill—

I read from a speech made a few days ago—is of course, as we know, in accordance with the dominant majority of the Senate and the other House, and they have simultaneously reported a bill in either House without reserving to the local population this very important power or right or franchise of suffrage which I think I once heard the honorable Senator say was a "God-given right," the right to vote. They have taken strange liberty with that "God-given right," and here in this District they have absolutely annihilated it, so that to-day the "God-given right" of voting is not exercised by any man in the District, wise or otherwise, black or white, fit or unfit to exercise so high a franchise as I esteem the right of voting to be.

The Senator holds the republican party responsible for this thing. He does right. He has the right to do it. We shall be held responsible everywhere for it. As I said before, it is a thing that will come back to plague us on every stump in every State in this Union. The Senator goes on to say, for this is all instructive, what we can expect:

Now comes the question whether, in what we know of the condition of this District, of its population, and relations of the two races and classes who inhabit it, it is for the benefit of all that you shall restore suffrage to all together, the black with the white, or whether you shall protect the black and the white against the abuses of this great power of suffrage! That is the question. What is just? What is right? Well, sir, on that subject I am disposed to consult not only my own idea of the interests of the people of this District, but I am disposed to consult their wishes. I have always believed and believe to-day that the great safety-valve of government in this country is the right of the people, by the peaceful process of the ballot, to vote themselves free from suffering and to avoid the repetition of error. It is that peaceful process in this country which has taken the place of violent revolutions elsewhere, and we have seen the most wonderful and, in my opinion, most beneficent illustration of that principle in the elections which took place in this country in the last fall. So it should be here.

I call particular attention to what follows:

I do hope to see the day when the control of the question of suffrage in this country shall be left where the federal idea of our Union of States intended it to be left, with the communities who are to be affected for better or for worse by it. So in regard to the people of this District I would endeavor to apply the principle.

Here we have a foreshadowing of what the whole situation teaches us to expect, and that is the coming of that time, not far distant perhaps in the perspective of the Senator, when the people of each State, regardless of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments of the Constitution, shall have the right to determine the question who shall vote in those States. Should there be a democratic administration here, the election of a President who is opposed to these amendments and opposed to this change of suffrage, who believes in the largest view of State rights, then the time has already come, prayed for and prophesied for by the Senator from Delaware, when the people of each State shall determine for itself the question of suffrage; which means that the people of South Carolina, of North Carolina, and of every other State may in their own way, determine the question who shall vote; in other words, that they shall disfranchise the colored people. That is the use to be made of the precedent which we are now asked to set.

I desired to refer to some things said by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. THURMAN] at that time. I will give one quotation. In the course of the speech of the Senator from Ohio, in referring to the plain, downright, frank statement of the Senator from Delaware that this bill was to get clear of colored suffrage, the Senator from Ohio, thinking it might not be good policy to make that avowal just now, very gently turns aside the remark of the Senator from Delaware in this language:

Again, my friend on the left [Mr. BAYARD] says that this is to test the question of the policy or impolicy of negro suffrage. With great respect to him, I do not so consider it. I do not consider that upon the passage of this bill the question of the capacity of the colored people for suffrage is necessarily involved at all.

The Senator from Ohio, who is a wise politician, and perhaps was desirous of keeping that question out until all was consummated, gently turns aside the remark of the Senator from Delaware. But the Senator from Delaware was right. He gave the reason which will always be ascribed for this action, which will be justly ascribed, and the force of which we on the other side cannot avoid.

Therefore I beg those who do not wish to concur in the effect and the policy of this example to consider well before they vote for this bill. My amendment is that these three commissioners shall be elected by the qualified voters of this District, and that they shall not be appointed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I renew the motion I made this morning, that the Senate take a recess at five o'clock until half past seven o'clock this evening.

Several SENATORS. O, no!

Mr. CONKLING. Is that in order?

Mr. THURMAN. I hope that will not be agreed to.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The motion is not open to debate.

Mr. BAYARD. I would ask if that motion has not been voted upon and voted down by the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. FERRY, of Michigan, in the chair.) The motion is in order. At any time any Senator has a right to move a recess.

Mr. THURMAN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is not debatable.

Mr. THURMAN. I wish to know whether it is in order to make the motion now?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is in order at any time.

Mr. THURMAN. That there shall be a recess?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule is:

That during the present session it shall be in order at any time to move a recess.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let us have the sense of the Senate.

Mr. BAYARD. Is debate in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. BAYARD. Without desiring to debate the subject—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the Senator proceeding? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BAYARD. I wish merely to throw out a suggestion, not to discuss the merits of this matter. The effect of the action on this motion this morning has caused certain gentleman to make engagements that they would now be compelled to break were the Senate to sit to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER put the question on the motion, and declared that the yeas appeared to prevail.

Several SENATORS. Divide!

Pending a division,

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is withdrawn.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I wish to make a few observations in reply to the honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON,] who has emphasized what he said on a former occasion and to which I then replied somewhat.

The Senator assumes that there is a question of suffrage in this proposition. By no possibility whatever does any such question arise, either in Constitution, logic, or law. There is no suffrage without representation, and no representation is possible in this District under the Constitution. It may have been a very unwise thing in the framers of the Constitution that they did not provide for it. It may be that if my honorable friend had been a member of that convention, prominent in it as he would have been, it would have been otherwise; but suffice it to say there is no representation given to this District by the Constitution, and there can be none until you change the Constitution. Therefore this whole question of suffrage, of the violation of the principles of suffrage and the principles of popular and local self-government, is a fallacy. You talk about violating the right of suffrage where the exercise of it is a sham necessarily, as it is here! No representation was provided for by the Constitution. This District is not put upon the plane of States, or Territories, or cities, or towns. It is a capital, simply, purely, clearly a capital, in which every jurisdiction, civil and political, is absolutely excluded by the terms of the Constitution. The idea is that we are about to crucify suffrage here in the District of Columbia, because what? Because there happen to be a few colored people here. This idea would never have occurred to my honorable friend if there had been no colored people here; nobody would have thought of it. What is the ratio of colored people here compared with the whites? About one in three; and now it is said that if we do not confer upon these white people and these colored people the right of the elective franchise it will go all over this country and be taken for granted that we have declared in the Congress of the United States against negro suffrage everywhere. Does my honorable friend think that is logical? Because my honorable friend from Delaware let slip some words which are susceptible of an interpretation that he does not favor negro suffrage as a general proposition, we are to be charged with a purpose of ignoring the whole question of negro suffrage as embodied in the constitutional amendments! Does anybody propose to charge me with any such purpose as that? Does anybody suppose that those who had charge of draughting this bill had any such purpose as that? For one I desire to disclaim it. For one I protest that is not the purpose and by no possibility can the implication arise. I am not to be frightened by such a bug-bear as that. When it comes to this, that under the exclusive authority given in the Constitution of the United States we cannot legislate impartially as well for white men as for black men, then I shall be in favor of a new order of things.

Do the people of this District want suffrage? How much suffrage do they get by this proposition now? Here is a bill providing for an Executive Department, in which is vested the executive authority of this District, the power to execute the laws, and that is all there is. The entire legislation of this District is in Congress by the terms of this bill. It is precisely where it always has been, and when my honorable friend talks about our delegating the power of the Government, we never have done it; that question has never arisen under our legislation. It never was contemplated by the Constitution. It never has been exercised. The authority which has been delegated has been the power simply to make rules and regulations to govern executive authority, but the legislative authority has always been in the Congress of the United States. Always we have had in each branch of Congress a Committee on the District of Columbia, whose business it was to supervise the legislation of this District.

I wish to call the attention of the Senate to one fact, however, which was adverted to the other day; and that is, that this bill provides for a Department in the Government of the United States whose duties are confined to the District of Columbia. The proposition of my honorable friend from Indiana is that the head of that Department shall be elected. The bill provides that it shall be appointed by the President. Does anybody suppose that it is practicable for us to create a Department in the Government and then authorize the people to elect its head? The Constitution of the United States provides that the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate—shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers, and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

Here is a Department to be established. My honorable friend proposes to take that power away from the President of the United States and vest it in the people. In my judgment, that is too clear a proposition to argue. It cannot be done. You may change the structure of this bill, but you cannot fill the head of a Department of the Government of the United States by an election by the people. If the opinion of the Senate should be that these commissioners ought to be elected, then the bill could be changed, but that would change the whole structure of the bill.

After what has been said on a former occasion, I am not disposed to argue this question at length. Here is a bill that occupied a very large share of the attention of the select committee during the last recess of Congress. It has been carefully prepared. Of course the committee believe that it will furnish a good government for the District. I am perfectly conscious at this late day in the session that it is utterly useless for us to undertake to pass this bill unless, having settled some general principles in regard to it, the Senate are disposed to take the details of it much on confidence. Therefore I shall content myself with an expression of the Senate upon this question. If the Senate conclude to adopt the proposition of the Senator from Indiana, I shall feel that to be an end of this bill and an end of legislation on this subject for this session. I should regret it; I should deplore it; I should think it a very great misfortune. I should think it would be a very great outrage—if I may be allowed that word—upon the people of this District if we are to have no legislation on this subject at this session. The government that rests on the people of this District at the present time is intolerable. It is an oppression that ought not to rest upon them.

Mr. MORTON. Is that government elective?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is intolerable in that it provides no revenues; it is arbitrary to say no more, and the people of this District have a right to have a better arrangement of their affairs than they have at present, and therefore I hope that it will be found to be the sense of the Senate not to adopt this proposition of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, I fully concur in the hope expressed by the Senator from Maine that this bill will be taken substantially as it is. It is obvious that it is impossible to arrange the details of such a measure in the Senate. So far as I have been able to examine it, they have been carefully provided for in the bill, and the only question that remains is the question of the theory of the bill. Is that right? This amendment brings up that question directly. The question presented by this amendment is, Shall Congress in obedience to the Constitution exercise the power therein expressly delegated to Congress, or shall Congress shirk it in some way and turn it over to some irresponsible party or parties, for they must be irresponsible beings outside of the law and outside of the Constitution, and leave these people in the same condition of anarchy or worse than anarchy that has existed for a long time? The Constitution is very plain in this respect. It says that Congress shall have power—

To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings.

The authority delegated to Congress over this District is the same as is delegated over forts, arsenals, magazines, dock-yards, and other needful buildings; it is exclusive legislative authority. The Government of the United States by the machinery of the Constitution exercises its jurisdiction through officers of the United States and in no other way. And how are officers of the United States appointed? The Constitution provides how all officers of the United States shall be appointed. It provides in so many words. If Congress is to exercise its jurisdiction, it must exercise it in the way the Constitution points out. The Constitution has provided the mode of exercising that exclusive legislative jurisdiction. In forts and arsenals it is exercised by the Army and Navy officers and other officers of the United States, for nobody ever thought of electing officers in those places. This is a like jurisdiction, and the Constitution points out officers who shall be appointed. The President—

Shall nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law; but the Congress may by law vest the appointment of such inferior officers as they think proper in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments.

But it nowhere says that Congress may vest these appointments in the floating population of the District of Columbia. There is no such suggestion in the Constitution. If Congress is to exercise this exclusive power of governing the District which is conferred by the Constitution, it must do it in the constitutional way and no other; and whatever may be said in criticism of this, that it is against popular government, is said without proper and due reflection; it is said without having considered the circumstances of the case, for I do think that if there was any one subject where there seems to have been a foresight and a knowledge in advance of the circumstances that must occur, it was in the case of providing for the exclusive government of this District by Congress.

Do you say that this move is against negro suffrage? I deny it, and I think I may deny it without sustaining any charge of being myself opposed to negro suffrage, for I believe I have witnessed by my votes here that if there was any one thing I was in favor of, it was negro suffrage. I have taken my full share in the efforts, which have culminated in success, to confer suffrage on all citizens of the United States alike. This has no reference to the question of negro suffrage. It has reference simply to the question of whether we shall in pursuance of the Constitution exercise the power that is required of us to exercise and govern this District through officers of the United States appointed according to the Constitution.

Now suppose it was otherwise; suppose the Constitution had made provision for governing this District by a vote of the people here; it would be a lamentable thing unless you required a ten or twenty years' residence in order to be a voter. Most of the population here are temporary. Though they may stay here a few years, their main interest or business is elsewhere. They come here as clerks in the Departments or to attend to the business of the United States in other capacities. They are mere sojourners here; their interest is elsewhere; and when one administration goes out and another comes in there is a vast change of the controlling vote of the District. They are only staying here a few years on public business, and there always will be votes enough to control the destiny of the District in this transient population. There will always be a large transient population that are not citizens of the District, in the legitimate sense of the term, to control its destiny. Every experiment of popular government here has illustrated that most forcibly. The want of responsibility, the want of citizenship, the transitory character of the residence of those who lived here and exercised the power has been seen in the results every time it has been tried.

The committee who spent three or four months last session investigating the affairs of this District were forcibly impressed with the fact that the elections were controlled, I will not say by colored or white voters, but by the floating population who had not permanent interests in the city, and it was impossible to secure good government by that means. The theory of popular government is that it is to be exercised by the people who are citizens of the place they govern, who feel a common interest in the community, and does not apply to the great capital of a great nation filled with a floating population. I say it is a wise provision of the Constitution that here where the nation assembles together, where the great mass of the local voters are necessarily non-residents in fact or in spirit, non-residents for all the good purposes of citizenship, strangers in all their feelings to the District, the exclusive jurisdiction should be exercised by Congress to govern the capital. If the Constitution had provided otherwise it would have been a great mistake. It has provided for that. This bill goes on the theory not that negro suffrage is wrong, but that the Constitution is right. It matters not what may be said about State rights; advocating this bill is not an advocacy of State rights. I do not know what Senators may have suggested heretofore, but I say it is not an advocacy of State rights; it is an advocacy of exercising a federal power conferred by the Constitution. It is idle to say that there is any license in that for the States to exclude negroes or anybody else from suffrage. It is exercising a federal power here; and when a State undertakes to violate the Constitution of the United States by depriving negroes of suffrage, we shall be exercising a federal power to vindicate the Constitution when we provide that it shall not be violated in that regard by a State. No State shall deny to any person the right of suffrage on account of race or color. That would be exercising a federal power which I hope any Congress that may assemble will willingly and freely exercise if the occasion should arise. What we ask for here is a manly exercise of that same federal power that will be called upon to protect suffrage in the States, if any State dare violate it.

But this extending of suffrage to non-residents for purposes of political effect, in violation of the language of the Constitution and contrary to the best interests of this District, will be no argument against an unlawful exercise of power by States to exclude the negroes from suffrage. No; let us exercise the legitimate federal power that is here granted, give this city good government under the Constitution, as required by the Constitution; and that will benefit those who sojourn here for the purposes of the capital—for there would be few here if it were not for the purposes of the Government of the United States; that is what the people are here for. There would be no city here but for that. They are here on public business, as it were; at least the great controlling interest; and the Constitution requires that Congress shall exercise exclusive legislative jurisdiction here. If any State shall outrage human rights so far as to make an unjust discrimination against any class of citizens in the matter of suffrage, the Constitution has placed it in the power of Congress to interfere and redress the wrong. It is to Congress and to the Federal Constitution that we look for the protection of the right of suffrage. Let no advocate of the right of suffrage, let no advocate of human rights, go outside of the Constitution and ask that other experiments be now tried since we have ample protection within the Constitution; and it will not injure that other clause of the Constitution which provides for suffrage to exercise this wholesome power herein conferred and save this city from misrule, bankruptcy, anarchy, and disorder.

The modes hitherto adopted for the government of this city have been irregular, unjust, uncertain, extravagant, and absurd. You have conferred upon the people here a power which you had no right to confer under the Constitution. You have tried to set up an independent government here, and it has been every time thrown back upon Congress, and Congress has had to make the appropriations. They are made in an irregular manner, without sufficient safeguards; they are made without any legitimate machinery for their expenditure. They are extravagant because they are irregular; they are thrown out according to the caprice of Congress. Let us have a regular system under which these expenditures shall be made. Let us exercise a consistent authority here, as we do in the navy-yards, the dock-yards, and over public buildings, as the Constitution requires. Let what Congress appropriates come in the regular appropriation bills.

The people of the District of Columbia have a right to have a government that they can understand. I should like to know if any man can tell me during the last ten years where has been the responsibility. What kind of a government have we had in this District and who has been responsible for it? Take any man or set of men; take any form of government you please, and those concerned can demonstrate to their satisfaction at least, perhaps not to yours, that they had nothing to do with it. The responsibility has been lodged nowhere. It has been governed by irresponsible bodies, organized in an irresponsible way, and if anything goes wrong everybody finds fault. The fault has been in your laws because they were uncertain. Let that fault be remedied; let Congress exercise its legitimate functions.

This bill has not been hastily prepared. The committee who made the investigation last session saw enough to see that that could not be done; that it would take time to digest such a measure; and they recommended to each House the propriety of appointing a joint committee who should take a whole recess of Congress to investigate this subject and should present a plan for the government of this District. That work has been performed—performed by men of acknowledged capacity, men of great experience—and those men have devoted the most of a year to this work. They have presented a system of government that has the merit of being plain, and, as I believe, has the merit of being a better government than was ever devised for this city, or perhaps for almost any city in the United States; a system of government that will bring order out of chaos; a system of government that is in harmony with the Constitution; a system of government that has its checks and balances; such a system of government, that when the United States appropriate money they will be enabled to know by whom it is to be expended, for what purposes it is to be expended; a system of government that may be read by the people and understood; a system of government of law which the people, whether they are sojourners here or residents here, are entitled to have. To say that we will not have this, but will go on further in the old irregular manner; that we will plunge this people in misery and despair; that we will confiscate their property by placing the power in irresponsible hands, and then investigate what has been done, and then make further appropriations, and then make further investigations as to what is done with the money, and then appropriate again, and then investigate again, and thus keep up this excitement over the city is to say that we will try all sorts of experiments because here we can try experiments.

Mr. MORTON. Allow me to ask a question?

Mr. STEWART. Any question.

Mr. MORTON. I ask whether the troubles the Senator refers to have grown out of elected or appointed governments?

Mr. STEWART. They have grown out of irregular, ill-digested, absurd, contradictory laws, attempting to carry water on both shoulders, attempting to make a government of the people by the people and through the people where the Constitution provided that Congress should exercise exclusive jurisdiction.

Mr. MORTON. Does the Senator call that an answer?

Mr. STEWART. I call that an answer. I think it is a pretty satisfactory answer. You had some men appointed and you gave them certain powers, and then you gave those same powers to other men who were elected. You mixed up the powers. Take the bill you had, and you will find that here was a parade of power given to men who were appointed, and then the same powers were taken away by a Legislature who were elected. Then you find that those men who were appointed had to go to the Legislature; they had to have elections, and they had to get appropriations from the Legislature, and the Legislature say they are not responsible because they did not have the power but the board of public works had the power, when in fact the same power was given to everybody that came along. Everybody that came along had power to do almost anything under this government.

Then the Senator asks me who did the harm. That is the very thing I say we cannot find out. Every man in the town had supreme power to do almost anything under that form of government. The question is who was responsible. The Senator from Indiana asks me who did it. That is the very question we have been asking the last ten years—who did it. Anybody that came along did it, because anybody had the power to do it under your law. That is the way it was. There has been nobody appointed, nobody elected with any definite or defined powers. It has been a hotch-potch of absurdities and inconsistencies. The committee of which I was a member studied it hard for three months, and sometimes we would think "here is a man who has committed the greatest offense in the world, who has violated all law and everything else," but we found that somebody else was chargeable with the powers he exercised, and presently we found he was exercising those powers within the law somewhere, it was so mixed up. He would be asked "under what authority are you doing all this?" This power was given to somebody else and you were forbidden to do it. "O!" the reply would be, "here is another law authorizing me to do it," and so it was. I think as a model of uncertainty, as a model of contradictions, as a labyrinth of involved inconsistencies, this District government passes anything that can be described. There is no language that can describe it. In answer to the question where the responsibility is, who is to blame for it, I say the thing seems to have been diffused so that there should not be any responsibility anywhere in particular but over the country generally so that there could be a big investigation, lots of things in the newspapers, and no definite responsibility.

I want to see that stopped. I want to see one set of laws and those certain. I do not want a dozen different kinds of laws on the same subject and all conflicting. You notice here there are a dozen committees coming in and passing laws for the District of Columbia; one comes in and gets a bill through in the morning hour, and another does, and they drop in from every direction, and they are not indexed, so that nobody knows where they are; they do not fit when you get the volume together. There are a dozen governments inside of governments, and boards and officers of all descriptions in every nook and corner. You find a levy board, a water board, an assessment board, an education board, and every other kind of board—thirty or forty of them all mixed up—all sorts of boards, all sorts of securities issued by different parties.

Mr. WRIGHT. I want to ask one question.

Mr. STEWART. Very well.

Mr. WRIGHT. Will the Senator tell me how many boards are provided for in this bill?

Mr. STEWART. I have not observed that there was the same duty devolving on any two boards. I have not counted the number here.

Mr. WRIGHT. You do not know?

Mr. STEWART. I do not know.

Mr. SARGENT. Just six of them.

Mr. CONKLING. This bill is not to be measured by board measure. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEWART. In all seriousness, I do not suppose there was ever anything devised by the ingenuity of man so well calculated for subsequent investigations as the former governments of the District of Columbia have been. I can see very well when one officer has a particular duty charged on him and a dozen other officers are charged with the same duty, he should want the thing investigated. I can see very well when a dozen different parties are issuing different securities and they are depreciating each other's securities, why some of them should want the rest investigated; particularly if one happened to be honest in what he had done, he would want the rest investigated. I can see very well that where everybody is exercising all sorts of authority under different statutes passed by Congress or passed by the local authorities, they should become dissatisfied and quarrel. I can well see how that was. There is a disposition to complain any way in this country, and if you mix up things in that shape you will have more or less trouble.

As I said in the beginning, the people in this District, although they be mere sojourners here, have a right as American citizens to be governed by law; they have a right to have that law sufficiently certain that it can be understood; they have a right that that law shall be passed by a body of men having authority to pass laws; they have a right to the protection of the Constitution of the United States although they are in the District of Columbia. As citizens of the United States, they have a right to the protection of the laws of the United States, which has been denied to them here. Their property has been taken without the sanction of law; their property has been injured without the sanction of law. They have not been governed by a system of laws. They have been governed by caprice; they have been governed by the neglect of Congress and the failure of Congress to do its legitimate duty; and the result has been bad. I do not charge that the people of this District are worse than other people. There are many good people here. A large majority of the people of this District are good people. I do not pretend to say that the sojourners here are bad people. They are simply a floating population without that interest in the District which qualifies them to govern it. So thought the framers of the Constitution, and so experience has taught us. The framers of the Constitution were right when they thought that the transitory population which would gather about the national capital would not be such a people as should exercise self-government at the national capital, but that it was necessary for governmental purposes that the national capital should be governed and controlled under and by the Congress of the United States here assembled.

There were various reasons which led to that result originally. If there had been no reasons for interfering with the sitting of Congress in Pennsylvania, if there had been no outside reasons other than the general principle that here the people would be transitory and collected on business of the Government, and would not be in a condition to govern themselves, that would have been sufficient to justify this grant of power to Congress; but there were other reasons. This reason, that there was here nobody responsible for anything, that it was a floating population, is the reason which appeals to us now. It is the reason which has given us such bad fruit for the last ten years. It has nothing to do with negro suffrage. The best way to protect negro suffrage is to respect the Constitution and vindicate it. The negro need not fear for his rights so long as that instrument is protected inviolate. So long as Congress exercises the rights therein conferred he is safe. But when Congress becomes cowardly, when it fails to exercise its function here and everywhere, then he may apprehend danger, then the negro is lost, then the weak are lost, then free government is lost, then liberty is lost. But there is no danger to equal suffrage so long as Congress exercises the legitimate powers conferred by the Constitution; and this is one. The negro has been invoked as a reason why Congress shall not assert this legitimate power conferred upon it to give good government to the District of Columbia and set an example to the States and other cities of good government. He is interested that we should have a model government here; he is interested in this for the good name of Congress; he is interested in this for the respect that should be paid to Congress. Every citizen of the United States is interested that this shall be a model government as the founders of the Republic intended. All are interested in the legitimate exercise of this constitutional authority; and if Congress now does its duty in this respect, every citizen may expect that it will do its duty when the question of violations of the fifteenth amendment or the fourteenth amendment shall come up. It will be a fresh guarantee that Congress is ready to exercise the legitimate functions devolved upon it; that no claim, that no false pretenses of popular right will deter Congress from the exercise of its legitimate functions. That is important. It is important right here and now that the example shall be set that we obey the Constitution; that we respect it here at the national capital; that to the Constitution we look for good government; that to the Constitution we look for the protection of the negro in his right of suffrage, not to any sham arrangement outside of the Constitution which brings disorder and confusion.

I hope this bill will pass and pass in the shape that it comes from the hands of the committee. It is impossible for the details to be arranged here. They have been carefully considered by able men. Of one thing I am certain, that it is on the theory of the Constitution, on the theory of justice, manhood, and right, and will give us a national capital, if it be carried through, of which none need be ashamed and of which everybody will be proud.

Mr. SARGENT. Mr. President, it seems to me that if this bill or any bill in reference to the government of the District is to pass Congress, it must be this afternoon. I think this will be the last occasion the Senator having charge of this bill will be able to get the ear of the Senate. Public business is pressing upon us from all directions. It is with very great difficulty indeed that this small quota in this afternoon has been obtained for this bill. Thinking, as I said this morning when urging that the Senator from Maine might be heard upon the bill, that it is life or death to this District, that if some form of government is not passed we have mere chaos and that any government which they have expires by limitation about the same time that Congress itself expires—

Mr. ALLISON. Will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. SARGENT. After I have finished my sentence. I say that so believing, I do not intend to occupy the time of the Senate by a speech. I simply want to state why I do not press the amendment which I offered to the Senate. I will now yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. I did not desire to interrupt the Senator in the midst of a sentence and did not understand that I was doing so. I have heard him say twice to-day that this District government expires with the end of this session unless a new government is provided. I do not so understand the existing law. As a matter of course, if this bill fails it will be the duty of Congress to provide for the levying of taxes to carry on the District government for the next year, or make appropriations. I do not understand that the government expires.

Mr. SARGENT. I do not understand that the three commissioners who are provided for in the hasty bill which we passed at the last session, and which against hope I opposed and desired to perfect, go out of office. We certainly are to pay their salaries. But I do understand that they are stripped of every attribute which can make government in this District effectual; and that is just what I mean, and the Senator assents. I mean to say that there is no power to levy or collect any tax here. If these commissioners now existing cannot levy taxes, they cannot keep your school-masters and school-mistresses at work in your schools; they cannot repair the hose of your fire department, or pay the officers or the men who attend the fires; the streets cannot be cleaned; the board of health cannot pursue its functions; there is not a single department of government in this District that can be carried on any more than a corpse lacking life-blood can be made to stand erect and walk and think and act as a human being. You simply have no life to your government. You have a mere skeleton and nothing else. So believing, I do not want to take this most precious time of the Senate this afternoon in discussing the question.

I agree most thoroughly with the Senator from Indiana upon the impropriety of setting an example in this District which may be quoted throughout the South as an evidence that we have abandoned the principle of negro suffrage. I believe, however, that this bill can be passed and that still be avoided. We can provide for the election of a Delegate to the lower House of Congress by the general suffrage of the District, white and black. We can recognize the principle as fully as is necessary and in a constitutional form and avoid that question, and I trust and I believe that the Senator who has this bill in charge, when I shall offer an amendment for the election of a Delegate by the people of this District, the citizens here residing, black and white, will accept that amendment. I desire to have an expression of opinion on that matter, because it will control my vote on the other proposition.

The substitute for this bill which I introduced the other day has been received with very considerable favor by the people of this District; that is to say, I have received numerous petitions, and other Senators have received some, which have been read at the Clerk's desk, in favor of that substitute. I myself think it is a better bill; I think it is simpler. My impression on the whole is that it would be cheaper than the present bill. But this bill is so infinitely better than nothing that I am in favor of this bill, and as long as there is a hope to do something I will not antagonize it even by what I think to be my better bill. So thinking, so believing, I have thus explained the reason for my action and will not press myself further on the attention of the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire to occupy the attention of the Senate for a moment, and I do it chiefly because I certainly differ with the Senator from California as to the effect upon this District should any bill fail to become a law having reference to its reorganization. Every law in this District that is in force to-day will continue in force, save only the laws levying taxes, if this bill fails or if any bill fails. All the machinery of the District government goes on, provided we levy taxes or make appropriations to carry it on. If this bill is passed, this government cannot be carried on under it unless in addition to it we make appropriations for that purpose. This bill contemplates a tax of 2 per cent. upon the taxable property of this city. Every Senator knows that 2 per cent. upon the taxable property of this city will not carry on the machinery of this government as proposed in this bill or as it exists now; so that legislation with reference to the District of Columbia is as imperative upon us as it is with regard to any other question; and I do not regard it as necessary that we should put this bill through in haste this afternoon, without amendment and without consideration, as the Senator from California says we did the bill of the last session.

Mr. SARGENT. And on the Senator's urgency.

Mr. ALLISON. I only desire that this bill shall be fairly considered. I am as anxious as any Senator is that we should provide something in the way of a government for the District of Columbia. I believe that it is our duty to preserve the principle of suffrage in this District in some form, either in the form proposed by the Senator from Indiana or in some other form. I am not quite prepared to vote for his amendment to this bill if the remainder of the machinery of the bill is to be carried out, because I would not be willing for one to transfer all the machinery of this government to the people of this District while we provide all the means for carrying it on save and except the 2 per cent. provided by way of taxation; because this bill does contemplate that the Government of the United States shall provide at least one-half of the expenses that are to be incurred in this District; and if this bill passes, in my judgment, it will require more than one-half of all the expenses of this District government to be paid out of the pockets of the people of the United States. Therefore, if this bill is to pass, it ought to be carefully considered with reference to that subject. If I understand it correctly, it also provides a machinery by which the debts of this District are to be assumed substantially by the Government of the United States. If that is a proper thing to do, let us do it, but let us do it deliberately. We have already provided by the bill which was passed in haste at the last session, without due consideration, for an assumption of the interest upon ten millions of this District debt. This bill now provides that we shall not only take care of the interest upon that ten million, but that we become responsible for the principal and the interest of the whole debt of the District of Columbia, amounting now, in my judgment, to from eighteen to twenty or twenty-one million dollars. I say, then, I am not willing to vote now for the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana, which places the responsibility upon the Government of the United States and the machinery in the hands of the people of this District, but I desire, as he desires, to preserve in some form the principle of suffrage in this District. We propose to levy taxes upon them here. If we levy taxes upon them, let us give them some representation in the disposition and expenditure of these taxes.

This bill proposes to levy a tax of $2,000,000 in round numbers upon the people of this District. Shall we levy this tax upon them for expenditures wholly or nearly wholly of a municipal character, and not allow them any representation in the expenditure of the money, solely upon the theory that Congress shall exercise exclusive legislation in this District? For one I am not quite ready to do this; but I do desire that some principle of local representation shall be preserved in this bill, coupled, as I believe it ought to be, with governmental control in the hands of the Congress of the United States.

This is all I desire to say in reference to the bill now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MORTON. Before the vote is taken I desire to say a few words in reply to the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Nevada; and first in regard to the constitutional question.

For seventy-five years the Government of the United States has allowed the people of this District to elect a local self-government, and nobody understood that it was a gross violation of the Constitution of the United States. Now it has been discovered that this was a violation of the Constitution of the United States. I believe in the discovery of new mines; I believe in the discovery of new islands; I believe in the discovery of new inventions and methods of doing things; but I do not believe in the discovery of new constitutional law. The idea now of finding out for the first time at the end of a local self-government of seventy-five years that Congress had no power to confer upon the people of this District local self-government, to elect representatives to a city council or a territorial legislature, if you please to call it so, I say that to discover it now for the first time does seem to me to be rather absurd.

The Constitution says that Congress shall have exclusive legislation over this District. What is meant by the word "exclusive?" It was to exclude any right of interference on the part of the States ceding this territory for a seat of government. It was provided that a district not exceeding ten miles square might be ceded to the Government for a capital, and it was intended to exclude the States ceding that territory from any right to interfere with that district. The word "exclusive" is used in that sense; and no man can read the history of that clause without knowing that that is what is meant by it. The power to legislate was given to Congress, but from the first it was understood that that power might be conferred upon the people of the District in some form, and for seventy-five years it has been so conferred and no great constitutional lawyer discovered that it was a violation of the Constitution of the United States!

Now, Mr. President, let us look for a moment a little further:

Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property of the United States.

Congress shall have the power to do it, and yet from the first that power has been delegated. From the very first the people of the Territories have been allowed themselves to make these "needful rules and regulations" in the language of the Constitution. It has been inconsistent with our theory of government to let the people here, let the people in the Territories govern themselves in all local affairs.

Enough, Mr. President, on that subject. My friend from Maine says that we cannot delegate to the people of this District the power to elect the head of a Department. He says this bill erects this District into a Department of the Government of the United States, and that Department being one of the Executive Departments, the chiefs must be appointed by the President. That is the argument. I want my friend to think of that argument. When my friend calls this District a Department within the meaning of the Constitution, it seems to me he is making a confusion of terms. What do we understand by a Department in the Constitution? We mean the Department of State, the Department of the Treasury, the Department of the Interior; we mean those great divisions of the executive power; and nobody ever thought of calling the government of a District or of a Territory a Department in that sense. All civilized governments have departments; they have ministries; a ministry of the interior, a ministry of justice, a ministry of war, or a secretary of state; and our Government was created with a view of having Executive Departments like all other governments. Of course, the head of such a Department, being a mere servant of the President, carrying out simply executive power, is to be appointed by the President. Does my friend think that it makes any difference to call this District government a Department? We have heard of that celebrated physician who said if he could throw the patient into fits, he could cure the fit. Does my friend think now that all he has to do is to call this a Department, and that takes from us the power to give the people the right to govern themselves in a local way?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What is the distinction between this Department and the Department of the Interior?

Mr. MORTON. The Department of the Interior was contemplated by the Constitution. The Department of the Treasury was contemplated by the Constitution. The Constitution does not create any departments, but it speaks of them, and we understand from analogy to the British constitution, to the constitution of every government, that the departments of the government are those subdivisions of the executive power by which that government is to be carried on.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. As there is no definite contemplation in the Constitution and no definite number of Departments, clearly Congress can create as many Departments as it chooses.

Mr. MORTON. Let me read from the Constitution:

The President shall be Commander-in-Chief of the Army and Navy of the United States, and of the militia of the several States, when called into the actual service of the United States; he may require the opinion, in writing, of the principal officer in each of the Executive Departments, upon any subject relating to the duties of their respective offices, and he shall have power to grant reprieves and pardons for offenses against the United States, except in cases of impeachment.

The President has the right to take the opinion of any head of a Department. In other words, the heads of all the Departments go into the Cabinet, they compose the Cabinet. That has been our understanding of the Constitution from the first. Now, are these commissioners to go into the Cabinet? If they are heads of a Department they ought to go into the Cabinet, and under the general rule they must. Does my friend propose to put these gentlemen into the Cabinet?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No.

Mr. MORTON. But if they are heads of a Department, it is contemplated by the Constitution that they compose a part of the Cabinet.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Does my honorable friend really think that is so?

Mr. MORTON. Certainly it is so.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. How does it happen that the head of the Department of Agriculture has not sat in the Cabinet yet?

Mr. MORTON. I will say one word in regard to that. I believe the Department of Agriculture is called a Department. I do not know whether it is called a Department or a Bureau, but it is really a Bureau of this Government, as all know.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. It is a Department by name.

Mr. MORTON. If it is a Department such as is contemplated by the Constitution, then the Constitution does contemplate that its head shall be a member of the Cabinet. The theory of our Constitution is that the President shall have certain advisers, and that those who are at the head of the different subdivisions of the executive power shall be his advisers.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Now I will ask my honorable friend if he is really serious in arguing to the Senate that the Constitution of the United States contemplated a cabinet of advisers to the President? If so, I should like to have the language pointed out.

Mr. MORTON. The word "cabinet," I think, is not in the Constitution.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. No; nor was it within the theory of the Government that there was to be a council to the President in any sense whatever, and in no sense whatever is there any such thing as a cabinet council for the President or anything of the kind, either by the nature of the case or by the powers devolved on the heads of Departments.

Mr. MORTON. I rather think the Constitution does contemplate what we call a Cabinet. I think that in every form of government where there is an executive head and there is a constitution, the executive power is subdivided, one man taking charge of the department of justice, another of the treasury, another of the state, and that in all governments those men do constitute the advisers of the Crown or of the President, if the chief executive is called a president; and that is what is contemplated by our Constitution, and it has been carried from the very first day the Government was organized. Washington had his Cabinet; it was called a Cabinet, composed of the heads of the Departments, and we have got one now. The Departments mentioned in the Constitution are such Departments as I have described and no others. When you make a Department out of the District of Columbia or out of the Territory of Utah, that is simply a confusion of terms, and it is not the "Department" contemplated by the Constitution of the United States. If so, it would be a good thing to call Utah a Department, and thus take all power away from the Mormons and vest it in the President of the United States. Can we do that by simply organizing Utah as a Department, and in that way take away from the people any power to elect?

Enough, Mr. President, on the head of "the Department." Calling this a Department or calling it a District government makes no difference in the substance of the thing. Every argument offered by the Senator from Nevada against suffrage in this District is good against suffrage everywhere. It is just as good against suffrage in Indiana as it is in the city of Washington. If suffrage is unsafe here, it is just as unsafe in South Carolina or in Mississippi. Every argument that has been or can be offered against suffrage here is good against suffrage everywhere, and a man who believes that suffrage cannot be trusted in this District because the people are ignorant or selfish or corrupt, ought to be in favor of destroying it everywhere, and of having despotism at once. He does not believe in the capacity of the people to govern themselves. Now I believe that the people in this District, according to their numbers, are just as capable as are the people elsewhere, and hence I will accord to them, so far as I can, that right of self-government, "taxation with representation," and let them take care of their own affairs. They understand their affairs better than anybody else understands them for them, and I would extend to them the same right I would to the people in Indiana or any State or Territory.

Mr. President, there is one little sham in this bill. Of course my friend does not so intend it, but I call attention to it. Turn to the one hundred and twenty-sixth page, and you will there find a provision for a board of education of seven members, of whom three shall be elected by the people, and all the machinery of an election is provided for in the bill already, and all you have to do is to extend that to the commissioners.

The people are to elect three members of the board of education and four members are to be appointed. Does my friend think that recognizes suffrage?

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Three members appointed and one ex officio.

Mr. MORTON. But he is appointed also. The ex officio member is appointed also, and three members are appointed directly, and then three are to be elected by the people. Does my friend think that recognizes suffrage? That is a mere tub thrown to the whale. We are to have all the expense of an election, all the machinery provided to do what? To elect a minority of the board of education, while so far as taxation is concerned and all the real power in this District, it is put into the hands of men who are to be appointed by the President of the United States.

My friend from California says that he will be satisfied with the election of a Delegate. I will not be. This District ought to have a Delegate in Congress. It has a good one now and an able one, but he has no power in the world; he cannot vote; he is a mere adviser. That is all. He can go and talk to the President about this, or he can go into the House of Representatives and give his opinion about that; but he is utterly devoid of power. Does it recognize suffrage to create a Delegate who has no power, while all the power is taken from the people and given to three men who are to be appointed? I have no doubt the President will exercise that power conscientiously; but, as I said before, I do not believe in appointed governments; I do not believe in irresponsible governments. I believe that safety for this people consists in election and not in appointment.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will the Senator allow me to ask him one question on that point of suffrage?

Mr. MORTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Assuming the state of the case to be somewhat as stated by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] a few moments ago, that by this bill the Congress of the United States assumes all the responsibility of an indebtedness ranging from eighteen to twenty-one million dollars, that we become responsible on this theory for all this debt, it is our business to provide a million annually for interest. We put this machinery in operation, we levy a tax on the people, and we stand behind this government and behind all its responsibilities and behind all its liabilities; and then the Senator steps in and says, "You have all these responsibilities, but the people shall administer the government through agents of their own." Does my friend think that is a reasonable proposition for a Government that has the responsibility which is presumed to be in this bill? I ask anybody if that is a reasonable proposition; provide a local government, stand behind all its liabilities and responsibilities, as in the nature of the case we are—we have indorsed ten millions of their bonds now and the rest of them we must—and then the Senator from Indiana, as the advocate of suffrage in this District, comes in and says "that is all right, but the people here must administer it." That is what it comes to.

Mr. MORTON. I beg leave to say to my friend from Maine that I have made no such statement.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I do not say you did; but that is the logic of it.

Mr. MORTON. I submit to my friend that it is not the logic of it. There is a local self-government here appertaining to their local affairs which the people here have had for seventy-five years. We can deal with that debt without providing for appointing three commissioners. These three commissioners to be appointed by the President are not to deal with that debt. We have got to deal with it directly. It is said we have already indorsed $10,000,000 of the bonds. I expect we have got to shoulder that whole debt, and how? Why is it that Congress will now be called upon before the country to shoulder the whole debt? Because it was created by a government appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate, in which the people of the District of Columbia had no voice, and therefore the legal and the moral liability for that debt comes home to the Government of the United States. If that had been a debt created by the people of this District, those who loaned the money would have been advised of that fact, and perhaps they would not have loaned it, or they would first have looked to the security. But we took the government upon ourselves; we made an appointed government, and that board of public works has made an expenditure it is said of—I do not know how much—but ten or twenty millions, and that debt was created by a government which we made, irresponsible to the people of the District, not elected by them, not consulting them, imposed upon them without their consent and without their ability to resist it. As that is the fact, therefore the legal and the moral responsibility is brought home to this Government to take care of that debt. That thing is to be continued. No, Mr. President, there is a very broad distinction between taking care of the property of this District and providing for that debt and the government of the District in its local and domestic affairs, like the government of a people of a Territory.

Mr. President, I was somewhat startled by the answer of my friend from Nevada. When he depicted the evils of suffrage in this District, I asked him this question: "Have the troubles in this District come from elected government or from appointed government?" With the aid of the Senator from New York, I believe, he answered both; there was a terrible conflict, and he finally made this debt and all of the troubles in this District come out of a mere conflict of authority; that here was an elected government contending for the power and an appointed government contending for the power, and out of that conflict and confusion grew this debt and all the irregularities in this District! That was the answer. Was he right or was he wrong? It seems to me that those who understand the affairs of this District know that he was wrong.

The Senator said that one result of this conflict of authority in the late District government was that there had been numerous investigations, and that was to be continued. I rather inferred that he wanted a government which could not be investigated, which would not be investigated. Mr. President, the safest form of government is one that is responsible every year or every two or three years to the people over which that government exercises power; and I do not care how numerous, I do not care how ignorant, that constituency may be, I would rather trust that government than trust an appointed government that is not responsible at all.

It was said the old government was cumbersome. I have heard it said that this proposed government is cumbersome. If this is a simple government to be created now, it ought to be contained in a smaller number than two hundred pages. There is a book that very few men have ever had the courage to read. [Holding up the bill.] Most of the members of this body do not know this day what is in this book. But it is said to be a very simple form of government and to take away the old and cumbersome system that formerly existed. If I understand it, it is the most complex government that this District has ever had, and in many respects modeled upon the government of New York and Philadelphia and other large cities, containing provisions which are not adapted to this city and are not required here. A much simpler form of government would be a great deal better, from what I am informed.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Will not the honorable Senator specify some of these?

Mr. MORTON. Life is too short to go through that book and understand it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. A little caution is necessary.

Mr. MORTON. It is said that the man who wrote it has read it, and that is as far as anybody has ever gone or I suppose anybody else will ever go.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What is that remark?

Mr. MORTON. It is said that the man who wrote it has read it and he is the only man. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. The Senator evidently knows nothing about it. That is clear.

Mr. MORTON. I know enough about it to know that I cannot vote for it, and that it ought not to be passed in this body.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Certainly the Senator has asseverated that three or four times over, and I think he will stick to that, as I would if I was in his place. But to show how little he knows about it, let me refer to one fact. He talks about eighteen or twenty million dollars of debt created by a board appointed by the President, and he says that that is our difficulty and that our responsibility comes from that. The fact about it is that this exercise of the elective franchise which my friend is a stickler for here put us in for four millions of that debt on a popular vote. That is what they did, and Congress will have to foot it, of course.

Mr. President, I desire a vote more than anything else on this subject, to test the sense of the Senate on the proposition of the Senator from Indiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. THURMAN. I do not wish to occupy much of the time of the Senate in discussing the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana, because on a previous day I expressed as fully as I thought to be necessary the reasons why I am opposed to that amendment; and although I have listened with attention to what has fallen from the Senator from Indiana to-day, or at least the greater part of it, I have heard from him nothing that seems to me to be an answer to the reasons which I then adduced for opposing his amendment.

There are some things that are very plain in this connection. One is, that there can exist in this District no absolute right of self-government so long as the Constitution of the United States remains what it is. There is no man more attached to home rule or local self-government than I am. I have spoken for it, voted for it, written for it, done all I could to maintain it ever since I had a voice in politics. But in respect to this District the Constitution is as explicit as any language can possibly be. It provides that Congress shall have power—

To exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, over such district (not exceeding ten miles square) as may, by cession of particular States, and the acceptance of Congress, become the seat of the Government of the United States, and to exercise like authority over all places purchased by the consent of the Legislature of the State in which the same shall be, for the erection of forts, magazines, arsenals, dock-yards, and other needful buildings.

So that the exclusive power of legislation of Congress over the District of Columbia is precisely the same as it is over every fortress belonging to the Government. It is precisely the same here as it is in Fort Lafayette or in Fortress Monroe. It is therefore perfectly impossible, so long as this Constitution shall remain, that the inhabitants of the District of Columbia, any more than the persons domiciled in Fortress Monroe or Fort Lafayette, can have an absolute right of self-government. Nothing can be clearer than that; and the people who have come into this District and settled here, and the ancestors of those who were born here, came into the District and settled here with the full knowledge that they were being compelled to relinquish all claim to an absolute right of self-government.

The reasons for this provision are very manifest. No one would pretend for a moment that there ought to be anything having the semblance of authority within any of the fortresses of the United States that could set itself up against or in any way obstruct the action of the Government of the United States; and in the same way no one can with reason pretend that there ought to be within the District of Columbia any organization that might array itself in opposition to the Federal Government.

I took occasion to call the attention of the Senate, when I spoke on this question before, to what might have been the danger in this District if there had been such a municipal government here as once existed in Paris, and which proved too strong for the throne of France and too strong for the French constitution. It never was intended that there should be any such organized power here, and hence the power of Congress is exclusive, and the only duty we have to perform is to ascertain and then to ordain that government which will be best for the people here and will be best and safest for the Government of the Republic. That is what we have to do.

But the Senator from Indiana does not answer this. He goes off into a disquisition on the merits of suffrage, as if it was necessary in the American Congress to speak in behalf of suffrage; as if all our institutions were not founded upon suffrage; as if it was necessary at this late day to maintain that a republican form of government is that which is best for the people of the United States. That has nothing whatsoever to do with the question now before the Senate.

It is true the Senator seemed to take me to task for saying that the people of the District of Columbia have no natural right to vote. I should like the Senator to show me where there are any people who have a natural right to vote. I said the people here had no natural right to vote. I said that under the Constitution of the United States which vests in Congress the power of exclusive legislation here the idea that they could have a natural right to vote was wholly inadmissible. But if the Senator thinks that anything can be made out of that I wish him to explain—for he is a master of language—how the right to vote is a natural right. If it is a natural right, why do not women exercise it? If it is a natural right, why do not all people who have arrived at the age of discretion, though not twenty-one years old, exercise it? If it is a natural right, why does not every person domiciled in the United States exercise it? If it is a natural right, why do not your soldiers and your sailors in the Army and the Navy exercise it? Nay, sir, if it is a natural right, why is it not exercised the whole world over? A natural right is one derived from nature, and nature is the same the world over. Her laws embrace the whole globe and every human being upon it. If therefore this right is a right derived from a law of nature, I want to know how it is that the Senator from Indiana does not give it to women and to minors, to non-naturalized persons, and why he does not enter on a crusade to overturn all the governments of the earth in order to establish this law of nature. No, Mr. President, that kind of reasoning will not do.

What objection is it that the Senator makes to the first section of this bill? That it will not give this District a good government, or that if his amendment be adopted the government he proposes will be better? If he has advanced any argument to maintain such a proposition as that, I have not heard it. But his argument is addressed to the fears of Senators; he seeks to alarm the republican Senators on this floor by telling them that if they abolish suffrage in the District they will be held up all through the United States as opposed to the suffrage of the colored people. He appeals to their fears; he appeals to their party feelings; he appeals to their party prejudices and to their party interests, instead of discussing whether the frame of government proposed by this bill is that best suited to the needs of the people of the District and best for the interests of the Republic itself.

He asks, have we not the right to delegate some power to these people? May we not create municipal governments? For myself I say we may. I said it in the previous discussion, and I say it again. But I say also that we are not bound to do it; and if we can find a better form of government we ought not to do it. I repeat what I said on a previous occasion: I do not assert that a municipal government might not be formed in this District which would be better than the frame of government proposed by this bill; and if the Senator from Indiana will prepare such a frame of government for the District he shall have my support for it with all my heart. But it is not by striking out this provision in the first section of the bill in respect to the commissioners and electing them by a vote at large that he will make a better municipal government than that proposed by the bill.

In further illustration of our right to ordain a municipal government here, the Senator alludes to the Territories and says, if I understand him, that our power over the Territories is derived from that clause of the Constitution which declares that—

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory and other property belonging to the United States.

The Senator seems to think that it is under that clause in the Constitution that we create territorial governments. He must permit me to say to him that he never was more mistaken in his life; that it is not at all under that clause of the Constitution that territorial governments are created and powers delegated to the people in the Territories as voters and office-holders in the governments thus ordained.

This clause of the Constitution relates simply to the disposition of property and its regulation:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

It is a power to regulate the sale and disposition of the public lands; it is a power to regulate the sale and disposition of any other kind of property belonging to the United States. It is not the clause of the Constitution under which Congress ordains territorial governments at all. So that sheds no light on the subject. If the Senator wishes to go to the provision in the Constitution that bears on it, let him go to the very one in hand, that which provides for exclusive legislation by Congress, and let him ask himself the question whether it would be competent for Congress to ordain a municipal government for Fortress Monroe or for Fort Lafayette. Do not let him refer to this provision of the Constitution, which merely regulates the sale and disposition or safe-keeping of the public property, and which has nothing whatsoever to do with the ordaining of a territorial form of government.

Mr. President, I have said, I believe, all that I need to say now, and I should not have said this much but to recall to the minds of Senators the fact that in acting on this bill we are not at all deciding any question in respect to the general principle of local self-government or in respect to the general principle of suffrage. This bill does not go beyond the District of Columbia; it has nothing to do directly or indirectly with suffrage in the States; and there is no necessity therefore for alarming any man who votes for this bill by the apprehension that he is to be put down as an enemy of home rule or an enemy of free and unrestricted suffrage.

This bill in some respects does not meet my approval, but we have not reached that place yet in the bill to which I think there are objections. So far as this particular clause is concerned, which is now under consideration, while I do not say it is the very best government that could be framed, I say that for the time being it is the best that is likely to be adopted.

Mr. SARGENT. I wish to give notice to the Senate that after the vote shall have been taken upon this proposition I will ask to submit the amendment which I now send to the desk to be read by the Secretary.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment will be read. Mr. THURMAN. I intended before I sat down to call the attention of the Senate to a historical fact.

Mr. SARGENT. Wait until my amendment is read.

Mr. THURMAN. I only want to read a few sentences. I have spoken of the necessity of the exclusive power of legislation by Congress over this District, and that there should be no organization here in opposition to it or that might be in opposition to it, that would not be under the control of Congress. Speaking of this provision in the Constitution, Story says in his Commentaries:

It is not improbable that an occurrence at the very close of the revolutionary war had a great effect in introducing this provision into the Constitution. At the period alluded to, the Congress then sitting at Philadelphia was surrounded and insulted by a small but insolent body of mutineers of the Continental Army. Congress applied to the executive authority of Pennsylvania for defense; but under the ill-conceived constitution of the State at that time the executive power was vested in a council, consisting of thirteen members, and they possessed or exhibited so little energy and such apparent intimidation, that Congress indignantly removed to New Jersey, whose inhabitants welcomed them with promises of defending them. Congress remained for some time at Princeton without being again insulted till, for the sake of greater convenience, they adjourned to Annapolis. The general dissatisfaction with the proceedings of Pennsylvania and the degrading spectacle of a fugitive Congress were sufficiently striking to produce this remedy. Indeed, if such a lesson could have been lost upon the people, it would have been as humiliating to their intelligence as it would have been offensive to their honor. (2 Story on the Constitution, section 1219.)

Mr. SARGENT. I ask now that the amendment which I shall propose be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 126, after line 1, the proposed amendment is to insert—

There shall be elected by written or printed ballot in said District by the duly registered and qualified voters thereof, on the first Tuesday following the first Monday of June, in the year 1875, and on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, in the year 1876, and on every such Tuesday in November in each alternate year thereafter, one person to be a Delegate to represent said District in Congress for the term of two years from the 1st day of the then next December. Each legal voter may cast for said Delegate one ballot, on which there shall be but one name, once written or printed; and the person having the largest number of ballots shall be, and be declared, elected.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President—

Mr. PRATT. If my friend from Iowa has taken the floor, as I understand he has, with a view of speaking upon the pending question, I ask him to give way for a motion that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have no objection to that. It will be remembered that I had the honor to submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute to this entire bill and I propose to address myself to that in connection with the question which is now before the Senate if I can have the floor to-morrow morning. I therefore yield to my friend from Indiana to make the motion he has indicated.

Mr. PRATT. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask the Senator if he will yield to me for a moment?

Mr. PRATT. Yes, sir.

Mr. SARGENT. I wish to ask the Senate to take up and allow to remain as the unfinished business for to-morrow the resolution of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. SCHURZ] on the subject of the difficulties in Louisiana. It is very well known to the Senate that some ten days ago I took the floor to speak upon that question and was suddenly taken sick the night before I was to speak and was not able to proceed. Many Senators who desire to speak have requested me to proceed, as I now have recovered my strength, so that I can get out of their way, and I also desire to make some observations on that matter. My wish is that that matter be left as the unfinished business in order that I may submit my remarks upon it to-morrow.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope my honorable friend will not be constrained to do that in the midst of this bill. Of course, if that question is opened, other gentlemen will follow him. I should be disposed to go on with this proposition. I appeal to my honorable friend from California whether he will not allow this bill to progress to-morrow until we dispose of it.

Mr. SARGENT. I feel some degree of responsibility on account of the desire of other Senators to speak; but if the Senate shall go into executive session or shall now adjourn, I shall consider that I am licensed by the Senate to wait at least twenty-four hours longer, and I will renew the request to-morrow for that purpose.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. We will try and dispose of this proposition in the mean time.

Mr. WRIGHT. I understand the Senator from Indiana renews his motion for an executive session.

Mr. PRATT. Yes, sir.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. MORTON. I give notice that after the conclusion of the bill now before the Senate I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolution for the admission of Mr. Pinchback as a member of this body; and upon that resolution my friend from California can make his speech with as much propriety as upon the resolution of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SARGENT. Allow me to ask the Senator whether he will not desire to open the debate on that matter himself, or whether he will yield me the floor to speak?

Mr. MORTON. I will yield my friend the floor on that resolution.

Mr. SARGENT. That is satisfactory.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. PRATT.]

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After sixteen minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at four o'clock and fifty-seven minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 10, 1875.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

REPEAL OF TAX ON STATE-BANK CIRCULATION.

Mr. SENER, by unanimous consent, presented the following joint resolution passed by the State of Virginia; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

Joint resolution memorializing Congress in reference to the tax on circulating medium, approved February 5, 1875.

Resolved, (the house of delegates concurring.) That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our members of the House of Representatives be requested, to use their influence to procure the passage of a law repealing that clause of the national banking law which imposes a tax of 10 per cent. on any other circulating medium than that authorized by Congress.

2. That the executive of this State communicate the adoption of these resolutions to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

A copy:

J. BELL BIGGER,

Clerk of the House of Delegates and Keeper of the Rolls of Virginia.

FEBRUARY 6, 1875.

CORRECTION OF THE JOURNAL.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I am reported as voting "no" on the Choctaw amendment. I voted "ay."

The SPEAKER. The correction will be made.

RANCHO RIO DE SANTA CLARA.

Mr. LAWSON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, by unanimous consent, reported back a memorial of citizens of Ventura County, California, asking the Attorney-General of the United States be directed to institute proceedings to set aside the patent for the Rancho Rio de Santa Clara, in Ventura County, California; and moved that it be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

WASHINGTON, CINCINNATI, AND SAINT LOUIS RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. HURLBUT. Mr. Speaker, during my absence in Pittsburgh on duty under order of the House, the Committee on Railways and Canals was called for reports. Prior to that time I was instructed to report back the bill (H. R. No. 3983) to aid the Washington, Cincinnati and Saint Louis Railroad Company to construct a narrow-gauge railway from tide-water to the cities of Saint Louis and Chicago. I ask the House to let me make that report now, for reference to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

There was no objection.

Mr. HURLBUT. I now report that bill back favorably, and as it is subject to the point of order, I move to refer it to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was referred, and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The bill goes to the Committee of the Whole on the point of order, and of course could not come back without unanimous consent.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I withdraw my motion.

EVENING SESSION FOR JUDICIARY COMMITTEE.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I ask unanimous consent that the Judiciary Committee have an evening at seven and a half o'clock, a week from to-night, to report. This is by unanimous request of the committee, and it is with the understanding no bill of a political nature shall be reported.

Mr. BROMBERG. It is to be done on the same understanding as in the other case.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Of course. We lost our time then, as gentlemen will remember, by the constitutional amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust that at this late hour of the session the gentleman will indicate what bills are then to be reported for action.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I have already indicated the business to be reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. We cannot consent to the reporting of private claims.

The SPEAKER. They would necessarily go to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. They will be subject to the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not waive the point of order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The committee have various reports to submit in reference to punishing criminals, and bills of like character. No private claim I know of is to be reported.

Mr. RANDALL. I should like to make just one additional arrangement—that no amendment of the character objected shall be made to any bill reported from that committee.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Of course, nothing of a political character.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think we had better have the regular order.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Indiana withdraws his objection.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the Judiciary Committee will have Wednesday evening next at half past seven o'clock to report, with the understanding that no political measure and no private claims are then to be introduced.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts, moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table. The latter motion was agreed to.

CHANGES OF REFERENCE.

Mr. ELDREDGE, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back the following petitions; and the same were referred to the Committee on Appropriations:

AFFAIRS IN LOUISIANA.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas, by unanimous consent, presented a concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Kansas respecting affairs in the State of Louisiana; and the same was referred to the Select Committee on Southern Affairs, and ordered to be printed, and also to be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The concurrent resolution is as follows:

Whereas the Legislature of the State of Louisiana at its recent convocation and while engaged in the orderly and lawful process of organization was invaded by a mob which violently interrupted its proceedings, prevented its organization, and forcibly took possession of its hall; and whereas a majority of the said Legislature did thereupon appeal to the governor of the State for protection; and whereas the governor did immediately respond to said request for protection, and by the assistance of the military forces of the United States then present, under a constitutional requisition upon the President, did reinstate said Legislature in peaceful possession of its hall, so that it could complete its legal organization; and whereas the rights of a Legislature to assemble and peacefully perfect its organization safe from all violence is a fundamental right of all legislative bodies and one that must be protected at all hazards and at whatever cost: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the house of representatives, (the senate concurring therein.) That we indorse the recent special message of the President of the United States relative to the condition of affairs in Louisiana as able, fair, and convincing, and as containing a triumphant vindication of his official action in the premises.

SEC. 2. That we have the highest confidence in the valor, patriotism, and integrity of Lieutenant-General Sheridan, and that he can depend upon the support of the loyal people of the country in the performance of his duties in upholding the Constitution and laws of the country.

SEC. 3. The secretary of state is hereby instructed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President of the United States, to Lieutenant-General Sheridan, and to our Senators and Representatives in Congress.

Passed the house of representatives January 22, 1875.

Concurred in by the senate February 2, 1875.

HENRY BOOTH,
Chief Clerk.

JOHN H. FOLKS,
Secretary of Senate.

I, Tom H. Cavanaugh, secretary of state of the State of Kansas, do hereby certify that the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the original instrument of writing on file in my office.

The amendments of the Senate were read, as follows:

On page 2, line 21, strike out "board of public works for" and insert "executive authority of."

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ALBRIGHT moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. TYNER, and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. McCRARY in the chair,) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4529) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all general debate upon this bill has been limited to five minutes. The Clerk will now read the bill for the first time.

Mr. TYNER. Before the Clerk proceeds with the formal reading of the bill, I would suggest to gentlemen to send to the document-room for report No. 119, which accompanies this bill. That report will give all the data upon which the Committee on Appropriations acted in making up this bill, and save many questions by gentlemen as the consideration of the bill proceeds.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. TYNER. I understand that the Committee on Ways and Means desire to obtain an order from the House to print a tariff bill which has been prepared by that committee. I therefore move that the committee now rise in order to enable the Committee on Ways and Means to report that bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I hope the committee will rise for that purpose.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly the committee rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McCRARY reported that, pursuant to order of the House, the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union had under consideration the special order, being House bill No. 4529, making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Ways and Means, reported a bill (H. R. No. 4680) to further protect the sinking fund, and to provide for the exigencies of the Government; which was read a first and second time, and ordered to be printed.

The question was upon ordering the bill to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. DAWES. I ask consent that this bill may be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole, and that it be made the special order for to-morrow at one o'clock, to the exclusion of all other orders except appropriation bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. If it is to be considered in the House subject to the same rules as to amendment and debate as in Committee of the Whole, I will have no objection.

The SPEAKER. To be considered under the five-minute rule when general debate shall have closed.

Mr. DAWES. Unless the House shall otherwise order.

Mr. COX. How much time does the gentleman propose to allow for general debate?

Mr. DAWES. I was going to inquire of the House itself about that.

Mr. MAYNARD. I suppose that by "to-morrow" the gentleman means Thursday.

Mr. DAWES. Certainly; everybody knows that the Speaker puts everything into parliamentary language.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to considering this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole under the five-minute rule after general debate has been closed?

Mr. HOLMAN. That means open to amendment as well as debate. The SPEAKER. Of course.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I understood the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] to say that it would be for the House to determine. Does he mean that he will move the previous question as soon as general debate is closed?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly not; but I am going to ask the House most distinctly not to admit any amendment to the bill involving new matter. What I meant was that the majority of the House could determine that they would not amend the bill.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. The gentleman does not propose to prevent amendments being offered?

Mr. DAWES. Of course not; but I say distinctly to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] that I will ask the House not to amend the bill by the introduction of other matters. The rates of taxation, &c., of course will be proper subjects for amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the bill be read, so that it may be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. Let the bill be read before consent is given to the proposition of the gentleman.

Mr. COX. It is not proposed to call the previous question after general debate is closed?

Mr. DAWES. Certainly not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] that if the bill should go in regular order to the Committee of the Whole there are so few special orders ahead of it that the House by a majority vote can reach it immediately.

Mr. DAWES. But the Chair is aware that the Committee on Ways and Means are at the mercy of almost any one in Committee of the Whole; I desire to relieve the committee from that peril.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not think there is any disposition in the House in any quarter to interfere with the immediate consideration of this bill, which is to raise revenue, I understand.

Mr. DAWES. Exactly.

Mr. RANDALL. Therefore I think the gentleman had better not embarrass this bill by sending it to the Committee of the Whole, but keep it in the position which he has indicated.

Mr. DAWES. I will say to the House that it is not my intention to interfere with debate. It is the intention of the Committee on Ways and Means to ask the House (everybody understands what that means) not to introduce new matter into this bill. That of course will be for the majority of the House to determine. That is what I meant when I said "unless the majority of the House shall otherwise determine." I do not intend to resort to any snap judgment to cut off any amendment. Of course all the rates that are proposed in this bill I should expect gentlemen to move amendments to as they desire; but I shall urge upon the House not to introduce a tariff bill in detail into this bill.

Mr. GARFIELD. I would suggest to the gentleman that he had better, if he can by any possibility do so, limit general debate at this time according as the House may agree, so that we may not drift on interminably in the discussion of this bill.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. I suggest that the bill ought to be read before any order is made in regard to it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill to further protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the date of the passage of this act, there shall be levied and collected on all distilled spirits on which the tax prescribed by law shall not then have been paid, and whether the said spirits shall then be in distillery bonded warehouse or not, a tax of one dollar on each proof gallon, or wine gallon when below proof, to be paid by the distiller, owner, or person having possession thereof, before removal from the distillery bonded warehouse; and so much of section 3251 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as is inconsistent herewith is hereby repealed: Provided, That in addition to the tax of seventy cents per gallon imposed by laws now existing, there shall be levied and collected a tax of fifteen cents, being one-half the increase of tax under this act, on each and every proof gallon, or wine gallon when below proof, of domestic distilled spirits manufactured and placed in bonded warehouse prior to the day when this act shall take effect, and held in bonded warehouse at that time, and on all such spirits then held by distillers, rectifiers, or wholesale dealers, having in their possession or under their control distilled spirits in stamped packages; and any person who shall sell, transfer, or otherwise dispose of any such distilled spirits after this act takes effect until an additional stamp, to be especially provided for this purpose by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, denoting payment of the additional tax of fifteen cents per gallon herein imposed, is purchased and attached to the package or packages containing the same, in such manner as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe, shall be subject to and pay a penalty of one dollar for each and every gallon so removed; and the spirits so removed shall be forfeited to the United States: And provided further, That on all brandy, gin, rum, and on all compounds and preparations of which distilled spirits is a component part of chief value, embracing all forms of distilled spirits imported from foreign countries, on which the duty, as fixed in the Revised Statutes, is two dollars per gallon, the duty hereafter to be levied, collected, and paid shall be $2.50 per proof gallon.

SEC. 2. That section 3368 of the Revised Statutes be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out the words "twenty cents a pound," and inserting in lieu thereof the words "twenty-four cents a pound:" Provided, That the increase of tax herein provided for shall not apply to tobacco on which the tax under existing law shall have been paid when this act takes effect.

SEC. 3. That so much of section 3437 as imposes a stamp tax on friction matches, lucifer matches, or other articles made in part of wood and used for like purposes, be, and the same is, repealed, to take effect on and after the 1st day of July, 1875.

SEC. 4. That on all molasses, (not including tank-bottoms, sirup of sugar, sugar-cane juice, melada, or concentrated melada,) and on sugars, according to the Dutch standard in color, imported from foreign countries, there shall be levied, collected, and paid, in addition to the duties now imposed in schedule G, section 2504 of the Revised Statutes, an amount equal to 25 per cent. of said duties as levied upon the several grades therein designated.

SEC. 5. That so much of section 2503 of the Revised Statutes as provides that only 90 per cent. of the several duties and rates of duty imposed on certain articles therein enumerated by section 2504 shall be levied, collected, and paid be, and the same is hereby, repealed; and the several duties and rates of duty prescribed in said section 2504 shall be and remain as by that section levied, without abatement of 10 per cent. as provided in section 2503.

SEC. 6. That the increase of duties provided by this act shall not apply to any goods, wares, or merchandise actually on shipboard, and bound to the United States, on the 10th day of February, 1875, nor on any such goods, wares, or merchandise on deposit in warehouses or public stores at the date of the passage of this act.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] asks that the bill be ordered to be printed and be considered to-morrow in the House at one o'clock under the five-minute rule—

Mr. DAWES. After general debate shall have closed.

The SPEAKER. To the exclusion of all other orders except the appropriation bills. Is there objection?

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. There is objection decidedly; and I hope no such proposition will prevail.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I object.

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. There is decided objection to any such course being taken with a bill of this kind, changing the whole policy of the law in regard to levying taxes. Such a bill as this deserves the fairest and fullest consideration and debate. I do not apprehend that anybody will object to its taking its course as rapidly as may be reasonable; but to shut off debate on a bill of this kind, affecting materially, as it does, so many interests, would be wrong.

Mr. DAWES. I do not propose to shut off the largest debate. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. WARD] will listen to me, I will state the difference between considering the bill in Committee of the Whole and in the House. If the bill be considered in the House you can have the yeas and nays at any time, and this arrangement will not cut off debate; it cannot do so. But if the bill be considered in Committee of the Whole we cannot get it out of the Committee of the Whole if a certain number of members in Committee of the Whole are determined to prevent it unless we suspend the rules.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. This bill is simply a proposition to "kill the goose that lays the golden egg."

Mr. WARD, of Illinois. And it will do it most effectually.

Mr. SAYLER, of Ohio. I do not think the bill ought to come out of the Committee of the Whole unless it be very materially amended; and for one I intend to throw every obstacle in the way of its passage in the present form.

Mr. DAWES. If gentlemen insist on their objection, there is no course left me but to report the bill for reference to the Committee of the Whole, and to ask that it be made the special order in Committee of the Whole for to-morrow at one o'clock and from day to day until disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed, and that it be made a special order in Committee of the Whole for to-morrow at one o'clock to the exclusion of all other orders.

The motion of Mr. DAWES was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES moved to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. GARFIELD. I now move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. McCRARY in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4529) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

The Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. TYNER. Mr. Chairman, five minutes were allotted for general debate by order of the House. I have no desire to occupy any portion of the time in what might be termed "general debate." It might be well enough, however, to state to the committee the difference between the appropriations of last year for the service of the Post-Office Department and the amount recommended to be appropriated this year, together with some other facts pertinent thereto. I therefore ask the attention of the committee while I make a statement, which will occupy but a few minutes.

By the bill of last year there was appropriated $35,756,091. In the present bill the committee recommend appropriations amounting to $37,524,261—$1,768,270 more than was appropriated last year. Thus it will be seen that the amount recommended to be appropriated this year exceeds the amount appropriated last year by less than 5 per cent. From this statement, taken in connection with the fact that the business of the Post-Office Department, as shown by its history, increases from 8 per cent. to 10 per cent. annually, the Committee of the Whole will obtain some general idea of the exactness with which the Committee on Appropriations has prepared this bill. The deficiency last year to be provided for out of the general Treasury was $5,497,842 as against $6,852,705 recommended in this bill—showing an increase in the deficiency of $1,354,836—an increase of about 25 per cent. over the deficiency of last year.

Now, it may seem a little singular to the committee that while the proposed appropriations are an increase of only about 5 per cent. over those of last year, the proposed appropriation for deficiency should be about 25 per cent. over that of last year. That is explainable by simply alluding to the fact that the estimated receipts for last year, or the current year in point of fact, were $29,293,549, while the estimated receipts for the coming fiscal year are only $29,148,156, or $145,393 less than the estimated receipts for last year. The falling off of the revenues of the Department can only be attributable to the general depression of business throughout the country, and to the fact that experience has demonstrated the several Executive Departments of the Government are using less postage in the transaction of business than it was supposed they would do, making the receipts of the Post-Office Department fall off that amount.

This small amount of the estimated receipts will account for the increased deficiency and the large disproportion in that deficiency. I now ask for the reading of the bill by clauses for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of letter-carriers and incidental expenses of the free-delivery system, $2,000,000.

Mr. COTTON. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I make this formal motion to amend for the purpose of calling attention to what is being done through the free-delivery system. I had the honor of proposing and securing the adoption of the amendment to the post-office appropriation bill of March 3, 1873, extending the letter-carrier system to towns having a population of not less than twenty thousand, which took effect July 1, 1873. Previous to that the limitation was to cities having fifty thousand inhabitants. I wish to direct the attention of the committee to the working of this law and what has been accomplished. The Postmaster-General in his report for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, informs us that under this act there has been an increase of letter-carrier offices to the number of thirty-nine, there being prior to that law but forty-eight, and that while the increased expense of the system has been but 25 per cent. the increased receipts have been 44 per cent.; the increase in the number of letter-carriers five hundred and fifty, and in the number of pieces of mail matter handled by letter-carriers over one hundred and twenty-eight millions. The Postmaster-General says of this amendment to the post-office law that the general results of the service, notwithstanding the large number of new offices and the irregularity incident to the introduction of the system, show a gratifying increase over the preceding year.

In advocating that amendment I was then opposed by some of my friends in this House. I wish now to vindicate my position by referring to the successful operation of that law. I withdraw the motion which I made, and will have published with my remarks an extract from the report of the Postmaster-General relating to this subject.

[The following is the extract referred to:]

Under the act of March 3, 1873, making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1874, and providing for the employment of letter-carriers for the free delivery of mail-matter "at every place containing a population of not less than twenty thousand within the delivery of its post-office," the free-delivery system was established at thirty-nine offices.

The general results of the service at the eighty-seven offices, notwithstanding the large number of new offices and the irregularities necessarily incident to the introduction of the system, show a gratifying increase over the preceding year.

The aggregate results were as follows:

Number of offices	87
Number of letter-carriers	2,049
Mail letters delivered	166,020,370
Mail postal cards delivered	11,000,809
Local letters delivered	45,179,295

Whole number of pieces handled	503,386,397
Amount paid carriers, including incidentals	$1,802,696 41
Average cost per piece	3.58 mills.
Amount of postage on local matter	$1,611,481 66

Showing the following increase, compared with last year:

Offices	39
Letter-carriers	550
Mail letters delivered	25,061,483
Mail postal cards delivered	11,000,809
Local letters delivered	6,839,246

Postage on local matter	499,230 45
Percentage of increase of receipts on local postage	44.8
Percentage of increase in cost of service	26.7

Mr. BIERY. I submit the following amendment, to come in between lines 14 and 15.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add the following proviso;

Provided, That any city having a population of twenty thousand within its corporate limits shall be entitled to the benefits of free delivery.

Mr. TYNER. I raise the point of order that the amendment conflicts with the present law.

Mr. COTTON. That is the present law.

Mr. TYNER. I make the point of order that it conflicts with the existing law and cannot be received.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order and rules the amendment out.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous items, $150,000.

Mr. RANDALL. I think, Mr. Chairman, so large a sum as $150,000 for miscellaneous items should have some explanation of what are the items in detail for which it is to be required.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman move an amendment?

Mr. RANDALL. I move to strike out the last word, or rather to reduce the amount to $100,000 by striking out "and fifty." That will enable the gentleman to make whatever explanation there may be for this large appropriation.

Mr. TYNER. If the gentleman from Pennsylvania will look at the report, which I suppose he has before him, he will find references to pages of the last Postmaster-General's Report which will throw light upon the subject. The appropriation for miscellaneous items embraces everything connected with the post-offices throughout the country not provided for by specific appropriation, such as brooms, brushes, repair of post-offices, and various other things so great in number it would be unnecessary if not impossible for me to go through with them in detail. In other words, this appropriation of $150,000 is to cover the expenses of various things not otherwise specifically appropriated for. The experience of the Post-Office Department shows a less appropriation than this, judiciously expended, would not cover the actual necessary wants of the Department.

Mr. RANDALL. I have the law under which the service for the present year is being rendered, and I find only $2,500 under this item.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is on page 9 of the report of the committee.

Mr. TYNER. The gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is what we see in the report on page 9.

Mr. TYNER. I am talking about page 3.

Mr. RANDALL. That shows $60,000 for stationery and miscellaneous items.

Mr. TYNER. I will say to the gentleman that under the postal code the Sixth Auditor is required to keep an account under a general heading, embracing rent, fuel, stationery, and other miscellaneous items. Therefore, under the law which required the Sixth Auditor to keep an account under that heading, he was in the habit of charging the expenditures of all these various items to one single account. The result was that it enabled the Auditor of the Department to make payments for all these various items, notwithstanding of specific appropriations, without a precise knowledge of what he was doing until the expiration of each quarter, when it was very often ascertained that he had paid out too much, for instance, on the item of rent, and not enough on the item of stationery; and therefore the appropriations from one year to another were in the habit of lapping over each other so as to meet the necessities of the Department from year to year. A thorough analysis of the items which went into that general account demonstrated the fact that the various sums for which appropriations are asked this year are absolutely necessary. And while miscellaneous items were appropriated for last year only in the sum of $60,000, it might be that by reason of this conglomerated way of keeping accounts in the Sixth Auditor's Office there may have been paid out $150,000 for miscellaneous items. The purpose is now to separate the items, so that the Postmaster-General and Sixth Auditor may know in future precisely what is appropriated for each purpose.

Mr. RANDALL. Now, taking the account to which the gentleman from Indiana has referred us, we find that the appropriations of last year for all purposes which he has enumerated aggregated $726,500.

Mr. TYNER. The gentleman is right.

Mr. RANDALL. Then the committee now recommend an appropriation for those purposes of $735,000. That is an increase of $8,500 over last year. But the gentleman will observe that last year we appropriated for stationery and miscellaneous items but $60,000; while this year for stationery and miscellaneous items the amount to be appropriated is $210,000. Now, there is $150,000 increase according to my figures.

Mr. TYNER. How much?

Mr. RANDALL. The appropriation last year for stationery and miscellaneous items was $60,000. And now for stationery furnished post-offices and miscellaneous items we have $235,000—an extraordinary increase.

Mr. TYNER. The gentleman will observe that for rent, fuel, and light last year we appropriated the sum, if my additions are correct, of $760,000.

Mr. RANDALL. Six hundred and sixty thousand dollars.

Mr. TYNER. Yes; we appropriated last year for those three items $660,000. Now, those three items went into the same account on the books of the Sixth Auditor with the items for stationery and for office furniture; and while last year the appropriation for stationery and miscellaneous items was not sufficient to cover the expenditures for those purposes, there was an excess for rent, light, and fuel, which the Sixth Auditor applied to the payment of the others.

Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania will observe that the aggregate appropriations asked for this year are only $3,500 more than last year. He will recognize this to be a very small increase. And if the gentleman will turn to the close of the bill he will find a clause there that requires the Sixth Auditor to keep his accounts under each item of appropriation, as provided by law; so that hereafter the account for miscellaneous items will show exactly what is expended under that head, the account for rent, light, and fuel, showing exactly what is expended under that head, and so on; and the accounts will not be confused in the future as they have hitherto been.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I am to understand that the stationery and miscellaneous items last year were charged under items of rent, fuel, and light; is that so?

Mr. TYNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. RANDALL. Now you propose to separate them?

Mr. TYNER. Yes; and compel the accounts to be kept separate.

Mr. RANDALL. Now let me refer to another point. Why is "office furniture" required to the amount of $35,000? If my memory serves me, we made a large appropriation for that purpose last year.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before the other point is left, I desire to say a word. I insist that whatever may be the extent of the appropriations made this year, as compared with those made last year, in regard to other items, this item of $150,000 for miscellaneous purposes ought not to be allowed. If there is anything we have attempted to do of late years it has been to hold the Departments responsible for applying specific appropriations to the specific objects. Here is a fearful departure from that principle. We appropriated last year for the miscellaneous purposes of the Post-Office Department the sum of $2,500, as the gentleman is aware. And the Committee on Appropriations in their report accompanying this bill say—and I call the attention of my colleague to it, for it is a very important proposition indeed—

Under this head—

That is the head "miscellaneous"— are charged all items of necessary expenses that cannot be included in any regular appropriation.

Of course all these items, fuel, &c., may be included in regular appropriations.

These expenses vary from year to year, as emergencies arise, and it is impossible to fix precisely the sum required.

There was appropriated for this purpose for the current fiscal year the sum of $2,500, and the same sum is recommended for the year ending June 30, 1876.

And yet they propose now an appropriation of $150,000 for that purpose.

Mr. TYNER. What page is my colleague reading from?

Mr. HOLMAN. I am reading from page 9 of the committee's report.

Mr. TYNER. I answer my colleague by saying that the item to which he refers is an item which may be found in the present bill under the heading, "Office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General," and is an entirely different thing from the item now under discussion.

Mr. HOLMAN. What are the items under the head of "miscellaneous" to which my colleague on the Committee on Appropriations refers?

Mr. TYNER. The miscellaneous items that we are now discussing enter into the expenditures of all the post-offices throughout the country. The miscellaneous items to which my colleague refers are those in reference to the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. HOLMAN. Before my colleague answers, I wish to call his attention to the fact that he ought to bear in mind that we have a right to examine all the items in this bill with reference to our past experience in legislation. This item in the former appropriation bill which we passed was $2,500, and now it is $5,600. Now, I call the attention of my colleague to the fact that some change has been made in the appropriation for this purpose, which, of course, no one can explain but the Committee on Appropriations themselves, and I insist that the item shall be reduced to the usual amount. I do object to the system of reporting bills from the Appropriation Committee in such form that no member of the House with ordinary experience in regard to appropriation bills is able to tell whether a particular item refers to the item corresponding with the past experience in such bills. I move therefore to reduce the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to strike out $50,000; I think $100,000 is sufficient.

Mr. HOLMAN. Permit me to suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] that the bill is so framed that no person can be advised of its contents except the gentleman who reports it.

Mr. RANDALL. I will join with the gentleman in any respect in which he will indicate a plan that will cut up by the roots appropriations in general terms, such as contingent expenses or miscellaneous expenses; but we have to deal now with the action of the Committee on Appropriations, and what I seek to do is something practical, and that is to reduce the item of miscellaneous expenses, and I think a reduction of $50,000 about sufficient.

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend from Pennsylvania seems to admit that this item is not more than we usually appropriate. What I insist on is that this item shall be cut down to $2,500, the same amount that has been appropriated under this head heretofore.

Mr. RANDALL. Now I want to make a statement to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. Let me say a few words by unanimous consent.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will proceed, if there be no objection.

No objection was made.

Mr. RANDALL. I want to treat the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. TYNER] exactly fairly. He has stated to the House that this change is necessitated from the fact that, as I think improperly heretofore, these miscellaneous items have been paid out under heads which they ought not to have been paid out under; that is, under the head of rent, lights, and fuel. Now he proposes to separate them, and I propose to reduce the aggregate $50,000. I think that the amount may be safely reduced to that extent. If the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] thinks that the whole amount ought to be stricken out, let him make that motion. I will support him in all proper movements for retrenchment; but I am seeking now a practical purpose, to save what I can to the Treasury of the United States in a way that I think proper and sensible.

Mr. TYNER. Now, if I can be permitted by the committee, I think I can answer the objections of my colleague, and to that answer I desire his attention. My colleague, perhaps, in talking about the appropriations of last year, got the miscellaneous items mixed. There were in the appropriation bill of last year two separate propositions for miscellaneous items, one of them he will find, by turning to the appropriation bill of last year, of $2,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the first item which corresponds with this.

Mr. TYNER. Will my colleague just let me make my explanation without interruption. That was one of the miscellaneous appropriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. I have the law here before me.

Mr. TYNER. I have not the law but I have a statement of its contents. The gentleman will find on the second page of the law, if he has it, an appropriation for miscellaneous items of $2,500.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the first appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. TYNER. That is for the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. RANDALL. It does not say so.

Mr. TYNER. Heretofore the appropriations for the Post-Office Department have been made in the bill without any reference whatever to a separation of the Bureaus and the expenditures of the different Bureaus of the Department. The Committee on Appropriations believed that to be a loose way of doing business, and therefore this session they have introduced a bill providing for appropriations under separate heads for the support of the Bureaus of the Department, so that the First, Second, and Third Assistant Postmasters-General might each have the items of appropriation for his Bureau fixed by law, so that there may be no contention in the Department.

Now allow me a moment. There were two items in the bill of last year for miscellaneous expenses; one was for $60,000, and while the bill did not provide that that amount should be expended in the Bureau of the First Assistant Postmaster-General, yet he did expend it.

Another item of $6,500 in the office of the Third Assistant Postmaster-General was expended under his direction apart and separate from the other. That made $66,500 for miscellaneous items and stationery appropriated last year.

After a thorough examination of this subject, we now believe that the law by which these accounts are so mixed in the Department should be changed. And in that connection and in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] I call his attention to the law which provides the manner in which the Sixth Auditor shall keep his accounts. It is as follows:

The accounts of the postal service shall be kept in such a manner as to exhibit the amount of revenues, &c., and the amount of expenditures for each of the following objects: transportation of the mail, compensation of postmasters, &c., rents, lights, fuel for post-offices, stationery, and miscellaneous items.

In this connection let me say that the Sixth Auditor was simply obeying the command of the law when he grouped all these expenditures together. The result has been this: where the item of appropriation for rent, for instance, was in excess and the appropriation for miscellaneous items fell short the Sixth Auditor has been in the habit of applying the excess in the one case to make up the deficiency in the other. He could not well avoid it, because the law required him to group these accounts together, and he drew his warrants upon the Treasury in the course of the year for these separate items, never knowing how much belonged under each head until the expiration of the year, when it would turn out that the expenses under one head were too much and under the other too little. We propose now to bring him down to items, and make him keep an account under each head.

Mr. RANDALL. That far you are right, undoubtedly. Now, what was the amount expended for miscellaneous items under the three heads of last year's appropriation of rent, fuel, and light? In other words, what part of the $660,000 for those three items was expended outside of those three items for miscellaneous purposes? Does the gentleman apprehend my question?

Mr. TYNER. I understand the question.

Mr. RANDALL. That will be a criterion upon which we can go for the next fiscal year and fix the amount for each item? For instance, if of that $660,000 there was $150,000 for miscellaneous purposes, then of course there would be some show for the appropriation of that amount for that purpose this year.

Mr. TYNER. If the gentleman will turn to page 51 of the appendix of the report of the Postmaster-General, he will find a part of the item.

Mr. RANDALL. What is the aggregate?

Mr. TYNER. I will say that by reason of the confusion in keeping these accounts in the Sixth Auditor's Office heretofore the various items of appropriation under this head are scattered all through this report. I did have a memorandum referring to every page and each item of expenditure under each head, but it has been mislaid. I will only say that if the gentleman will turn to page 51 of the Postmaster-General's report, not to my report, he will find there "For allowances to postmasters, for office repairs, gas-fixtures, telegraphing, and miscellaneous items, $105,309.51." And then upon other pages of the report he will find over $40,000 more.

Mr. RANDALL. Gas-fixtures should be under the head of lights.

Mr. TYNER. By no means. There is the single item of $105,000. The gentleman can refer to the pages referred to in my report accompanying this bill and find over $40,000 more.

Mr. RANDALL. My amendment induces economy during the next fiscal year in this item of about $50,000. The gentleman states from recollection that the miscellaneous items of last year aggregated about $150,000. I think we can reduce the amount about one-third, and save that much.

Mr. TYNER. If that reduction is made a deficiency account will have to be sent in next year.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope not; at any rate let next year take care of itself.

Mr. TYNER. No; vote the amendment down now.

Mr. HOLMAN. I desire to say a single word.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate has been exhausted upon the pending amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out the last word. My object is to hold the heads of Departments to some degree of responsibility. My friend says the item intended to be covered by this $150,000 is to be found on page 51 of the Postmaster-General's report. I would ask him then to appropriate $150,000 for those items, giving them in detail, and we can in that way test the matter whether those are the miscellaneous items referred to or not.

Mr. TYNER. I am not responsible for the fact that my colleague [Mr. HOLMAN] cannot understand what is contained in the statement made on page 51 of the report of the Postmaster-General. I do not say that every item which appears there is an item charged up to the appropriation for miscellaneous items. My colleague will see there that certain payments were made for fees of United States marshals, and there was a specific appropriation made last year for that purpose.

He will also observe that there were payments of fees to attorneys, for which there was a specific appropriation; there was engraving, printing, and binding drafts and warrants, for which there was a specific appropriation. But unfortunately under the law the Sixth Auditor was compelled to group all these things together, and the footing, $209,554.53 for these several items, hardly covers one-half of what was paid for these various items, as can be seen by referring to the report at the pages I have indicated.

Mr. RANDALL. I think that an appropriation of $100,000 will be sufficient. I have looked at the specification in this report, and it seems to embrace everything.

Mr. TYNER. I think I can say without egotism, and certainly without any intention to reflect at all upon the judgment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL,] that my knowledge of this subject, after thoroughly overhauling it and trying to dig out item by item all these various accounts, must certainly be superior to that of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, who has not had the same opportunities and has not devoted so much attention to the subject. I repeat that if only $100,000 shall be appropriated a deficiency appropriation will be absolutely necessary.

Mr. RANDALL. Grant the correctness of what the gentleman states as to his superior facilities for knowledge upon this subject, yet he has admitted within the last few moments that in the past we have had a vicious mode of legislation and a vicious mode of expending money. Now I direct his attention to this statement, which must be conceded to embrace everything, for it is headed "Statement of payments made under sundry heads, charged to miscellaneous accounts for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1874." The first item reads:

For allowances to postmasters for office-repairs, gas-fixtures, telegraphing, and miscellaneous items—

Which is quite comprehensive—$105,309.51.

I think upon the figures of the Department itself, and notwithstanding the great facilities which the gentleman from Indiana has had for deriving information, an appropriation for $100,000 will be sufficient. Here is a place where we can save $50,000.

Mr. TYNER. I have nothing further to say upon this subject, except to refer the gentleman to page 277 of the Postmaster-General's report for another group of items under this head. If I had time (I have lost a memorandum showing these different references) I could refer the gentleman to various other items showing that the appropriation asked for this year is a very limited one in view of the necessities of the Department.

Mr. PACKER. The gentleman might refer also to page 281.

Mr. RANDALL. Page 277, to which the gentleman from Indiana has referred, is merely a detail of what no doubt is embraced in the other aggregate.

Mr. TYNER. The gentleman will see there that the Sixth Auditor has reported under the head "Miscellaneous," $209,554.53; and under the head "Miscellaneous, stationery," $36,468.97.

Mr. RANDALL. I still think that an appropriation of $100,000 for this purpose will be sufficient.

Mr. HOLMAN. I withdraw my formal amendment for the purpose of suggesting to my colleague that he make the appropriation in conformity with the expenditures under this head for the last fiscal year, omitting "expenses in negotiating postal convention with France," and the expenditure for "safe for dead-letter office." Let all the other miscellaneous expenses be included.

Mr. TYNER. How much does my colleague propose to appropriate.

Mr. HOLMAN. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. TYNER. I will hear my colleague's amendment read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 24 of the bill, after the word "items," insert the following:
Namely: For allowances to postmasters for office-repairs, gas-fixtures, telegraphing, and miscellaneous items; for preparation and publication of post-route maps; for post-office and official stamped envelopes; for registered package envelopes and seals; for fees to United States marshals; for fees to clerks of courts; for fees to attorneys; for engraving, printing, and binding drafts and warrants; for expenses in examining the registered-letter system; for moieties to informers in cases of violation of post-office law; for law books for use of Post-Office Department; $150,000.

Mr. TYNER. In response to the suggestion of my colleague I will simply say, as I have said over and over again, that that enumeration does not embrace all the expenditures of the last year for these various items.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Postmaster-General says that it does.

Mr. TYNER. If we appropriate only the amount suggested by my colleague, I cannot possibly indicate the amount of the deficiency appropriation. That will be necessary when the accounts shall be made up.

Mr. HOLMAN. My colleague has referred to page 277 of the Postmaster-General's report as indicating the items of expenditures under this head; but on examination he must see that the aggregate there carried out is made up simply of the items from page 51.

Mr. TYNER. I think my colleague will find he is mistaken. On page 51 of the report of the Postmaster-General it is shown that the total of miscellaneous items is $209,554.53. On page 277 my colleague will find that item is embraced with many others.

Mr. HOLMAN. Certainly.

Mr. TYNER. That is all true; but is that all the gentleman finds on page 277?

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; all under the head of "miscellaneous."

Mr. TYNER. Under the head of miscellaneous you will also find $36,468.97 for "miscellaneous, stationery."

Mr. HOLMAN. That is "miscellaneous, stationery;" but we have provided for that already.

Mr. TYNER. I am talking about these items grouped under the head of miscellaneous; but, sir, I am willing the vote should be taken. The committee divided; and there were—ayes 27, noes 74.

Mr. GARFIELD. No further count is demanded.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. This amendment is not adopted because gentlemen have not taken the pains to study the question; but I do not insist on a further count.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL.]

Mr. RANDALL. My amendment will save $50,000.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 43, noes 55; no quorum voting.

Mr. RANDALL. The vote is so close I must demand a division. My amendment is to reduce this appropriation for miscellaneous items from $150,000 to $100,000, thereby saving $50,000 to the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum voting, the Chair will order tellers; and he appoints Mr. TYNER and Mr. RANDALL.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 38, noes 69.

Mr. RANDALL. The vote just taken is sufficiently indicative, and I therefore ask for no further count.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of Second Assistant Postmaster-General:

For inland-mail transportation, $17,548,000; and out of this appropriation the Postmaster-General is hereby authorized to pay the expenses of taking the weights of mails on railroad-routes, as provided by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1874," approved March 3, 1873; and he is hereby directed to take said weights, and require them to be stated and verified to him by the employees of the Post-Office Department, under such instructions as he may consider just to the Post-Office Department and the railroad companies.

Mr. TYNER. I move the following amendment to that paragraph:

Strike out the word "this," in line 28, and insert the word "the;" after the word "appropriation," in line 29, add these words, "for inland mail transportation," and strike out "hereby;" and after "authorized" insert "hereafter."

The purpose is to make this provision permanent instead of applying simply to this paragraph.

Mr. COX. I do not understand what the gentleman means by making it permanent.

Mr. TYNER. If the gentleman will look over the language of the bill, he will see it is provided that out of this appropriation certain expenses shall be paid. The amendment, if adopted, will make that provision the law. In other words, out of this appropriation the Postmaster-General will be hereafter authorized to pay the expense of taking the weights of mails on railroad-routes. The gentleman will see the propriety of it. It is in view of the fact there is a doubt whether they have the right to take out of any appropriation the necessary amount to pay these expenses. I wish to cure that.

Mr. RANDALL. This is to have a test?

Mr. TYNER. This is to see what the mails weigh.

Mr. O'BRIEN. How can you make it permanent to come out of this appropriation?

Mr. TYNER. The amendment is to change this into a permanent law.

Mr. O'BRIEN. Report the paragraph as it will be if the amendment be adopted.

Mr. TYNER. I will read the law as it is proposed to be amended:

Office of Second Assistant Postmaster-General:

For inland mail transportation, $17,548,000; and out of the appropriation for inland mail transportation the Postmaster-General is authorized hereafter to pay the expenses of taking the weights of mails on railroad routes, as provided by the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1874," approved March 3, 1873; and he is hereby directed to take said weights, and require them to be stated and verified to him by the employes of the Post-Office Department, under such instructions as he may consider just to the Post-Office Department and the railroad companies.

Mr. RANDALL. This is for the purpose of taking the weights of mails on railroad-routes as provided for by the law of 1874.

Mr. TYNER. It is to cure the doubt which has always existed in the Post-Office Department whether they had the right under the law to take money out of any appropriation for the purpose of taking the weights of these mails.

Mr. RANDALL. As I understand, it is with a view to save money to the Government.

Mr. TYNER. Certainly.

Mr. RANDALL. So as to test the railroad weights of mails carried?

Mr. TYNER. That is it exactly.

Mr. RANDALL. It is to put this whole matter under the control of the Post-Office Department. Now, how many employes are required to carry out this law?

Mr. TYNER. The supposition, as nearly as can be ascertained for inland mail transportation from year to year, is that it would take $100,000.

Mr. RANDALL. How much is it estimated we will save by this change?

Mr. TYNER. Just so much as gentlemen may imagine might occur by reason of the Government taking this matter into its own hands.

Mr. RANDALL. We had this subject before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and I think the Department then presented a statement as to what would be the amount saved. I do not now recollect exactly what it was. They had some mails weighed and showed the percentage which would be saved and with that made up a general calculation.

Mr. TYNER. I do not think there is any data by means of which the Department or anybody else could say how much would be saved. The House can see the entire looseness of permitting railroads to take weights of their own mails. There has also been a doubt in the Post-Office Department whether they had the right to use money out of any appropriation. We cure this by providing for the expenses of taking the weight of mails by employes of the Post-Office Department. The amendment is a perfectly proper one.

Mr. RANDALL. From tests it appeared the Government had not been honestly dealt with in the weights of mails returned by railroad companies, and, as I understand it, this amendment is to cure a defect in the law which made such a thing possible.

Mr. TYNER. Certainly. If this change in the law were not proposed the Committee on Appropriations would not ask a single dollar less than we have for inland mail transportation.

The committee therefore believe that if it would cost $100,000 to take the weight of the mails, at least $100,000 a year would be saved by it. I believe it may amount to a much greater sum.

Mr. RANDALL. That is a fair answer.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VANCE. I offer the following amendment:

After line 39, page 3, insert:

For payment of the amounts due southern mail contractors to 26th May, 1871, $370,977.17.

Mr. TYNER. I raise the point of order on that amendment that it is in conflict with existing law. I send up a joint resolution of Congress for the information of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is disposed to sustain the point of order unless the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] can show that the amendment is not in conflict with existing law.

Mr. VANCE. What law?

The CHAIRMAN. It is the act approved March 2, 1867.

Mr. SENER. Let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution prohibiting payments by any officer of the Government to any person not known to have been opposed to the rebellion and in favor of its suppression.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That until otherwise ordered it shall be unlawful for any officer of the United States Government to pay any account, claim, or demand against said Government which accrued or existed prior to the 13th day of April, A. D. 1861, in favor of any person who promoted, encouraged, or in any manner sustained the late rebellion, or in favor of any person who during said rebellion was not known to be opposed thereto and distinctly in favor of its suppression; and no pardon heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted, shall authorize the payment of such account, claim, or demand until this resolution is modified or repealed: Provided, That this resolution shall not be construed to prohibit the payment of claims founded upon contracts made by any of the Departments, where such claims were assigned or contracted to be assigned prior to April 1, 1861, to creditors of said contractors, loyal citizens of loyal States, in payment of debts incurred prior to March 1, 1861.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. SENER. Before the committee passes from that, let me say that a majority of the House more than twelve months ago voted to instruct the Committee on Appropriations to report in favor of such an appropriation as this.

Mr. DUNNELL. I offer the following amendment:

In line 27 strike out the word "seventeen" and insert "eighteen;" so that it will read:

For inland mail transportation, $18,548,000.

In offering this amendment I desire to say that in the administration of the Post-Office Department for the last year the frontier portions of the country are made to suffer in order that the other sections of the country may have a special favor. To illustrate, I think that this inland mail item should be increased more than it has been relatively. Seventeen million dollars, one-half of the entire amount in the bill, is for inland transportation. The increase is only half a million. There is an increase in the other items of some two and a half millions or more. Now, because we increase so little in this item there is an injustice done to the frontier portions of the country.

Within the past year, in order to bring the transportation within the appropriation, very well-settled portions in my own State and in my own district, where they have had mails heretofore twice a week, have been reduced to one mail a week; and on some mail-routes where they had mails three times a week they now have a mail but once a week. There is a very great complaint that the frontier portions of the country get very lightly the benefits of the mail service as compared with the other portions of the country. We have here between two and three million dollars appropriated to pay mail letter-carriers. And this bill discloses the fact that there is too slight an increase in this item and too large an increase in some others.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. DUNNELL. Certainly.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman not know that the income of the Post-Office Department is largely in excess in those States which are thickly settled, as the Eastern States, of the income from the frontier States, and that really the thickly populated States are not in deficiency?

Mr. DUNNELL. I understand that. My argument, however, is not thereby damaged; because there is a system that extends itself throughout the entire country and is paid by the general wealth of the country, and I say it is unjust to the frontier portions of the country to deny them a reasonable share of the advantages of the Post-Office Department.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman seriously propose to increase the item for inland mail transportation?

Mr. DUNNELL. I do seriously propose to increase it, unless it can be shown that there may be properly a reduction in other items.

Mr. RANDALL. I desire to draw the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the last appropriation bill appropriated for this purpose $16,400,000, while this appropriates $17,548,000. There is therefore an increase of $1,148,000.

Mr. DUNNELL. O, no; only $600,000.

Mr. RANDALL. The difference between $17,548,000 and $16,400,000 is $1,148,000, notwithstanding the correction of the gentleman; and the gentleman's amendment will make it $1,000,000 more.

Now, there is another point to which I desire to attract attention. It is that the present Postmaster-General is cutting up by the roots some of these outrageous post-office route contracts to carry the mails. I believe if the Postmaster-General has his way in this matter he will save an enormous sum of money by following out the course of conduct he is now pursuing. And there is certainly no occasion for any further increase in addition to the increase already made of $1,100,000.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am utterly astonished at the proposition of my friend from Minnesota. I had supposed that the House in Committee of the Whole would have insisted on this item being reduced. The rapidity of the increase of appropriations for the benefit of railroads is something startling, and I think ought to arrest the universal attention of the country.

My friend will see that the result is an increase of the appropriation for the benefit of the railroad companies. This bill increases the appropriation for the inland transportation of the mails. My friend will notice by the report that accompanies this bill that in 1872 the amount appropriated was $12,572,264; in 1873 the amount was $13,635,341; in 1874 the amount was $15,925,584; and in 1875, the present year, the amount was $16,400,000, and now for the next fiscal year it is proposed that there shall be an increase already of $1,750,000.

Now, no person can notice the monstrous increase of these appropriations made for the benefit of the railroad companies of the country without being impressed with the fact that when four or five years ago a gentleman of prominence retired from the Post-Office Department he proposed to secure an increase of the appropriation for the benefit of railroad corporations upon conditions which would have secured to him and his associates over $1,000,000 from the persons for whose benefit the increase was made. I trust, sir, that the condition of public affairs is not justifying any real apprehension that that combination is to be carried into effect; and yet the fact is that from the year after that letter was published up to the present time there has been an increase of the appropriations for the benefit of railroad corporations which does in effect substantially correspond with what that retiring officer of the Post-Office Department proposed; and upon looking at the report of the Postmaster-General for the present fiscal year you cannot fail to observe that the leading railroads—such, for instance, as the Erie Railroad—have had a large increase in the amount allotted to them for carrying the mails. During the last year the amount allotted to that road for its services in carrying the mails has been increased $151,095, an increase of a little over 50 per cent.—the exact amount of increase proposed by Giles A.

Smith in a circular which was brought to the attention of the country and read to the Senate three or four years ago. The amount formerly paid to that road was $172,000; the amount paid during the present fiscal year was $323,595.

Now, my friend proposes that instead of an increase for the present year of about $1,500,000, as the bill proposes, an addition shall be made of $500,000 to that amount, making the appropriation for this year infinitely larger than has ever been made even since the railroads seem to have obtained a mastery and control of the Post-Office Department; it would make the increase for the present year $1,600,000, the main portion of which would inure to the benefit of the railroad companies of the country.

Now, sir, while I am in favor of paying to the railroad companies a reasonable amount for the transportation of the mails, I am not willing that they shall receive for the transportation of the mails a larger amount than they would have received with the same capacity of cars for the transportation of passengers. They received, sir, more for the transportation of the mails than they would receive from a car of similar size filled with passengers and filled to the utmost capacity. Such is the fact, and any person would suppose that the passenger traffic was the most profitable traffic in which a railroad company could engage.

But, sir, it has been ascertained since that unhappy letter was read in the Senate that the railroad companies have obtained so complete a control over the transportation of the mails that they are able to fix their own terms, and to make the transportation of the mails the most profitable branch of their business and traffic.

I trust, sir, that the gentleman from Minnesota will not press his proposition, knowing as he must do that it would furnish the money to increase still further the subsidies to railroad corporations.

Mr. DUNNELL. Although it is not exactly in order, I wish to say a single word more. I have made a motion to increase this appropriation for the inland mail service because, under the administration of the Post-Office Department for the last year, with the appropriations made for that service, the Department has been compelled to strike at those portions of the country that ought to be spared. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] has replied that the transportation of the mails in the State of Minnesota costs more than the Government receives from their transportation. Sir, that has been true of every frontier State at some time in its history. And, Mr. Chairman, while I vote for retrenchment in every other Department readily and promptly, I do insist that the Post-Office Department, that comes home to every home in the country, the most beneficent branch of the Government, is just that branch of the Government that should be liberally provided for. I am not anxious, for one, that the Post-Office Department shall pay its expenses. Let it be made efficient and to the fullest extent beneficent to the people. I receive every week from my constituents letters stating that they are now receiving one mail a week where they formerly received two or three, and that from districts which are well settled and populous. We are compelled to feel the effect of the retrenchment in this Department. If the new Postmaster-General seeks glory by retrenchment, I simply ask him not to let the frontier portion of the country suffer solely and alone from that retrenchment. Let there be retrenchment in the other portions of the country—in the Eastern States and in the large cities. I am not unwilling that the amount paid to the railroad companies of the country shall be reduced; but I say that we ought not to lessen the ability of the Government to furnish reasonable mail facilities to the frontier portion of the country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The question was taken; and the amendment of Mr. DUNNELL was not agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to have the gentleman who has charge of this bill state to us how much we expended during the year that we have full returns from—the year 1873—for this service, and why the necessity for this increase. In that year there was less than $13,000,000 expended.

Mr. TYNER. What year is that?

Mr. RANDALL. The year 1873; the amount is $13,635,000.

Mr. TYNER. That is correct.

Mr. RANDALL. I would like to know the reason of this large increase of $4,000,000 which is proposed in this bill.

Mr. KELLOGG. Is the amount in this bill as much as the estimate?

Mr. TYNER. One thing at a time.

Mr. KELLOGG. That is right; I will agree to that.

Mr. TYNER. The expenditure of 1873, as stated by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. RANDALL] was over $13,600,000. The appropriation for the current fiscal year was $16,400,000. Of that increase between $1,600,000 and $1,700,000 went to make up the amount necessary to pay railroads under the law of 1873 readjusting the mode of compensating them for carrying the mails. Therefore, if the gentleman will add to his $13,635,000 about $1,700,000, and ascertain the total, then he may consider all which is here proposed over and above that total as what has become necessary by reason of the actual growth of the country and the increased lines of railroad.

Mr. RANDALL. I see that by the appropriation of last year the amount was $16,400,000.

Mr. TYNER. That is correct; and we propose to add just 7 per cent. only to that amount.

Mr. HOLMAN. For the purpose of accomplishing the object which the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. DUNNELL] has in view, I will move to add to this paragraph this proviso:

Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be applied to increase the compensation to any railroad company for the transportation of the mails beyond the amount now received by such company.

Mr. TYNER. I raise the point of order on that amendment that it is contrary to existing law.

Mr. RANDALL. It is only a limitation upon the appropriation. I would say to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] that instead of the word "amount" he should use the word "rates."

Mr. HOLMAN. The rate is what the Postmaster-General thinks proper to pay.

Mr. TYNER. I withdraw the point of order; I see that this is but a limitation upon the appropriation.

Mr. HOLMAN. A word or two upon the amendment. This amendment does not cure the evil, as the gentleman perceives, because the railroads that were alleged by Giles A. Smith to have entered into that combination have, the most of them, if not all, received the additional amounts which it was proposed by him to secure for them. Gentlemen will discover that these favored roads have already received nearly $2,000,000 increase of the amount for transportation of the mails. I will state the exact amount, and will refer to table "F" page 183 of the last report of the Postmaster-General. Under this new programme for the benefit of the railroad corporations, they have already received an increased amount of $1,254,327.46. The amount they were receiving when that proposition was read in the Senate Chamber and startled the country, as I understand the facts, was $5,239,240. The amount they are now receiving under the allotment and subsidizing plan as it stands to-day is $6,493,756.68.

The only effect of my amendment would be simply to prevent that scheme of fleecing the Treasury extending any further than has already been accomplished. I trust the day will soon come when Congress will rise up to the emergency and compel these corporations to transport the mails of the country at fair and reasonable rates, and not to assume to dictate the terms upon which they will make that transportation. I am certain that even if this unpretending amendment is adopted the Postmaster-General, who now possesses the confidence of the country—and it is a source of infinite satisfaction to every citizen that a Department so important to the country should have at its head a gentleman whose integrity no one can call in question—will be enabled to pay these railroad companies a fair compensation, and there will be enough left to extend the postal service over the comparatively sparsely settled sections of the country, and enable us in our several districts to obtain the increased facilities which our increased wants require.

Mr. DANFORD. Does not the gentleman recognize the fact that the large increase in the amount paid to railroad companies in the last two years is owing entirely to the change of the law compensating them passed in 1873? And is it not by reason of that law rather than by reason of any combination on the part of the railroad companies or others who may be seeking to defraud the Government that the increased amount has been paid to them?

Mr. HOLMAN. My friend will remember that it was the enactment of that law that induced the post-office official to whom I have referred to leave his place in the Post-Office Department. It was to accomplish the enactment of that law that he did so, for the law conforms exactly to his programme which he issued and to the circular which was read in the Senate Chamber a few years ago. Within twelve months after the time when that arrangement was first disclosed (and that is the most remarkable thing about it) the law to which my friend refers was enacted. And under the power conferred upon the Post-Office Department by that law, by the pressure and demands of the railroad companies themselves, this enactment has been brought about.

Mr. DANFORD. Then, Mr. Chairman, it is the law that the gentleman complains of, not an unfair or dishonest construction placed upon it by the Post-Office Department.

Mr. HOLMAN. The law does not fix the rate. My point is that the law authorized the fixing of rates by the Post-Office Department, and under this general power to adjust the amount to be paid to the railroad companies this increase has occurred. It is not Congress that fixes the rates.

Mr. DANFORD. Does not the law limit the Postmaster-General in the fixing of these rates?

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir. I undertake to say that practically there is no limitation. It was somewhat difficult to fix a limitation. Congress was obliged to leave this matter in a great degree to the discretion of the Department; but the mistake of Congress was in leaving the Post-Office Department, in a matter so important to every citizen, at the mercy of the railroad corporations; so that we have had them threatening that they would not carry your mails unless you increased their compensation.

Mr. TYNER. The effect of the amendment of my colleague, if it be adopted, will be to prevent any increase of compensation to a very considerable number of railroad companies in the country that never have entered into any combination. In other words, if there has been any such injustice as that complained of by my colleague, it is an injustice that has been taken advantage of by a number of railroad companies in the country, while there are other companies that never did enter into any combination, and never had anything whatever to do with the passage of the law increasing compensation.

Again, sir, during the present year the contract term for carrying the mails will expire on a very large number of railroads. Under the law the Postmaster-General, in ascertaining how much these companies shall have under a new contract, will be required to apply the provisions of the law; that is, to take into consideration the weight of the mails, and in some instances the amount of car space occupied; and if upon such an application of the provisions of the law any railroad companies should be entitled actually and honestly to additional compensation, the amendment of my colleague would entirely cut them off. Surely he does not intend to do any injustice of that kind to the railroad companies.

Mr. HOLMAN. But my colleague will remember that these same railroad companies to which he now refers are now getting even a larger compensation than they received during the entire period of the war for similar service.

Mr. TYNER. But the compensation has only been adjusted upon about four hundred and sixty or four hundred and seventy of these railroads. There are two or three hundred others in the country upon which there has been no readjustment of pay; and these are the smaller railroads—those that never had anything to do with the combination, if a combination did exist. I make this point for my friend to think about.

Now, a single word in regard to that combination. I am sorry that I am compelled to refer to it again. It was dragged into the debate last year by my colleague. It has been thrown into the debate here again this year. I am not disposed to say a single word in answer to what has been said on this point, except this: That if Giles A. Smith, who was at one time Second Assistant Postmaster-General, did, after resigning that position, enter into a collusive arrangement with the railroad companies by means of which he was to have a certain percentage if he succeeded in getting through a law that would increase the pay of those railroad companies, that arrangement was exposed in the Senate one year ago, if I remember correctly, before any law upon this subject was passed; and it was exposed also, if my recollection is not at fault, in this House. It was exposed, I know, in the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, of which I was then a member. Now, will my colleague say that the gentlemen in the House and Senate who after that exposure voted for the law directing the manner in which railroad companies should be paid and the mode of computing their compensation entered dishonorably into such arrangement; that they were actuated by dishonest and corrupt motives? If my colleague wants to make such an application of his remark to gentlemen with whom he was associated during the last Congress—his associates in this House and members of the Senate—I give him the floor to do so, because I would not be in the position of making any such insinuation.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not understand the last remark of my colleague.

Mr. TYNER. That my colleague may understand it, I ask him, does he mean to say that the gentlemen in this House or the Senate who voted for the passage of the law of 1873 were actuated at all by corrupt motives which were suggested to them by Giles A. Smith or anybody else?

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not my colleague know that I stated simply that—

Mr. TYNER. If my colleague—

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope my colleague will allow me to finish my remark. I have simply stated that the programme contemplated by the circular read in the Senate was in effect accomplished by the enactment of the law of 1873. I have not intimated that either the House or the Senate was improperly influenced in the enactment of that law. On the contrary, as I have said, the only defect in that law was that it left the Post-Office Department completely at the mercy of the railroad corporations.

Mr. TYNER. Then, Mr. Speaker, the indictment of my colleague is simply this, that a man who had happened once to be Assistant Postmaster-General did enter into an arrangement with certain railroad officers throughout the country, (and a portion of those whose names were mentioned declared afterward that there never had been any such arrangement,) did enter into an arrangement with certain railroad companies of the United States to get a law passed by means of which there should be a readjustment of their pay. That is the first count of my colleague's indictment. Suppose they did so; suppose there was no corruption connected with that arrangement, I ask what there would be wrong in such an arrangement?

The law providing the manner in which the railroad companies should be compensated was passed nearly a year after the exposure of this matter to which my colleague has referred. The facts were within the knowledge of the House and Senate, and yet the necessity of changing the law so as to do justice to the Department and to the railroad companies induced a majority of the House and Senate to pass that law.

Now, my friend says that his only objection to this law is that it practically places it beyond the power of the Postmaster-General to determine or fix the compensation of the railroad companies. What does the law do? I am sorry, without taking up too much of the time of the committee, I cannot send the law to the Clerk's desk and have it read. I will do so, however, if any gentleman requires it. I say this: that the law simply provides that the Postmaster-General shall pay railroad companies for the weight of mails they carry over their roads. In other words, it provides that the Government shall pay them for what they do and nothing else. If that is injustice either to the Department or railroad companies, the profound learning and acumen of my colleague may enable him to point it out to this committee.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 77; no quorum voting.

Mr. HOLMAN. There should be a quorum present on a question involving a million dollars, and I therefore insist on a further count.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints Mr. TYNER and Mr. HOLMAN tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 45, noes 103.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For engraving, printing, and binding drafts and warrants, $3,000.

Mr. PLATT, of New York. I move to insert the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all merchandise or samples sent as third-class matter shall be open at one side or end, so that the contents are exposed to the view of postmasters; and all such not so exposed shall be subject to letter postage.

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point that changes existing law and is therefore not in order. It is new legislation, and is not in order under the rules.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules the amendment out.

The Clerk read as follows:

For advertising, $100,000: Provided, That hereafter the mail lettings for the States of Maryland and Virginia and for the District of Columbia shall not be advertised in more than one newspaper published in the District of Columbia, nor at prices exceeding the regular and ordinary rates charged by such newspaper to other advertisers; and so much of section 3826 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as refers to the publication of advertisements in newspapers be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. MERRIAM. I move to add the following proviso.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That mail lettings in every State outside of the States of Maryland and Virginia shall be advertised in one newspaper published in the congressional district where such mails are to be carried, and that notice of such lettings shall be prominently posted in each office where such lettings are to be made.

Mr. TYNER. I make the point that amendment is not in order, as it changes existing law.

Mr. MERRIAM. I wish to say a word on it before the point of order is made.

Mr. TYNER. I do not object, but will reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules the amendment out.

Mr. CONGER. I rise to a point of order on the last portion of the paragraph just read, which reads as follows:

And so much of section 3826 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as refers to the publication of advertisements in newspapers be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. CONGER. That is in conflict with existing law and is therefore not in order.

Mr. TYNER. Under a suspension of the rules on last Monday that was made in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CONGER. The Chair will hear my point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. CONGER. The rules were suspended only to permit this proposition to be offered and not to make it a part of the bill. The rules were suspended only for its introduction and consideration in committee.

Mr. GARFIELD. And that has been done and the proposition has been passed upon.

Mr. CONGER. O, no.

Mr. TYNER. It is not necessary to interpose that point of order. The Chair will find by looking at the resolution adopted under a suspension of the rules last Monday this is in order.

Mr. RANDALL. The amendment is in the precise words of that resolution, as I remember it.

Mr. CONGER. It would give the Committee on Appropriations power to change the law instead of the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. As the resolution adopted by the House will govern a number of amendments, the Clerk will have it read.

The Clerk read as follows:

AMENDMENTS TO POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLATT, of New York. I am instructed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads to move that the rules be suspended and the resolution adopted which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That when the bill making appropriations for the support of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1876, shall be pending in the Committee of the Whole House it shall be in order to consider propositions to change existing laws as follows, namely:

"First. Fixing salaries of postmasters and the mode of computing same.

"Second. The manner of paying railroad companies for carrying mails, so as to authorize the Postmaster-General to pay the expenses of taking weights of mails on railroads out of appropriations for inland mail transportation.

"Third. So as to allow the Postmaster-General hereafter to pay experts and others employed on the preparation and publication of post-route maps out of appropriations for preparing and publishing such maps.

"Fourth. So as to regulate the manner of advertising proposals for mail lettings in certain States, and to repeal the law requiring all advertisements, notices, &c., to be published in three daily papers in the District of Columbia.

"Fifth. Regulating the manner of keeping, in the Sixth Auditor's Office, accounts for expenditures for Post-Office Department."

Mr. CONGER. My point of order is that the rules were so suspended as to make it in order to offer this proposition in the Committee of the Whole, to introduce it for consideration, but that did not give the Committee on Appropriations the power to so frame the bill as to include this proposition without consideration or action in the House; otherwise the Committee on Appropriations would have the power itself to decide what is proper legislation under that rule. Exception was not taken to the others, but my point of order is made here.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules the proposition in the bill, to which the gentleman's point of order refers, in order under the resolution adopted by the House authorizing such a proposition should not be considered, and it is immaterial whether proposed by a gentleman on the floor or reported by the Committee on Appropriations. The Chair overrules the point of order of the gentleman from Michigan. The Chair is inclined to think the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MERRIAM] may have been in order under this resolution.

Mr. TYNER. I said I would reserve the point of order until the gentleman from New York was heard on his amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York to offer his amendment.

Mr. MERRIAM. I offer the following.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 131:

Provided, That mail lettings in every State outside of the States of Maryland and Virginia shall be advertised in one newspaper published in the congressional district where such mails are to be carried, and that notice of such lettings shall be prominently posted in each post-office where such lettings are to be made.

Mr. MERRIAM. Mr. Chairman, my own experience in my own district has led me to believe that if we communicated directly with the people who carry the mails we could save $1,000,000 out of the $17,500,000 which are paid for inland transportation of the mails. In my district—and I believe it is so all over the United States—there is a certain class of men whose entire business it is to take speculative contracts. They bid for all mail contracts. After getting them, they go back to the people and sub-let them, and make fortunes out of the business.

The reason why the people who carry the mails cannot come in and compete is because they never know where and when the lettings are to be made. In the State of New York I understand there are five newspapers in which the lettings are advertised; usually in one newspaper in the city of New York and others in large cities elsewhere. Now, it is not common sense to suppose that the small mail carriers throughout the State of New York ever see or ever hear of those newspapers.

The point that I want to make is simply this, that there should be some means whereby the fact that these lettings are to be made will reach these people, so that they may come in as bidders. I think we could save a million of dollars every year by doing it which now goes into the pockets of speculative bidders.

My proposition is that one newspaper in every district where the lettings are to be made should advertise these lettings and that notices of these lettings should also be placed prominently in the principal post-offices in the district where the mails are to be carried, so that the fact may come to the knowledge of the people who are ignorant under the present law and mode of advertising as to the manner and time of letting, and who are now obliged to go to the men who have taken these contracts with no intention themselves of ever carrying the mails one rod, only intending to let them to some other person at a higher price and make all the money themselves, which is very large on most of the routes. Besides, the people are never so well served when the small sub-contractors are obliged to pay so large an advance over the speculators' bids as to gain little or no profit from the work they do. It is the cause of the constant annoyance and inconvenience the people are subjected to all over the country.

Mr. TYNER. If it is necessary to answer the suggestions made by the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MERRIAM,] I will say that the committee have recommended an appropriation of $100,000 to cover the expense of advertising under the existing law—the law requiring that proposals for carrying the mails shall be advertised in five newspapers in each State where the lettings are to be made. Now, in the State of New York, under the existing law, these mail lettings are published in five newspapers.

Mr. MERRIAM. And nobody ever sees them except the speculative bidders.

Mr. TYNER. But if the amendment of the gentleman from New York should prevail, it would require the letting to be published in thirty-three newspapers of that State at an expense seven times as great.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I beg leave to say right in this connection that if the amendment should prevail, instead of a hundred thousand dollars it will cost from six to eight hundred thousand dollars a year to pay for the cost alone of advertising mail-routes.

Mr. DUNNELL. I would like the gentleman from Indiana to explain how he makes that out. These advertisements are now published in one hundred and eighty-five newspapers. There are two hundred and ninety-two members of this House, and as many congressional districts. I would like the gentleman to explain, if $100,000 will pay for this printing in one hundred and eighty-five newspapers, how it will cost six or eight hundred thousand dollars to do the same printing in two hundred and ninety-two newspapers?

Mr. TYNER. If any gentleman on this floor has taken the trouble to ascertain what is the average number of routes per State, he can easily ascertain the additional cost by adopting this amendment. The estimate I make now is a random guess, but I think it will cost at least half a million dollars.

Mr. MERRIAM. That would be $2,000 for each congressional district. I believe it can be advertised in each congressional district for $100,000.

Mr. TYNER. Now, let me say one word as to the utility of this. My own opinion is that very little is accomplished by advertising mail lettings in newspapers. I am a little skeptical as to whether anything of consequence is gained by this advertising. The Post-Office Department publishes a pamphlet containing everything that is contained in the newspaper advertisements and other instructions besides. These pamphlets are sent to the post-offices at the termini of every mail-route and to every intermediate post-office along the mail-route where these mail lettings are to be made; and it is only rarely the case that contractors resort to newspapers for information. Most generally they go to the postmasters in the immediate vicinity, and there inquire for these pamphlets and ascertain what they desire to know in connection with the proposals.

Mr. RANDALL. Then this item ought to be struck out altogether.

Mr. MERRIAM. I desire to say only a word in answer to what the gentleman from Indiana has stated. There are now lettings advertised in two hundred and twenty newspapers, as I understand from the report before me. Under the proposition I make they would be advertised in two hundred and ninety-two; only seventy-two more newspapers than at present. Now, what I claim is this: that by the means I propose we come directly to the people who are carrying the mails, while under the present plan the people who carry the mails never see the city papers, and you throw the money away. It will undoubtedly cost less to advertise in two hundred and ninety-two country papers than in two hundred and twenty papers of our large cities, because the advertising rates of country papers is very much less than those of city papers.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, under the law as it stands now I believe a mail contractor who proposes to take a contract for carrying the mails from the Department is required to deposit a certified check for a certain amount. I find it asserted all over the country, in the newspapers of the country, that the effect of that law is to drive away from the Department the small bidders who are perhaps unable to furnish a certified check to that amount, and to place this whole business of carrying the mails in the hands of companies organized in the Eastern States and cities. Now, as my friend and colleague on the committee from Indiana has fully investigated this question, I desire to ask what, in his opinion, is the effect of this law; whether it drives the carrying of the mails and this contract business necessarily into the hands of contractors organized for that purpose in the older States and cities of the Union and who now do the service all over the Western States, giving no chance to the poor men who desire to engage in this business? I ask the question, sir, because my colleague has investigated the law and the facts in relation to this matter and has been connected with the Post-Office Department ever since he has been in the House and before that, and knows all about it.

Mr. TYNER. I answer the suggestion of my friend from Missouri, by saying that the provision of law to which he referred is one which seemed to be demanded by experience, in order to break up the vicious system of straw-bidding. That was the purpose of requiring certified checks to be deposited with the bids where the bids were over a certain sum.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. Five thousand dollars?

Mr. TYNER. Yes, sir, $5,000. Now, it is only necessary for me to say that by reason of that provision of the law and other provisions of the law which have thrown hedges about the letting of contracts on large routes throughout the western territory and elsewhere in the country, the saving to the Post-Office Department has been enormous.

Now, all that the gentleman from Missouri has to do in order to ascertain the effect of existing law upon this system of straw-bidding on the leading routes known as "star service" is to refer to the last page of the report from the Post-Office Department which the Committee on Appropriations has submitted with this bill; and if he will read the last paragraph, the whole thing is explained there in a few words. And, Mr. Chairman, for the information both of the gentleman and of the committee, I will ask the Clerk to read the last clause of the report; and I ask the committee to pay strict attention to the reading of the paragraph, for it is from a report submitted by the Post-Office Department to the Committee on Appropriations.

The Clerk read as follows:

From the above statement it will be seen that during the former contract term the Department paid $2,215,519.98 for 77,681 miles once a week each way, equivalent to 8,078,824 miles annual transportation, and to 27⁴⁹/₁₀₀ cents per mile; while during the present contract term it has paid only $1,515,623.40 for 82,622 miles once a week each way, equivalent to 8,330,288 miles annual transportation, and to 17⁹⁸/₁₀₀ cents per mile, showing an increase of 4,341 miles weekly service, equivalent to 451,146 miles annual transportation, at a decrease in aggregate cost of $699,891.58, a saving of 9⁴/₁₀₀ cents per mile, or 55.64 per cent.

Respectfully submitted,

JOHN L. ROUNT,
Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I desire to explain to the House my object in asking the question. This is a question which has been often raised in my section of the country, and I desired to bring before the country the exact condition of the law to-day. I was myself satisfied about it before.

Mr. TYNER. The law to which my friend from Missouri has referred is only one of many provisions of law that have resulted in a saving to the Post-Office Department of 54.64 per cent. on the cost of the transportation of the mails in the Pacific section of the Union. That at once answers the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. STOWELL. I move to strike out the last word; and I would state for the information of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MERRIAM] that this same proposition was made last winter to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and they investigated the subject and corresponded with the Post-Office Department in regard to it, and Mr. Rount, the Second Assistant Postmaster-General, made an estimate of the cost of the plan proposed by the gentleman from New York for the advertisement of these mail lettings, and upon his statement the proposition was reported upon adversely by the committee. From the record I find that the cost last year of advertising was $132,000, and that to advertise in the way proposed by the gentleman from New York would cost $497,000; an increase of $365,000, or of 150 per cent.

Mr. MERRIAM. That is an entire mistake.

Mr. STOWELL. That is the increase that would result from the plan proposed by the gentleman from New York. In most of the States, or in nearly one-half of the States, the advertising is done in but two papers. For instance, in Rhode Island, Delaware, and some of the smaller Eastern States, and in most if not all of the eleven Southern States, this advertising is done in but two papers in the State. Under the plan of the gentleman from New York the advertising would be done in some three or four hundred papers in the country, whereas it is now done in about one hundred papers.

Mr. MERRIAM. I presume there must be some mistake in that statement.

Mr. STOWELL. That was the statement of Mr. Rount.

Mr. MERRIAM. We have all studied arithmetic some. There are two hundred and ninety-two members of this House, and my proposition is to advertise in one paper in each district. We are now advertising in one hundred and forty papers, and the advertising is done in the large cities of the country, where the papers charge four times as much as would be charged by the papers in the interior districts. I can do this advertising in two hundred and ninety-two papers, so far as the State of New York is concerned, for 25 per cent. less than is now being paid for it. The advertising is now being done in the most expensive papers. We can certainly afford to advertise in one newspaper in the district where these small routes are.

Mr. STOWELL. The gentleman from New York is mistaken as to the number of papers we are advertising in at present. In all of the eleven Southern States the number of papers is limited to two each; so that instead of advertising in five papers in a State, the advertising is done in but two papers. I think the gentleman will find that the Post-Office does not advertise in more than one hundred papers.

Mr. MERRIAM. I think we can save at least $1,000,000 by coming directly in contact with the people who carry the mails. And if so, should we not do it rather than support in luxury a lot of sharks who do not carry a letter in a life-time?

Mr. RANDALL. I move to amend the pending paragraph by striking out $100,000 and inserting $80,000, the amount which was appropriated last year.

Mr. TYNER. The gentleman from Philadelphia, [Mr. RANDALL,] I think, will see the necessity of withdrawing his amendment if he will look at the report. There are two or three mail lettings in several of the States during the present year, and the advertising will be more than last year. The Postmaster-General has sent to the Committee on Appropriations a statement showing the necessity of providing for a deficiency for the current year.

Mr. RANDALL. I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. STOWELL. I will withdraw my formal amendment.

The question was upon the amendment moved by Mr. MERRIAM.

Mr. CONGER. I move to strike out the last word. The pending proposition requires that the printing of these advertisements shall be only in one paper in the district where the routes are. Under the present law it is required that all the lettings in the State shall be published in five papers. The expense of printing all the lettings in the State in five papers of the State is already provided for. In some States there are only one or two congressional districts. Therefore there is an inequality in the publication of these lettings in five papers in States of one or two districts, whereas in other States, where there are ten or twenty or more districts, all the lettings in the State are to be published in but five papers. By this amendment only the lettings in a congressional district are to be published in a paper in that district. In my opinion the amount of printing would be very much less under that system, and the matter would be brought to the notice of the people who might desire to enter into these contracts much better by this method than it is by the other. I think the expense certainly cannot be greater than it is now, and the inequality of publishing these lettings in five newspapers in Delaware, for instance, with only one congressional district, and in only five newspapers in New York with its great number of congressional districts, is too apparent to need any comment.

Mr. TYNER. The gentleman overlooks the fact that the law requires the advertisement to be made in "not exceeding five newspapers in the State," while in point of fact the Post-Office Department does not advertise in a number of States in more than one paper in a State. The gentleman from Virginia, [Mr. STOWELL,] of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, who has investigated this matter, says that during the last year the Department advertised in only about one hundred papers in the United States. The law does not require the Department to absolutely advertise in five papers in a State, but in not exceeding five papers. In point of fact, in Rhode Island, Delaware, and other smaller States it is the rule of the Department to advertise in but one paper.

Mr. CONGER. By this proposition the lettings in each district will be published in a paper in that district, and it will be but one publication in the State. Besides that, there is force in what has been said that the cost of advertising in the country papers will be from 25 to 50 per cent. less than it is in the city papers. I hear complaint continually that these advertisements are not brought to the notice of those who would make the bids if they knew of them. I have no doubt the Government would receive more bids and have more competition by the plan proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MERRIAM] than it does under the present system. Whether the law is carried out, whether the advertisements are published as the law permits them to be in five papers in a State or not, there certainly can be no impropriety in publishing the lettings for routes in a district in a paper in that district.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask my colleague a single question. Does he not think that the most economical as well as the most effectual mode of publishing mail lettings would be to require the Postmaster-General to have posted up in each post-office of the country the advertisement for the letting of that route to which the particular post-office belonged? Would not such a method reach the largest possible number of persons and at the least possible expense? For the publication in a newspaper may not reach one person in ten or twenty thousand. On the other hand, if the notice were posted up in the respective post-offices it would probably reach every member of that community.

Mr. TYNER. The suggestion of my colleague is a very good one; and the practice he suggests is frequently adopted by postmasters throughout the country without any instructions from the Department. It is a very common thing for a postmaster along the line of any particular route to clip out the advertisement of these mail lettings and post it up in a conspicuous place in his office.

Mr. MERRIAM. But if the postmaster should be in collusion with somebody else who desires the contract for carrying the mails, would he be likely to post up such a notice unless the law required it?

Mr. TYNER. Undoubtedly if a postmaster was in collusion with any one he might conceal from the public all that it was possible for him to conceal. But that is so violent a supposition that I do not stop to think of it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suppose that any amendment germane to the pending proposition would be in order. I ask to offer a substitute.

Mr. GARFIELD. There is already an amendment in the second degree.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to amend by providing—

That the Postmaster-General shall cause an advertisement of the mail lettings to be posted up in each post-office on each route to be let for at least forty days before the time for such letting.

Mr. KASSON. I think that the gentleman ought to provide further that the Postmaster-General shall furnish these lists to the postmasters, and that the latter shall be instructed to post them at all the post-offices in the State where the lettings are to be given; because persons frequently make contracts for routes distant from their own residences.

Mr. TYNER. It is no uncommon thing for one bidder to bid upon every route in a State. The suggestion of my colleague, [Mr. HOLMAN,] together with that of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] is a very good one; and while the adoption of the proposition on this bill will require a change of existing law, I hope there will be no objection whatever to inserting it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will withhold my amendment for the present until the pending amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MERRIAM] shall have been voted on.

Mr. MERRIAM. I withdraw my amendment, if I may be allowed to do so, in order that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] may be presented.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understood the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HARRISON] to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. MERRIAM.]

Mr. HARRISON. I understand that the amendment of the gentleman from New York is withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. It is; and the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee therefore falls. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Postmaster-General shall cause an advertisement of the mail lettings of each State and Territory and of the District of Columbia to be posted up in each post-office therein, to be conspicuously posted for at least thirty days before the time of such letting.

Mr. MAYNARD. The gentleman had better make the time forty-five days.

Mr. HOLMAN. I will modify my amendment by saying forty.

Mr. KASSON. The amendment merely specifies the minimum time; the Postmaster-General can make it as much longer as he chooses.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. HOLMAN as modified, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For miscellaneous items, $2,500.

Mr. PENDLETON. I wish to inquire whether the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] does away with the provision for advertising mail lettings in the newspapers?

Mr. TYNER. O, no.

Mr. PENDLETON. Then there will be the same number of newspaper advertisements?

Mr. TYNER. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not the province of the Chair to rule upon the effect of any amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I offered my amendment as a substitute.

Mr. TYNER. I did not so understand.

Mr. PLATT, of New York. I move to amend by inserting after the clause last read the following:

That from and after the 1st day of January, 1875, the annual salaries of the postmasters at the cities of New York, New York; Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; Boston, Massachusetts; Chicago, Illinois; Saint Louis, Missouri; Brooklyn, New York; Baltimore, Maryland; San Francisco, California; and Cincinnati, Ohio, shall be respectively as follows, to wit: Of the postmaster at New York, New York, $8,000; of the postmaster at Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, $6,000; of the postmaster at Boston, Massachusetts, $6,000; of the postmasters at Chicago, Illinois, and Saint Louis, Missouri, $6,000 each; of the postmasters at Brooklyn, New York, Baltimore, Maryland, San Francisco, California, and Cincinnati, Ohio, $5,000 each: Provided, That such salaries shall be paid from the moneys received at the post-offices at said cities from box rents, sales of postage-stamps, and other sources in excess of the expenditures allowed and made therefor for rent, clerk hire, fuel, lights, furniture, stationery, printing, and necessary incidentals.

SEC. 2. That so much of section 80 of the act approved June 8, 1872, entitled "An act to revise, consolidate, and amend the statutes relating to the Post-Office Department," inconsistent with the provisions of this act, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I make the point of order that the amendment changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point, as the rules were suspended to make this in order.

Mr. PLATT, of New York. Mr. Chairman, this is a matter which has been carefully considered by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads and has been unanimously reported by them. It will be claimed, no doubt, in the existing state of the Treasury and of the deficit in the postal revenues, that this is an inopportune time to increase salaries, but I am one of those who believe that the United States is always able to do justice to every one employed by it.

When we come to consider the inequality in the compensation of postmasters as now fixed by law, and of the obligations and responsibilities assumed by postmasters in large cities, it will be better understood why we ought to increase these salaries. By reference to the statement made up in the Post-Office Department, showing the salaries, the amount of bonds, number of employes, &c., of all postmasters whose salary exceeds $4,000, we find that in the city of New York, while the postmaster's salary is fixed at $6,000, the total amount of bonds given by him is $500,000, the number of employes six hundred and fifty-eight, and the total receipts for the fiscal year ending June 3, 1873, $2,710,190. By reference to the statement made by the postmaster of that city before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads in reference to registered packages, it appears that the number of registered packages passing through the mails during the last quarter of 1869 was 113,418, and, during the last quarter of 1873 202,871.

The fact should be borne in mind that the postmaster is held responsible by the Post-Office Department for registered letters lost through the carelessness of his employes. And this registered business has almost doubled since the 1st of January on account of the fee being reduced, and it is still increasing.

Another fact which it would be well for me to state in reference to the post-office of New York City not well understood, I think, by all members of the House, though many do understand, is that the predecessor of the present incumbent in the New York post-office was ruined financially by default of the superintendent of the postal money-order system in that office, the suit in reference to which is still pending in the courts. It seems to me the manifest justice and propriety of this will be seen by every member of the committee, and I hope the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. KELLOGG. Let me ask the gentleman from New York whether this proposition affects any post-office except the ones mentioned in the list?

Mr. PLATT, of New York. It does not.

Mr. MERRIAM. I wish to say a word on this subject, if the gentleman from New York will allow me.

Mr. COX. Who has the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York, [Mr. COX.]

Mr. MERRIAM. Permit me to say a few words before you begin your speech.

Mr. COX. I do not object if it does not come out of my time.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that that body insisted on their amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 3080) to authorize the Seneca Nation of New York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegany reservations and to confirm existing leases, agreed to the conference asked on the part of the House, and had appointed Mr. INGALLS, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. BOGY as managers of said conference on their part.

It further announced that the Senate insisted on their amendments to the bill (H. R. No. 2093) for the relief of General Samuel W. Crawford, United States Army, agreed to the conference asked on the part of the House, and had appointed Mr. LOGAN, Mr. SPENCER, and Mr. KELLY as managers of said conference on their part.

It further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

An act (H. R. No. 4444) to amend an act entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," approved June 20, 1874; and

An act (H. R. No. 2109) for the protection of United States custom-house in the city of Louisville, Kentucky.

It further announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

An act (S. No. 55) to authorize the purchase of a site for a public building at Topeka, Kansas;

An act (S. No. 861) for a commission to regulate and arrange tracks and depots of steam-railways within the city of Washington;

An act (H. R. No. 1019) to make an appropriation for public buildings at Covington, Kentucky;

An act (H. R. No. 1097) to donate to the State of Oregon a public building lot and material situated at The Dalles, Oregon; and

An act (H. R. No. 1270) to authorize the purchase of a site for a public building at Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. MERRIAM. The present postmaster of the city of New York, in whose interest my colleague [Mr. PLATT] is endeavoring so earnestly to enlist our sympathies, is one of the most efficient young postmasters we have ever had at that office. He is energetic, and has made many reforms acceptable to the people. But is this a good time for Congress to enter upon any extravagant disposal of the public moneys? I submit to the honorable gentleman, is the present condition of the Treasury such as to warrant us to increase official salaries? Our constituents have not memorialized Congress to hasten in that direction. Probably they have not heard how overburdened the Treasury is with money; and when they know of the anxieties and perplexities of the Ways and Means Committee to know just how and where to lay the taxes to make the people entirely happy, they will not memorialize us to make the postmasters of our large cities happy by many thousand dollars' increase of their pay. In some way or other they may become convinced that we would not perform a satisfactory duty by an extravagant and lavish use of their money after it is raised by new taxation.

I will ask my colleague [Mr. PLATT] if the salaries of the clerks in the New York post-office are unduly large when contrasted with the present pay of the postmaster?

Mr. PLATT, of New York. The salaries of the clerks are in proportion to the salary received by the postmaster, in proportion to the duties they perform.

Mr. MERRIAM. My colleague thinks, I suppose, that they do not get too much. I will renew my question. Will my colleague state if, in his opinion, the clerks receive too much salary?

Mr. PLATT, of New York. I will say to the gentleman from New York that I am not thoroughly posted in regard to the amount of salary received by the clerks in the New York post-office. But I will say this: that he is unable to obtain clerks who will give bonds in the amount necessary for the obligation they are to assume.

Mr. MERRIAM. I will ask the gentleman, then, if he does not think, if we are to make an appropriation for the New York post-office employes, that it should be applied to make up the difference to these young men for the loss by assessment that was made upon the clerks under the direction of the postmaster last fall, for whatever purpose, political or otherwise. I think if we are to raise any money out of the pockets of the people for those who do the work in the New York post-office, it should go to the clerks who have been assessed and deprived thereby of the salary they are entitled to by law.

Mr. PLATT, of New York. I hope my colleague has no personal feeling in the matter.

Mr. MERRIAM. None whatever. I appreciate the legitimate work Mr. Jones performs, but I do not consent to increase his pay while the clerks who do the heavy work are reduced in pay by assessment for partisan work, as was done not only in the post-office, but in the custom-house in New York, even upon the low-priced clerks and scrubbers.

Mr. PLATT, of New York. I believe the custom-house is not now under consideration.

Mr. COX. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the tenth line strike out "$8,000" and insert "$10,000."

Mr. COX. I have nothing now to do with the grievances of my colleague [Mr. MERRIAM] in reference to the Federal officers in New York. Whatever they may be, and I suppose they refer to the intermeddling of Federal officers, the nomination and election in his district last fall will be looked after at the proper time. They cannot be laid at the door of the accomplished and business-like postmaster of New York City. So much for that little squabble. It concerns that side of the House; not me, not now.

Now, sir, if we would raise the salaries of the various postmasters named in the amendment according to the expenses and receipts, the postmaster at New York would receive not merely $10,000, but much more; certainly at least $20,000. If his salary were to be raised in proportion to those of others named in the amendment, not to speak of others less than $4,000 salary, propriety and fairness would fix his salary at a higher rate than my amendment proposes.

In regard to that amendment, keeping out of view all extraneous matters, may I call the attention of gentlemen who are legislating intelligently to the facts? You will be surprised to learn that the postmaster in New York City only receives $6,000 per annum. Thirty-four years ago the postmaster received $50,000 to $60,000 per annum. At that time bonds were only required of him to the amount of $200,000. Now he has to give bonds to the amount of $1,200,000, and in certain cases he is otherwise responsible.

The last postmaster of New York was pecuniarily bankrupted because of a deficit or defalcation in the money-order business, amounting to $130,000, over which he had little control. The present postmaster is only saving himself and sureties, with nearly three millions of income and half that sum as disbursements, by rare vigilance night and day. Gentlemen should remember that he cares not merely for the city of New York and its environs, but for the business of the country which reaches out from and to New York—in fact, to all the world. Why, sir, what is the city of New York? So far as the post-office is concerned it is an immense hive of labor. On the western side its distribution of letters is fourteen miles long; on the eastern side nine, with a width of between two and three miles. Whereas thirty-four years ago thirty-six clerks were employed, now there are ten hundred and fifty-two clerks and carriers. They now handle, assort, and distribute fifty-two thousand letters every day, and sixty millions annually; one hundred and thirty thousand pounds of mail matter are daily sent out. The money-order department does a business of $32,500,000, or $95,000 per day. The sale of stamps per annum amounts alone to $2,000,000. This is an incomplete showing. It hardly shows the business of the city post-office proper; but there are besides twelve stations with their superintendents. These twelve New York sub-post-offices are at smaller salaries and expense than some other offices which gentlemen are interested in. Let me make a comparison. I give you the letters distributed per day from these various twelve stations, and compare the labor and salary with that of other offices:

Station A, superintendent's salary, $2,500; receives and delivers daily 17,000 letters and papers.

Detroit, Michigan, postmaster's salary, $4,000; receives and delivers daily 16,000 letters and papers.

Station B, superintendent's salary, $2,000; receives and delivers daily 8,000 letters and papers.

Richmond, Virginia, postmaster's salary, $4,000; receives and delivers daily 4,000 letters and papers.

Station C, superintendent's salary, $2,000; receives and delivers daily 9,000 letters and papers.

Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, postmaster's salary, $4,000; receives and delivers daily 8,000 letters and papers.

Station D, superintendent's salary, $2,500; receives and delivers daily 24,000 letters and papers.

Brooklyn, New York, postmaster's salary, $4,000; receives and delivers daily 19,000 letters and papers.

Station E, superintendent's salary, $2,200; receives and delivers daily 16,000 letters and papers.

Indianapolis, Indiana, postmaster's salary, $4,000; receives and delivers daily 8,000 letters and papers.

Station F, superintendent's salary, $2,000; receives and delivers daily 10,000 letters and papers.

Washington, District of Columbia, postmaster's salary, $4,000; receives and delivers daily 9,000 letters and papers.

Station G, superintendent's salary, $1,800; receives and delivers daily 7,000 letters and papers.

New Haven, Connecticut, postmaster's salary, $4,000; receives and delivers daily 3,000 letters and papers.

Station H, superintendent's salary, $1,800; receives and delivers daily 4,000 letters and papers.

Portland, Maine, postmaster's salary, $4,000; receives and delivers daily 3,000 letters and papers.

Station K, superintendent's salary, $1,600; receives and delivers daily 2,000 letters and papers.

Savannah, Georgia, postmaster's salary, $4,000; receives and delivers daily 1,500 letters and papers.

Station L, superintendent's salary, $1,600; receives and delivers daily 2,000 letters and papers.

Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania, postmaster's salary, $3,600; receives and delivers daily 1,700 letters and papers.

It will be perceived that station D does a larger business than the entire city of Brooklyn; that station F surpasses in business importance Washington City, and that such important points as Harrisburgh, Pennsylvania; Richmond, Virginia; New Haven, Connecticut; Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania; and Detroit, Michigan, are dwindled by comparison with subordinate and almost unnoticed neighborhood post-office stations in this great city; and lastly, that one station, D, does more delivery business than did the whole post-office department of New York City in the year 1836. In connection with the stations there are eight hundred and seventy-five lamp-post boxes; there are twelve daily mails dispatched between the stations and thirteen daily collections from the boxes; and a daily city delivery of nearly two hundred thousand letters and papers.

And yet there are men who grudge this excellent officer his quantum meruit for the supervision and responsibility of this grand business! And, sir, with all this immense labor, this immense responsibility, with an income amounting to three millions nearly and disbursements only one-half of that; and, further, when we do not ask you to take it out of the Treasury proper but out of the income of the office itself, gentlemen presume to say that we are raising exorbitant salaries out of the Treasury. I have opposed raising salaries. Rarely have I voted for them. But I appeal to any fair-minded man on either side of the House to say whether, because we have failed for years to equalize post-official salaries, (as they ought to be equalized,) the postmaster of New York should be treated with signal and conspicuous unfairness!

Hence, since we cannot or do not equalize them so as to lop off the excrescences and remunerate the healthy functions, let us at least do justice to the postmasters of these cities referred to in the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. PLATT.]

By a table which I have before me (Miscellaneous Document, No. 157, Forty-third Congress, first session) it will appear how much is required and so little paid in some places; how much paid and how little duty and responsibility in others. I wish the committee would give me leave to print this statement. It will show briefly what I have asserted as to the business of the city post-offices in the amendment; but as I cannot speak beyond five minutes, I must call attention to this table and pass on.

In the short time remaining to me all I can say is that there is more than three times the income derived from the post-office in New York than there is from the post-office in Philadelphia; three times as much as is derived from the post-offices in Boston or Chicago; and that there is eight times as much income derived from the office in New York as there is from the offices in Cincinnati, Saint Louis, and San Francisco, and twenty times as much as there is derived from the post-office in Brooklyn. Yet these post-offices are at $4,000 each singularly meager, and New York only $6,000.

But, sir, the rise of salary proposed by this proposition is not what it ought to be when you consider the duties that devolve upon this officer and the responsibility devolved upon him. When you see how often such business has failed to be properly administered; when you who live out of New York remember that nearly seventeen millions per annum of foreign letters come to New York to be handled, assorted, and sent to the country—to the States and localities in which all you gentlemen are interested, I ask you to pay an honest, fair equivalent for such services rendered and the responsibility assumed. Such an equivalent would not be less than $20,000, rating it by other salaries. But since I fear I cannot carry my amendment since I hear the murmurs and shrieks of local Representatives about me, I am bound to fall back on the amendment of the committee. I give notice, however, that there will be an equalization of salaries; if not now, not far off.

Mr. POTTER. Mr. Chairman, I cordially support the amendment offered by my colleague on my left, [Mr. Cox.] I quite appreciate what my colleague who introduced the original amendment [Mr. PLATT] has said about the condition of the Treasury, but whatever may be the condition of the Treasury it is always just and always wise to pay a fair day's wages for a fair day's work. Of course what will be fair wages must depend on the amount and value of the work performed. Now we do not pay to the postmaster at New York anything like a fair return for the services he renders and the responsibility he assumes. I concur in all that my colleague [Mr. Cox] has said about the importance of that office and its responsibilities. The postmaster in New York I believe to be a thoroughly energetic, efficient, and faithful officer. Such service as he renders there and such responsibilities as he undertakes could hardly be obtained in private employment for three times the salary the Government now pays him. In private business much higher salaries are often paid in New York to the cashiers and presidents of banks and other corporations who have no such important and multifarious duties to perform and no higher responsibilities resting upon them than attach to this officer. Clearly, private individuals who carry on important business understand the true value of the services they employ better than Congress can; and yet, sir, business men would never expect any one in New York to take such responsibilities and to render such valuable and extensive service there for any such sum as even the largest amount of salary proposed here for the postmaster of that city. It is the simplest and plainest justice, and as I think the simplest and plainest economy, to retain the services of such a man as the one now in office there by paying him a proper salary. I am heartily in favor of the amendment of my colleague, [Mr. Cox,] and trust it will be adopted.

A word further in relation to the suggestion of my other colleague, [Mr. MERRIAM,] that the salaries of the clerks in the post-office ought to be increased and not that of the postmaster. Sir, I rarely go to New York without being asked to recommend somebody to be appointed a clerk in the post-office there at the existing rates of pay. Of course I never make such recommendations, as I do not belong to the dominant party; but these claimants for clerkships at the present salaries press everybody who can be even supposed to have any influence whatever to secure these subordinate places.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I would ask the gentleman if there are not many men in New York who would be glad to take the office of postmaster at the present salary?

Mr. POTTER. No; not men who are competent and worthy to fill it.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. Is not the present incumbent competent, and does he not fill the office properly?

Mr. POTTER. He does so fill it, and may perhaps continue to fill it; but it is injustice to keep him there upon the present meager and insufficient salary. My colleague, [Mr. CHITTENDEN,] who is himself a business man, will, I hope, tell the committee, if they will hear him, what the merchants and business men of New York think about this matter. Because for the moment the Government secures the services of an efficient man at a grossly insufficient salary is no reason why the salary should not be increased to a more fitting compensation.

Mr. MERRIAM. I wish to correct an impression made by my colleague, [Mr. Cox,] who says this salary increase will not come out of our revenues, and he says we do not propose by this bill to increase the revenues of the Post-Office Department; but still he proposes to increase the pay of this postmaster. I cannot understand how that is possible unless we impose a new tax by increased box-rent. As no other tax is proposed in this bill we do, if we increase the salary of this postmaster, take it directly from the revenues of the Department.

Mr. KASSON. I understand the gentleman moved to strike out $8,000 and insert $10,000. I find on looking at the bill that the amount named in it is $8,000.

Mr. COX. It has been altered from $8,000 to $10,000. The printed bill is not correct.

Mr. KASSON. Is debate exhausted on the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not exhausted.

Mr. KASSON. Then I have a few words to say upon it. This first clause of the amendment provides for an increase of the salary of the postmasters in the great offices of the country. When the proposition was introduced on Monday to suspend the rules to admit an amendment to change the salaries of postmasters without naming the places, I for one entertained no doubt that the subject was to be considered with reference to a reduction as well as an increase of the salaries of these officers, and I desire to say that if it stands as now solely upon the point of increasing certain salaries, I must vote against it, and appeal to the Committee of the Whole to vote against that increase.

I suppose that we have the opportunity, without one particle of doubt, to save throughout the country nearly $1,000,000 upon the appropriations for salaries of postmasters. Take the States of the West particularly, and from personal knowledge I may include many of the Eastern States, where there are postmasters now receiving salaries of $4,000 each, and where this amount is nearly double the sum that is paid to the executive officers of the entire State—paid to these local officers who administer only a post-office each, covering a jurisdiction of six or eight miles square. I say that is an injustice. If you wish to economize in the post-office appropriation bill, it is in the direction of salaries that you can economize with perfect safety; and if the Committee of the Whole will save on the four-thousand-dollar salaries of postmasters in places of comparatively small population, then you can increase reasonably the salaries of postmasters of the largest cities and also ill-paid postmasters at smaller offices.

Mr. COX. You can move that amendment directly.

Mr. KASSON. I do not want to separate the two propositions. In the present condition of the Treasury we ought not to vote thousands of dollars increase of underrated salaries, and at the same time refuse to save money on the same principle by reducing the salaries of the overpaid officers. By parity of reasoning, as you increase the salaries of the large post-offices underpaid, you should decrease the salaries of the overated officers. I do not speak of postmasters who receive salaries of $2,000 or under, but of those where the Government pays the incidental expenses and leaves the large salary clear to the postmaster.

I remember that the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cox] some time ago thought that $10,000 a year was too much to pay to the Secretary of State of the United States, who practically controls the foreign affairs of two continents in their relations to this country. And now the gentleman is desirous of giving $10,000 to the postmaster of New York City because he has a great deal of detail work under him. The Secretary of the Treasury, who has the largest pecuniary charge of any man in the country, receives but $8,000 a year, and he has an immense number of employes under him. The sub-treasurer at New York, with an immense responsibility, vastly greater than that of the postmaster of New York City receives I think but $8,000 a year.

Now, in view of these facts, I appeal to the members of the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, at whose request we suspended the rules, and who must know that we would not have suspended them had we not supposed they intended to recommend a general decrease of salaries, to endeavor to save three-quarters of a million of dollars. If they will do that I assure them they will find no opposition in the Post-Office Department to cutting down a large number of salaries from $4,000 and under in the postal service of the country.

Mr. STANARD. I desire to say a word in favor of the amendment proposed by the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. It is recognized in the business world everywhere that in proportion to the amount of bond which a business man or an officer has to give so shall his salary be. It appears to me that in reference to the great cities of Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, Cincinnati, Chicago, Saint Louis, and some others, where the postmasters give from $500,000 to $1,000,000 bonds, a salary of $4,000 is not adequate for such responsibility.

The money-order business of the large cities now practically constitutes the post-offices of those cities large banking institutions; and the responsibilities attached to those large offices, to say nothing of the labor which must be performed there, and the fact that the postmasters of large cities must give such large bonds, will certainly appeal to the House in favor of the proposition to advance their salaries to a sum over $4,000 a year.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. SYPHER. I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of saying that I heartily agree with the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. KASSON,] who desires a reduction of the salaries of some postmasters, while an increase is claimed by others. I will show him how that reduction ought to be made, in proportion to the responsibilities of the several offices.

I find that in his own city of Des Moines, in the State of Iowa, the postmaster receives a salary of $4,000, and his bond is but $25,000. The postmaster in the city of New Orleans, a city of two hundred thousand inhabitants, receives the same salary of $4,000, but his bond is $200,000. Now, if the gentleman is willing to practice just exactly what he has advocated here, then let us reduce the salaries of the $4,000 postmasters in the small cities, whose bond is small, and make an addition to the salaries of those whose responsibility is great in proportion to their duties.

Mr. KASSON. I am willing to do the first, and the last also to a reasonable degree.

Mr. SYPHER. That is a fair proposition. What is the fact in relation to these large post-offices throughout the country? You cannot get a cautious man to take the office to-day, for the very reason that the responsibility is so tremendous compared with the small salary.

Mr. SPEER. What city is that where you cannot get a man to take the post-office?

Mr. SYPHER. I presume the gentleman is thinking of the next administration, when there will be plenty of applicants for all offices.

Mr. SPEER. I would like to know the place.

Mr. SYPHER. There has been difficulty in getting one in New Orleans capable of filling the place properly. To my certain knowledge there has been difficulty in getting a first-class man to take that position, for he is wholly at the mercy of his subordinates. It is utterly impossible for any postmaster in New York, Philadelphia, Saint Louis, Cincinnati, New Orleans, or other cities of that size to attend to all the details of their office. They are obliged to trust to their subordinates, and in many cases their subordinates steal the funds of the office and the postmasters are held responsible for them. We had a case of exactly that kind in New Orleans two years ago, where the postmaster, as no man denies, was thoroughly honest and upright, but his subordinates stole $18,000 and his bondsmen were obliged to make up the amount.

Mr. SAYLER, of Indiana. Congress frequently relieves public officers from losses of that kind.

Mr. SYPHER. Congress, so far as my knowledge extends, has not relieved any of this class of officers.

One gentleman, in discussing this subject, has referred to the responsibility of the Secretary of the Treasury. Sir, he has no responsibility whatever of this kind; and the sub-treasurers throughout the country have very small responsibility. Although the amount of funds they hold is large, the number of their employes is small; so that they can oversee them; they know who they are. But men who have subordinates under them to the number of one, two, or three hundred, and as in the case of the New York postmaster, a thousand, find it utterly impossible to look after all their employes and to see that they faithfully and honestly discharge their duties in the interest of the Government. I am in favor of the increase of salary here proposed.

Mr. GARFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment of the gentleman from Louisiana, [Mr. SYPHER.] Last winter the Committee on Appropriations made a somewhat careful examination in regard to postmaster's salaries. It was our opinion upon such examination that some of the postmasters in some of the largest cities ought to have increased pay; but it was also our opinion that there ought to be a readjustment of postmasters' salaries in not less than one hundred of the leading offices of the United States. At that time one of the impressions very distinctly made on my mind was that no offices in the gift of the Government are so nearly sinecures or pay a man so well for very little trouble as the $4,000 positions as postmasters.

A MEMBER. That is true.

Mr. GARFIELD. A man is appointed to a $4,000 post-office, with power to employ an almost unlimited number of clerks; he has as deputies men who are entirely competent to do the business for him; his rent is paid by the Government; his office is lighted and warmed at the public expense; and he has about one of the "softest" things in the way of a political office that I know of in the United States.

Mr. SYPHER. It may be so in Ohio; it is not so in our portion of the country.

Mr. GARFIELD. I speak with the list in my hand—a full list which I had before me when I had the matter under consideration last year.

Now, although it was not our business to do it, the Committee on Appropriations came very near submitting to the House a proposition that in cities of from twenty to forty thousand inhabitants the postmaster should receive $2,000; in cities of from forty to sixty thousand inhabitants, $2,500; in cities of from sixty to eighty thousand inhabitants, $3,000; and in cities of eighty thousand inhabitants and upwards, until we reached some such cities as the chief ones now under consideration, $4,000. We found that if such a measure should prevail, it would save between $350,000 and $400,000 annually in the expenses of the Post-Office Department.

Now, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads have introduced just one branch of that proposition, the part proposing to increase salaries, while they have omitted all that portion which would save the Government at least a quarter of a million dollars annually. I hope that any amendment raising a select set of salaries, while it does not readjust the pay of the whole class of postmasters, will not be adopted. This amendment merely makes an increase in the cases of a selected few, a part of whom doubtless ought to have their salaries increased in a general adjustment; but if this increase be once made, you will have lost the motive power for securing a readjustment of a large list of postmasters' salaries throughout the United States.

I am not prepared now to offer an amendment that would seem to me to cover the whole case; but I really believe that if any proposition of this kind be adopted we should take the whole list of postmasters and make a general change in their salaries. Whatever happens, I hope that the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] in its present shape will not prevail. The financial condition of the Government as well as justice to the whole post-office establishment forbids that we enter upon any increase of salaries now.

Mr. COX. I withdraw my former amendment, and now move to make the salary of the postmaster at New York $9,000. There is a sort of inequity—I had almost said iniquity—in the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. KASSON] and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] with reference to the salary of these postmasters. Those gentlemen admit that there is very great inequality in regard to this matter. There is, if I mistake not, a postmaster at Akron in the district of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] who has, I believe, only three clerks and gives bond in the amount of $10,000; and yet he has a salary of $4,000. Has any movement ever been made yet to cut that down properly by gentlemen so pertinaciously opposed to my amendment?

Mr. GARFIELD. In the first place, Akron is not in my district; and in the second place I have no knowledge of what the gentleman says.

Mr. COX. I thought that the gentleman as a member of the House of Representatives of the United States represented not only the whole State of Ohio, and the Reserve especially, but the United States generally. Judging by the way the gentleman sometimes talks, one would suppose he had a large district. But I was about to say, here are the cities of Cincinnati, Saint Louis, San Francisco, Baltimore, Brooklyn, Philadelphia, and New York where the expenditures are much less—perhaps one-half less—than the receipts, and where therefore the business will more than pay for any small increase of the postmaster's salary; and in these places the salary is only $4,000 each! I repeat that the people of the United States do not in fact bear the burden of these salaries, nor will they of the proposed increase. Yet the objection is made that we propose here a special increase, when we only propose to increase out of the local receipts! Is it fair to distort our amendment in that way?

If gentlemen are so economical, why do they not come in, as they can, under this resolution, and by this bill cut down these large salaries for the smaller offices?

Let me give the intelligent people of this House some examples. Take Elizabeth, New Jersey. The salary of the postmaster is $4,000, the receipts $16,507.01, and the expenditures amount to $8,055.67. Yet for that $16,000 receipts we pay that postmaster $4,000. Now go West to Saint Louis, and see. How does it stand there? At Saint Louis, with the same salary of $4,000 to the postmaster—and I do not know anything about the people who hold these offices—the receipts are $378,959.38 and the expenditures $150,465.73. There is a large balance of receipts over expenditures at that office out of which to pay adequate salary. Nevertheless the postmaster at Saint Louis only gets $4,000, the same as the little postmaster of Elizabeth, New Jersey. Yet gentlemen have been sitting here under this state of affairs many sessions and not a move to equalize.

Mr. NEGLEY. The postmaster at Pittsburgh, who employs one hundred and forty-seven clerks, gets only $4,000.

Mr. COX. The postmaster of Pittsburgh is in the same category. The income there is $193,136.69; expenses, $34,721.67; bond, $300,000, and salary, $4,000. Compare it with Petersburg, Virginia: salary, $4,000; receipts, $18,000; expenses, $9,000. Let me go further; this is pertinent. Take Norwich, Connecticut. I do not select with reference to any special locality. There the receipts are $21,440.53 and the expenditures $8,779.58, while the salary of the postmaster is $4,000; or take San Antonio, Texas, where the receipts are $13,403.93 and the expenditures $6,822.79, and where there is $4,000 salary. A number of others of the same class may be named. Go to San Francisco! There the postmaster gets only $4,000 salary, when the receipts are $356,041.11 and the expenditures are only $94,545.87. That postmaster only gets $4,000, when he has to give large bonds ($300,000) and is under great pecuniary responsibility. Was there ever such monstrous inequality in the adjustment of salaries? Yet when we try to rectify this we are met with opposition by gentlemen who have kept up this inequality for so many years.

Mr. MERRIAM. O, but you begin at the wrong end.

Mr. COX. You want to commence at the little end, by opposing a small and just increase. Before you get through, however, with this, if you have any good postmasters like ours at New York—valuable, responsible, and industrious; raised in the office, like the postmaster at New York; one who stays night and day at his post of duty, having the confidence of men of all parties—you will find a loss of valuable service if you do not remunerate justly.

What I ask is not merely to raise the salary of the postmaster at New York to a respectable standard, but to select the postmasters of the great cities in a similar case and do justice to them. As you will not reform now the system, and since you are negligent of a great duty, do justice at least to the postmasters at these main offices by giving them sufficient compensation. In conclusion I will say to gentlemen on the other side, that they can under motion to that effect, adopted last Monday, cut down the salary of the petty and overpaid officials everywhere if they please. Perhaps it is not for me, after my remarks to-day, to inaugurate the reform. We will see how the vote runs.

Mr. BECK. I rise to oppose the amendment. I do not think there is a postmaster in the country who ought to have $10,000. Your Cabinet officers only get $3,000 a year, and your Senators and Representatives only $5,000.

Mr. PLATT, of New York. Will the gentleman from Kentucky allow me to interrupt him by saying that the bill does not recommend any salary exceeding $8,000?

Mr. BECK. The present proposition is to make the salary of the postmaster at New York City $9,000, and I am opposing that amendment.

Mr. COX. I have put it at $9,000 and propose to take a vote on it.

Mr. BECK. The district judge in my State, and it is true I suppose in nine cases out of ten, gets only $3,500 a year. That judge in order to fill his position had to labor from ten to twenty years. He has the lives, liberty, and property of a million men at his disposal, and $3,500 a year is all the Government can pay him. A postmaster gets from four to eight thousand dollars a year because he has to give a bond to do his duty. If he is an honest man and intends to do it he will give any bond, and if he is not no bond will make him do it.

You now seek to increase the taxes upon the people to the extent of thirty-five or forty millions. You propose thereby to increase the price of tea, coffee, sugar, whisky, tobacco, and everything else which the laboring people of the country use. Yet you are not only going to keep up high salaries but to increase them. You propose to increase the salary of these postmasters beyond what your judicial officers receive and beyond what your Senators and Representatives get, beyond what the men get who have to run the machinery of the Government.

The reason why additional taxes have to be imposed is obvious. The Indian appropriation bill which passed yesterday is a specimen. We appropriate seven millions and a half of dollars, as the report of the Secretary of the Treasury shows, when two millions never reach them in any form. When you have got so many officers of the Army to act as Indian agents without a dollar of expense, yet to feed a great host of additional employes a million or two is to be squandered on them. And this is to be done when the post-office revenues are $29,000,000, as certified here to-day by the Postmaster-General, leaving a deficiency of seven and a half million dollars, although two years ago we were told by the then Postmaster-General that if you destroy the franking privilege we would have revenues enough for the post-office service without calling for deficiencies. And why are those deficiencies demanded? Because postmasters are getting all over the country from four to eight and ten thousand dollars apiece, doing work by clerks whom they employ at twelve or eighteen hundred dollars a year, and are merely political emissaries and nothing else.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending amendment is exhausted.

Mr. COX. I want to say to the gentleman from Kentucky that I did not favor the raising of these salaries of $4,000.

Mr. BECK. And they ought not to be raised.

Mr. COX. My proposition is an economical one if you only understood it aright.

Mr. BECK. I understand it perfectly; and I will say that $8,000 is enough for any postmaster.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment, which is that of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. Cox,] to strike out $8,000, and insert $9,000, so as to make the salary of the postmaster at New York $9,000.

Mr. PLATT, of New York. I ask unanimous consent to make an explanation in connection with my previous statement. I stated that this bill was reported unanimously from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. I wish to correct that statement by saying it was not reported unanimously by the committee, but unanimous consent was given to bring the bill up for consideration. There were members of that committee who were apposed to the bill.

Mr. SPEER. I ask that the pending amendment may again be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "$8,000" on line 10, and insert "$9,000;" so it will read "of the postmaster at New York, $9,000."

Mr. COX. I will withdraw that amendment and let the vote be taken on the committee's proposition.

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I renew the amendment, so that I may have the floor that I may say a single word about this matter.

Gentlemen upon the Committee on Appropriations have seen fit to reflect to some extent upon the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads because they have not proposed legislation by which these salaries could be cut down or equalized. As I read the law I do not conceive that any legislation is necessary; and if the committee will bear with me a moment I will read section 87 of the postal code, which provides how postmasters shall be paid and what clerks shall be paid and on whose order, and then we shall see where the fault lies, if anywhere for these abuses, if they exist. Section 87 of the postal code is as follows:

That the Postmaster-General may allow to the postmaster at New York City and to the postmasters at offices of the first and second classes, out of the surplus revenues of their respective offices, that is to say, the excess of box-rent and commissions over and above the salaries assigned to the office, a reasonable sum for the necessary cost of rent, fuel, light, furniture, stationery, printing, clerks, and necessary incidentals to be adjusted on a satisfactory exhibit of the facts; but no such allowances shall be made except upon the order of the Postmaster-General.

Now, what should be the practice under that section of the law? If a man has a $4,000 post-office, and only needs one or even more than one clerk, the discretion is given to the Postmaster-General to let him pay for his own clerks out of his $4,000 salary, because there is no provision of law giving him pay unless the Postmaster-General makes an allowance therefor. If in Des Moines, where my friend from Iowa resides, the postmaster has a salary of $4,000, and has seven clerks, there is a discretion under that law resting with the Postmaster-General whether the postmaster shall receive an allowance for any or all of said clerks. And my word for it, if the gentleman from Iowa goes and makes complaint, the allowance would be cut down. I apprehend, however, you will find the fact to be, where there are these first and second class officers, and where the postmasters get from three to four thousand dollars a year, you will find economical members of Congress besieging the Postmaster-General day after day and month after month to make allowances for these clerks where allowances ought not to be made. I venture to say if you will make inquiry you will find that to be the case. There is, then, no necessity for further legislation.

One word to my friend from Indiana, who has charge of this bill, on behalf of the Appropriation Committee. The gentleman said that it was not perhaps his province to offer this legislation. Let me say that there was one thing that was his province to do. If you will turn to lines 11 and 12, page 2, of the post-office appropriation bill, you will find this appropriation is sought to be made:

For pay of clerks for post-offices, $3,500,000.

It was your province to say $1,000,000 or $2,000,000, instead of $3,500,000, if you desired; because in the law there is no provision compelling the appropriation of $3,500,000 for this purpose. If these clerks receive too much, if too large an appropriation is made for the pay of clerks, cut down the appropriation, for there is no provision of the postal laws that require it to be made to this extent; or in other words, if the Postmaster-General is too liberal in his allowances to postmasters for clerk hire, cut down the amount of the appropriation for that purpose and let the postmasters pay their own clerks as they generally ought to do.

Mr. GARFIELD. I understand that the law authorizes the Postmaster-General to empower the officers under him to employ such clerks as in his judgment are necessary and under the law he has done his duty; and when he has done so his action becomes the law and the Committee on Appropriations follow it. If the gentlemen who have charge of the duty of making the postal laws think the law is not right in that respect, it is their business to change it.

Mr. KASSON. I desire to say that in my own town the postmaster receives a salary of $4,000 and employs four clerks.

Mr. KELLOGG. I rise to oppose the amendment. I want to speak only for about one-half of the five minutes allotted to me by the rules. I oppose the amendment simply for the purpose of saying this: that we could not inflict a greater injury and injustice on some of the post-offices of the country than by adopting the suggestion of the gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. Kasson.] When you strike at the salaries of the postmasters of the country simply because the population of your cities or towns is not more than twenty-five thousand, you forget that they may be large distributing offices, distributing the mail matter for a large portion of your territory and for different States. And the number of people in a town should not alone regulate the salary; the amount of business done and stamps sold or canceled is a better rule to govern the compensation. Now, sir, I notice, by referring to the report made to the committee in the first session of this Congress, that in Des Moines, the gentleman's town, the salary of the postmaster is $4,000, and he employs seven clerks to do his work. The next town on the list above this is Derby, in my own district, where the salary is $2,500, and the postmaster there employs only one clerk. In the post office at my own town, Waterbury, the salary is $4,000, and the postmaster is only authorized to employ two clerks. The office expenses in the gentleman's residence (Des Moines) are $1,677.22; while in Derby in the previous year they were less than $200, and in the town where I reside they were only $800, rent and all; and I believe they have a Government building in the gentleman's city of the residence in Iowa and have no rent to pay. Perhaps there is room for a reform there.

I do not blame my friend for it at all, for he may not control it; but a gentleman from Iowa in the other branch of this Congress who resides there has introduced a proposition to cut down the pay of all the poor clerks in the Departments here 10 per cent. If the gentleman will go with me in a proper reduction of such salaries as are now too high, and not make a sweeping reduction of all, right or wrong, I will strike hands with him for any proper reform; but I do say that it is wrong for us to attempt to legislate in regard to all the post-offices of the country in this manner without regard to the amount of business, and only in regard to population. I believe that the few offices included in this amendment ought to be paid at a higher rate of salary than others where the duties are less and the responsibility less, and I shall sustain the amendment; but where you attempt to cut down salaries, do it by a well-considered bill emanating from some proper committee; but do not bring in a bill here or an amendment which cuts down the salaries of all the postmasters of the country according to the number of population only, making a Procrustean bed for them all to lie in, without regard to the amount of business done or work performed or stamps sold or canceled in the different offices in the country.

Mr. KASSON. What the gentleman from Connecticut has said about his Derby postmaster is simply a proof of the propriety of my amendment. He does the work himself and is paid $2,500. Others who do little work themselves are paid $4,000. Where postmasters need it for the work of distribution of the mails, it is discretionary with the Postmaster-General to provide for the compensation of clerks. A friend has suggested to me an amendment providing that the salaries of postmasters in towns and cities having a population not exceeding forty thousand, according to the last census of the United States, shall be reduced by 25 per cent. upon the amount thereof; but this provision shall not reduce their compensation below $2,000, and shall not apply to postmasters receiving less than $2,000 per annum.

Sir, I repeat what I said last year, that you are paying many of the postmasters of small cities and towns throughout the United States nearly twice the salary that you pay in many of the States to your secretaries of state, auditors, and treasurers, and in some instances the judges of the supreme court. In my State you pay them nearly 25 per cent. more than the governor of the State receives. I say that it is a gross extravagance, and I hold that it is the positive duty of Congress to make a reduction of these expenses instead of levying new taxes to pay increased salaries to postmasters, and not to impose additional taxes to meet this unjustifiable increase of expenditures. Hence I oppose the increase of the pay of these officers, unless it is accompanied by a reduction where a reduction ought to be had. If you will agree to reduce where reduction is needed, I will consent to an increase where an increase is needed.

Mr. PLATT, of New York. Does the gentleman mean to say that the State officers to whom he has referred are paid too much?

Mr. KASSON. They are paid as much as the people are willing to give, and the postmasters of this class are paid more than the people are willing to give.

Mr. LAWRENCE. Will the gentleman from Iowa allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. KASSON. Certainly.

Mr. LAWRENCE. My friend is familiar with the working of the Post-Office Department and has had long experience in connection with it. I wish to inquire if the whole establishment could not be conducted for 66 per cent. of the present expenses?

Mr. KASSON. I do not think it can. I think with the present energetic Postmaster-General, if efficiently aided by Congress, you could conduct the operations of the Department for 80 per cent. of its present cost.

Many MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. CANNON, of Illinois. I withdraw the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. O'NEILL. I would like to propose an amendment. I move that the salaries of the postmasters in all the cities named after the city of New York in the amendment pending be made equivalent to the present salary of the postmaster in the city of New York; in other words, I propose that the salaries of these postmasters be fixed at $6,000 a year. I refer to the cities of Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Saint Louis, and the others named in the amendment. I propose that they shall all be fixed at the rate of $6,000 a year, and I do it because each of the postmasters in these cities does just exactly the same amount of duty as the postmaster in New York. The postmaster of Philadelphia is employed every hour and every moment of the day, and I might add every hour and every moment of the night. To be sure, the business of the Philadelphia office is not so great as that of the office in New York; but the postmaster at Philadelphia is occupied for as many hours as the postmaster at New York and he has fewer clerks to aid him. His responsibilities and duties are just the same, and he is just as fully competent to perform them as is the postmaster at New York or any other officer occupying a similar position. I would vote, of course, to increase the salary of the postmaster at New York to $8,000 with great cheerfulness; but I think the salaries of these other officers ought to be raised to the rate now paid to the postmaster at New York.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to know if it is now in order to give the poor letter-carriers a chance?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] moves an amendment to make the salaries of all the officers named in that amendment as that of the postmaster of New York at the present time.

Mr. NEGLEY. Including Pittsburgh?

Mr. O'NEILL. O, yes; and I propose that if the salary of the postmaster at New York is not increased, the salaries of these other postmasters shall be increased to $6,000 a year.

Mr. TYNER. I have sought the floor for the purpose of making an appeal to the Committee of the Whole to vote upon the pending amendment without further debate. If there is a disposition to do so I shall be entirely satisfied; if there is not, then I must ask the committee to rise to procure an order from the House to close debate.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition to close debate upon the pending amendment?

Mr. CONGER. I rise to oppose the amendment.

Mr. TYNER. I do not yield the floor.

Mr. CONGER. I have a right to oppose the amendment.

Mr. TYNER. I did not yield, except to permit the Chair to submit my proposition to the committee. I will now move that the committee rise for the purpose of getting an order to close debate.

Mr. CONGER. You cannot make anything by that. If you wish to prevent members expressing their views on propositions here by cutting off debate, you are mistaken. There are other ways in which we can prolong this matter.

Mr. TYNER. I have no disposition to do that.

Mr. CONGER. Then give a fair opportunity for debate.

Mr. TYNER. How much longer time is desired?

Mr. RANDALL. Say ten minutes.

Mr. TYNER. I will agree to that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to closing debate in ten minutes?

Mr. CLYMER. I object.

Mr. TYNER. Then I move the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to, and accordingly the committee rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McCrory reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the special order, being House bill No. 4529, making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. TYNER. I now move that the rules be suspended and the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of resuming the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill. Pending that motion, I move that all debate upon the pending proposition be closed in ten minutes.

Many MEMBERS. Five minutes.

Mr. TYNER. Well, I will say five minutes.

Mr. CLYMER. I move that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no; let us finish this bill now.

Mr. TYNER. We can get through with this bill to-night, I think.

Mr. SPEER. You cannot do that.

The SPEAKER. The House has ordered that the session of this evening shall be for debate only as in Committee of the Whole.

The question was taken upon the motion for a recess; and it was not agreed to upon a division, ayes 39, noes not counted.

The question was then taken upon the motion to close debate in five minutes in Committee of the Whole upon the pending proposition in the post-office appropriation bill; and it was agreed to.

The motion to suspend the rules and go into Committee of the Whole was then agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, (Mr. McCrory in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate upon the pending proposition in relation to the salaries of postmasters is limited to five minutes.

Mr. ROBBINS. I hope we will come to a vote. We have talked here about three hours and certainly cannot hear anything new about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. CONGER. The effort to increase the salaries of postmasters in the large cities is an effort to pay men a much larger price than their labor or their attention to their business deserves. The same law which gives them this increase of salaries gathers around them assistants, deputies, and clerks. They have no rent to pay, no clerk hire to pay out of their salaries, as the postmasters in the country have to do who receive smaller salaries. The country postmasters have to pay their own rent, their own clerks, and to perform actually just as much labor day by day as the postmasters in these large cities, whose assistants do all the work and carry on the machinery of the office, while the postmasters merely supervise the work of their subordinates.

That, however, is not my principal objection to this increase of salaries. One of the propositions made here is that this excess of salary shall be paid out of the box-rents of the offices. Now, it may perhaps surprise the Committee on Appropriations, the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and the members of this House to learn that there is no provision of law that I have been able to find, or so far as I can learn that exists, regulating the price of boxes in any post-office in the United States; nothing except the will of the postmaster. Every postmaster regulates the price of boxes in his own office. And it is proposed that he shall receive an increase, according to some propositions, of $2,000, $5,000, and in the case of New York, one proposition was to raise his salary to $10,000, and to pay the increase out of the box-rents.

I submit, in the first place, that a salary sufficient for all the service and all the diligence and all the judgment and all the care which any man is capable of bestowing upon his office is all that we ought to pay. Why should we give postmasters in these large cities more than we give to the heads of Departments, more than we give to our circuit court judges, more than we give to many other officers who have vast interests in their charge, and to which they have to devote all their time?

Even if this increase of salary is to be given, why should we empower the postmaster, for the sake of increasing his salary, to increase the price of the boxes in his office to every one using those boxes? I venture to assert that the letting of boxes in the post-offices in all the cities of this Union is an oppressive thing. It is at the will of the postmaster of the city, his action being revised sometimes by the Postmaster-General, but the matter being regulated always in the first instance at the will of the postmaster. To say that this power is abused, to say that proper returns are not made to the Postmaster-General, that a full account is not rendered to the Treasury of moneys thus received, would not be saying too much. But when it is proposed to couple with the present power of the postmaster in this respect a provision for an increase of his salary to be made up from charges upon the boxes, I submit that there will be under such a system even greater liability to abuse than at present.

The CHAIRMAN. By the order of the House debate on the pending amendment is now closed. The first question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. O'NEILL] to the amendment of the gentleman from New York, [Mr. PLATT.]

The amendment to the amendment was not agreed to.

The question then recurred upon the amendment of Mr. PLATT, of New York.

Mr. KASSON. I move to amend the amendment by adding thereto the following:

And the salaries of postmasters in cities and towns with a population not exceeding forty thousand by the last census of the United States shall be reduced by 25 per cent. on the amounts now authorized by law; but this provision shall not apply to the salary of any postmaster now receiving $2,000 or less nor reduce his compensation below $2,000 per annum.

Mr. PENDLETON. I make the point of order that this amendment proposes new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. Propositions on this general subject were made in order by the action of the House.

Mr. HOSKINS. I hope the amendment will not prevail.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is not in order.

The question being taken on agreeing to Mr. KASSON's amendment, there were ayes 30, noes not counted; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin, and Mr. KASSON were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 78, noes 98. So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. MERRIAM. I move to amend the amendment of my colleague [Mr. PLATT] by adding thereto the following:

Provided, That no assessment, directly or indirectly, shall hereafter be made upon post-office clerks for political purposes.

Mr. PARKER, of Missouri. I raise the point of order that that is new legislation.

The SPEAKER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. NEGLEY. I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. PLATT] by inserting after "Cincinnati, Ohio," the words "Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania."

Mr. SYPHER. And New Orleans.

Mr. HAZELTON, of Wisconsin. And Milwaukee.

The amendment of Mr. NEGLEY was not agreed to.

The question recurred upon the amendment of Mr. PLATT, of New York, which was again read.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I wish to call attention to the fact that the repealing clause of this amendment is not sufficient, because the act which it is proposed to repeal is now embraced in the Revised Statutes, and to make the repeal effectual, reference must be made to the section of that revision.

Mr. NEGLEY. Well, it is evidently the intention of the Committee of the Whole to vote down the whole proposition.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were ayes 31, noes not counted.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. KASSON. Before we pass from the paragraph in regard to advertising, I wish to call attention to the language of the repealing clause, which is this:

So much of section 3826 of the Revised Statutes of the United States as refers to the publication of advertisements in newspapers be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The effect of this clause, unless amended, will be to repeal the provision for advertising Government contracts generally by the Executive Departments, not alone the provision with reference to advertising mail lettings. I call attention to this point that the requisite amendment may be made.

The Clerk read as follows:

Office of the superintendent of foreign mails:

For foreign mail transportation, $300,000.

For balances due foreign countries, including unsettled balances due France, for the fourth quarter of the year 1869 and the first and second quarters of the year 1870, $80,000.

Mr. COX. I wish to offer the following amendment, to come in after line 101:

That no salaries shall exceed 25 per cent. of the gross revenue of the office; but this provision shall not reduce any salary less than $500.

Mr. GARFIELD. That amendment is not in order.

Mr. COX. It is in the interest of economy.

Mr. GARFIELD. It is not germane to the pending paragraph.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order. The Committee of the Whole have passed by the question of salaries.

Mr. COX. I beg pardon of the Chair. There was so much noise about me that I did not hear the Clerk commence reading the portion of the bill following what I now move to amend. I was waiting an opportunity to offer my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman say that he sought the floor before the Clerk resumed the reading?

Mr. COX. I sought the floor as soon as I could. I am not sure whether the Clerk had commenced reading or not.

Mr. GARFIELD. But the paragraph in regard to miscellaneous items was read long ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. WHITEHEAD. I move to amend by adding after the paragraph last read the following:

For payment, according to law, of ascertained balances due mail contractors, the appropriations for which have been covered into the Treasury, $100,000.

Mr. TYNER. I rise to a point of order on that amendment, that it is in conflict with the act which was read at the Clerk's desk some time ago.

Mr. WHITEHEAD. That amendment has not been ruled out of order or anything like it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Virginia on the point of order.

Mr. WHITEHEAD. I understand the point of order to be that this amendment changes existing law. If gentlemen listened to its reading they noticed it reads for payment "according to law." Therefore it cannot change the law if it is "according to law."

Mr. TYNER. I am not arguing the question with the gentleman.

Mr. WHITEHEAD. But I understand the gentleman to make the point of order that this changes existing law.

Mr. TYNER. I do.

Mr. WHITEHEAD. I state in reply to the point of order that the language of the amendment is for payment "according to law," and therefore does not change existing law. It is an appropriation to pay "according to law," and is not in conflict with the law to which the gentleman from Indiana alludes.

I understand this is the law to which the gentleman has referred heretofore, because the same point was made on another amendment. It is the joint resolution of March 3, 1867. It is the law to which the gentleman referred in raising his point of order. I send it to the Clerk's desk and ask him to read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution prohibiting payment by any officer of the Government to any person not known to have been opposed to the rebellion and in favor of its suppression.

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That until otherwise ordered it shall be unlawful for any officer of the United States Government to pay any account, claim, or demand against said Government which accrued or existed prior to the 13th day of April, A. D. 1861, in favor of any person who promoted, encouraged, or in any manner sustained the late rebellion, or in favor of any person who during said rebellion was not known to be opposed thereto and distinctly in favor of its suppression; and no pardon heretofore granted or hereafter to be granted shall authorize the payment of such account, claim, or demand until this resolution is modified or repealed: Provided, That this resolution shall not be construed to prohibit the payment of claims founded upon contract made by any of the Departments, where such claims were assigned or contracted to be assigned prior to April 1, 1861, to creditors of said contractors, loyal citizens of loyal States, in payment of debts incurred prior to March 1, 1861.

Mr. WHITEHEAD. Now, Mr. Chairman, this amendment does not come in conflict with that law at all. There are various sorts of claimants who have due them these ascertained balances. They are claimants who are loyal and can take the oath and who could draw this money under that law, provided there was any appropriation to draw. They cannot get their money now, not because of that law, but because the amount appropriated to pay their balances has been covered into the Treasury. This amendment does not propose to alter that law or to evade it. There is a class of claimants among mail contractors whose balances have been ascertained. There are some, but not many, whose claims were made after April 13, 1861. There are some who can take that oath, loyal men according to that law, but who cannot get their money because there is not an appropriation. There are others whose contracts have been assigned to loyal men prior to the 1st of April, 1861, but the assignees cannot get their money, not for want of loyalty or want of honesty I suppose, but because of the want of an appropriation to pay the debt acknowledged to be due.

There is a large class who cannot get the money because they cannot take the oath; and because there is a class who cannot take the oath and cannot draw the money, even if it were there, you propose to keep out three classes who can take the oath and who are loyal, by refusing to make the necessary reappropriation of what has been covered into the Treasury in order to pay these honest debts of the Government. The amendment does not change the law at all, but is "according to law" as it states.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules the amendment out.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to settle the accounts now audited by the proper officers of the Government for carrying the mails of the United States previous to April, 1861: Provided, That not more than the sum of $200,000 be paid out under the provisions of this act during the year 1875.

Mr. TYNER. I make the point of order that that changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules the amendment out.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That the Secretary of the Treasury of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to adjust the legal claims now pending against the Post-Office Department for carrying the mails previous to the late war.

Mr. YOUNG, of Georgia. I believe that fills the bill.

Mr. TYNER. I raise the point of order on that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order, and rules it out.

The Clerk read as follows:

For steamship service between San Francisco, Japan, and China, $500,000, to be paid in accordance with the provisions and conditions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the establishment of ocean mail steamship service between the United States and China," approved February 17, 1865, and of the second section of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1868, and for other purposes," approved February 17, 1867, and the contracts heretofore made in conformity to the provisions of said acts.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 17 insert, "that so much of an act entitled 'An act making appropriation for the service of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1873,' approved June 1, 1873, as relates to and authorizes a contract to be made by the Postmaster-General with the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for steamship services between San Francisco, Japan, and China, is hereby repealed, and any such contract made by the Postmaster-General in pursuance of said act is hereby annulled."

Mr. NEGLEY. I hope the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] will not press that amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope he will.

Several MEMBERS. Vote! Vote!

Mr. PAGE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Ohio why he offers this amendment?

Mr. NEGLEY. I hope the committee will now rise.

Several MEMBERS. O, no!

Mr. TYNER. I ask the committee to take a vote on the amendment without debate.

Mr. NEGLEY. I hope not.

Mr. PAGE. I would like to have the order of the House read which makes this amendment in order.

Mr. RANDALL. It was expressed in as plain language as could be used.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair holds that the amendment is in order under the order of the House.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. SMITH, of Ohio, it was agreed to.

Mr. MACDOUGALL. I offer the following amendment:

At the end of line 21, section 2, page 6, insert:

That hereafter all monthly newspapers, whether published gratuitously or at a regular subscription price, published at a known office of publication, and devoted to agriculture and the dissemination of knowledge relative to agricultural implements, shall be subject to the same rates of postage only as regular monthly papers devoted to secular subjects.

Mr. GARFIELD. I raise the point of order on that amendment, that it is in the nature of new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read as follows:

For official postage-stamps for the Post-Office Department, $986,000.

Mr. COBURN. I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of the second section these words:

Provided, That all seeds furnished by the Department of Agriculture, and all public documents sent through the mails by Senators and Representatives in Congress to their constituents, shall be carried free of postage; and the signature of the Senator or Representative shall be indorsed thereon, as evidence that the same is mailed by him, and shall be subscribed to a written or printed certificate that the same is a public document or a package of seeds furnished by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. SPEER. That was made in order by the House.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I desire to inquire of the Chair if this amendment has been made in order?

Mr. MAYNARD. I rise to make a parliamentary inquiry. Have we passed the clause, in lines 20 and 21, appropriating $986,000 for official postage-stamps for the Post-Office Department?

Mr. COBURN. The object of this amendment is to provide that the public documents and seeds from the Agricultural Department shall be carried free.

Mr. TYNER. Did my colleague [Mr. COBURN] introduce the pending amendment?

Mr. COBURN. I did.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] has offered an amendment and is entitled to the floor for five minutes.

Mr. TYNER. I desire to make a request of my colleague. When I rose a moment ago I only wanted to know who introduced the amendment. I desire to suggest to him that he withhold the amendment until we get through with the appropriation part of the bill.

Mr. COBURN. I will not withdraw the amendment. It is as much in order here as anywhere else.

Mr. TYNER. I do not think we should put legislation in the body of the bill among the appropriations.

Mr. COBURN. This is the old question of carrying the public documents and seeds free. I need not go into an extended argument upon this question. Every man understands it. We have all now had a year or two's experience on it. We have an immense number of documents ready for our use; and the simple question is whether we will tax ourselves to send those documents and to send seeds to the people or whether they shall be carried by the Government.

Very little will be saved by taxing ourselves. When the Government provides cars and provides transportation for the purpose of carrying the mails amply sufficient to cover all these things, why should we tax ourselves for the purpose? Who are the gainers? Is it the people or is it the members of Congress? For whose advantage are these documents printed?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I again rise to the point of order. I have not been able to find any order of the House making this amendment in order. If there has been such an order, I desire to have it read at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. FORT. I have it here.

Mr. COBURN. It was made in order on the motion of the gentleman from Texas, [Mr. MILLS.]

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. FORT. I move that the rules be suspended, so that when House bill No. 4529, making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, is under consideration in Committee of the Whole and in the House, it shall be in order to consider and adopt the following amendment, changing existing law as to the rate of postage on certain mailable matter, to wit:

"That hereafter the postage on any public document mailed by the President or head of any Executive Department, or member of Congress, or by any ex-member of Congress, within nine months after the expiration of his term of service, shall be two cents for each pound; and the term 'public document' is hereby defined to be any publication printed by the order of Congress or by either House thereof. And when the words 'public document' shall be written or printed thereon, or on the wrapper thereof, and the signature of any such person entitled to so send the same by mail shall be written thereunder, it shall be deemed a sufficient certificate prima facie of the character thereof.

"Field and garden seeds furnished by the Department of Agriculture shall be transmitted by mail for the same postage charged on public documents, upon the certificate of any of the persons named in the next preceding section."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] is not in order at this time. It will be in order as an amendment to the amendment proposed to be offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. GARFIELD. I think the committee had better rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is informed that there is another order of the House applicable to this matter which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That when the post-office appropriation bill is under consideration it shall be in order to offer an amendment to the same authorizing the sending of the Agricultural Reports and other public documents through the mails to the people free of charge.

Mr. TYNER. After the Chair has ruled upon the point of order I shall move that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that under the resolution adopted by the House the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] is in order.

Mr. TYNER. Then I move that the committee rise.

Mr. COBURN. Is my colleague aware of the fact that I am entitled to the floor?

Mr. TYNER. I have no desire whatever to take my colleague off his feet. Will he yield for a motion that the committee rise?

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] will have his five minutes to-morrow morning; he will be entitled to the floor.

Mr. COBURN. I yield for a motion to rise.

Mr. TYNER. Then I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and, the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCCRARY reported that the Committee of the Whole had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. No. 4529) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ADJUDICATION OF CLAIMS OF ALIENS.

Mr. LAWRENCE. I ask unanimous consent to submit from the Committee on War Claims a report to accompany House bill No. 3916, to provide for the adjudication of the claims of aliens. The report embraces the substance of report No. 262, made by the Committee on War Claims at the last session, together with matter from the State Department, which the House has already ordered to be printed, in relation to the mode of adjudicating claims in foreign governments, besides some other matter ordered by the Committee on War Claims to accompany the report. I ask that the report be printed and recommitted.

No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

HALLETT KILBOURN AND OTHERS.

The SPEAKER. By inadvertence this morning the communication from the Secretary of the Interior, transmitting the claim of Hallett Kilbourn and others, for compensation for services rendered in appraising the value of certain real estate belonging to the Government in the District of Columbia, was referred to the Committee on Claims. It should have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations; and if there is no objection, the change of reference will be made.

No objection was made, and it was ordered accordingly.

POSTAGE ON MONTHLY NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. MACDOUGALL, by unanimous consent, introduced a joint resolution (H. R. No. 155) relative to postage on monthly newspapers relating to agricultural subjects and implements; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, and ordered to be printed.

RECESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House now take a recess until half past seven o'clock.

The SPEAKER. By order of the House the session this evening will be for debate only in Committee of the Whole on the annual message of the President of the United States, no business whatever to be transacted. The gentleman from New York, Mr. SMART, will occupy the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The motion for a recess was agreed to; and accordingly (at five o'clock and twenty-five minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until seven o'clock and thirty minutes p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House reassembled at seven and a half o'clock p. m., Mr. SMART in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By order of the House the session of this evening is for debate only, as in Committee of the Whole, upon the annual message of the President of the United States, no business whatever to be transacted. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HUNTER] is entitled to the floor.

POWER OF CONGRESS TO REGULATE INTEREST.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, how to arrange a financial system that will benefit the country is a problem very difficult to solve. Nearly every person who talks upon it says the only solution is a system that looks to a return to specie payments, putting it upon the ground that it is the depreciated condition of our money that is the cause of all our financial troubles. The bill which has become a law at the present session is to some extent based upon that theory.

Because gold is the money of the world, and we are constantly trading with other nations, it is claimed that we should speedily return to specie payments, and that unless we do, we can have no permanent prosperity. There is where, in my judgment, we make the mistake; we are looking too much to our intercourse with other nations, and shaping our finances to suit that trade instead of looking to our own people, and shaping a system that will give them relief and at the same time meet all our commercial wants. If we purchased less from abroad and made more of what we consume at home we would be by far better off. It is our home interests that we should look to more, and see that our laboring men have constant employment at living wages, which would add wealth and prosperity to the country, instead of bothering our heads so much as to the kind of money that is needed to pay for articles purchased abroad.

When we get outside of the cities on the sea-board where the money-changers operate and grow fat on the labor of others, and get into the great heart of the country, we hear no demand for a speedy resumption of specie payments. Where the people labor, where most of the manufacturing is done, where the coal and iron are dug, where the soil is tilled, and corn, wheat, pork, beef, and, in short, every article that gives wealth and prosperity to the country are produced, and without which the country could neither grow rich nor the money-changers grow wealthy, and there we find business stagnant and the people depressed, the manufacturing establishments standing idle, or if running, only upon half time, just enough to give employment to the operatives to keep them from starving; the coal and iron interests dragging; farm products commanding a low price except in parts of the country where the drought and grasshoppers destroyed or cut short the crops; except the article of hogs—they are commanding a high price for the reason that the crop is short, a large amount of it having been destroyed by the hog cholera, a consumer not very profitable to the farmers; so that the crop at present prices is no very great relief to them; it scarcely pays them for their losses and trouble.

When we inquire into the real cause of this stagnation of business and depression of these laboring people, we will find it is not on account of the depreciated condition of our currency. Returning to specie payments, so as to make our paper money equal to gold, will not give them the relief they want; it will only tend to make money more scarce, and hence aggravate instead of relieve their wants. What the people need and what they must have, in order to make the country truly prosperous, is money at a lower rate of interest.

That system of finance which will furnish enough money to meet the wants of the country and keep it as good as at present, with a gradual tendency to make it equal to gold, and will furnish it to the people at a rate of interest not exceeding 6 per cent., is the kind of system that the country needs and which the great majority of the people demand.

A system of finance that only looks to making our money equal to gold and leaves the question of interest in the hands of the money-lenders will neither relieve nor satisfy the country.

All the talk about our people losing millions each year on account of the depreciated condition of our currency, and that because we are not on a gold basis our money is always fluctuating, and by reason thereof business is unsteady and therefore not safe, is not true in fact. There is nothing more fluctuating in price than gold. Look at the price-list from the gold-room in New York each day and note the changes. These fluctuations in the price of gold are not because our greenbacks and bank-notes are not redeemable in gold; for the price of gold in New York is not regulated to any great extent by the demand and supply of it needed in this country, but it is principally regulated by the rate of interest in the Bank of England, in London, the great financial center of the world. The slightest disturbance on the continent creates a demand for gold, which starts up the rate of interest there the same as heat does the mercury in the thermometer; the rise is flashed to our shores by the telegraph, and up goes gold here and then down go greenbacks. Another change sinks the price of gold; then up go the greenbacks. It is not the greenback that makes the gold fluctuate, but it is the change in the price of gold that makes the greenback and every other commodity in the market fluctuate in price.

It is not, therefore, the gold basis that we so much need to give relief to the country and stop these fluctuations, but it is to have our money regulated in value by our own laws for the benefit of our own people, and not let it depend for its value so much upon the price of gold on the other side of the water. The value of money depends entirely upon its earning power. If, therefore, money is worth 6 per cent. this month and 12 per cent. next, how is it possible to keep business that depends upon its use either steady or prosperous? No legitimate business can be done so as to benefit the country at a greater rate of interest than 6 per cent. When money therefore rises to 10 and 12, not because of any favorable change of business to the laboring interests of the country, but on account of disturbances abroad which render gold scarce and therefore dear, and which give rise to speculations, the advantages of which are reaped only by capitalists, money is then drawn or kept from legitimate business and used for speculation to the great injury of the laboring masses of the country.

A financial system, then, to meet the wants of the country, must also embrace within it provisions that will drive money from these injurious speculations into legitimate business and keep it there. We should not allow money to be loaned on call; make all loans for at least ninety days. Every loan for a less period is injurious to the country, for it partakes of speculation rather than legitimate business. Public and not private good is what we should look to. Stock gambling that is carried on at our great money centers each day is injurious to the country. Therefore all persons who buy or sell stocks should pay a heavy Government license, the object being to drive men and money from these gambling-rooms into legitimate business by making it so costly that they cannot engage in it.

The price of money can only be regulated by fixing the amount of interest it shall earn. Some object to this and say that you might as well undertake to fix the price of wheat, corn, beef, hogs, labor, &c., by law as to undertake to fix the price of money. That is precisely what we do. When we fix the price of money at 6 per cent. so that it cannot be worth more than that amount, we then fix a steady price for wheat, corn, beef, pork, and labor. It must be remembered that money is not a commodity like wheat, corn, and labor; but it is the regulator of the price of all commodities. If money is worth 6 per cent., then wheat, corn, and labor will be worth a certain and fixed price; for we generally find that there is about so much raised and so much labor hired each year, increasing in amounts with the increase in population and wealth; but if the value of money is allowed to fluctuate, so that one month it is worth 6 per cent. and the price of all articles is regulated by it; if the next month it is worth twice as much, say 12 per cent., then labor and all other commodities ought to double in price, so as to keep pace with it; but the reverse is true when interest is high. It is because money is scarce or difficult to get hold of; and then labor and all kinds of products fall in price, and times become, as we say, hard. Hard, it is true, upon the labor of the country, but not upon the wealth; for the wealthy get twice as much for the use of their money during such times as the laboring men for their labor and products; and hence the burdens and miseries of hard times fall upon those least able to bear them.

Money is limited in amount and is in the hands of the few, while commodities are not and are in the hands of the many. Money having such power over commodities to raise and sink them in value as it becomes plenty or scarce, it is of the highest importance that its value should be fixed, so as to prevent its constant fluctuations and injurious consequences to labor. There is no good sense in saying that if we fix the price of interest on money, that therefore we must by law fix the price of labor, wheat, pork, and all other commodities, for the reason that money is not a commodity, while labor, wheat, pork, and all other articles in the market are. When you loan a hundred dollars it is not consumed, but it is as ready to be re-loaned the next moment and so on for all time as when first loaned. Money is capable of constantly accumulating, while wheat, pork, and all other commodities are not, for they are being consumed all the time. Money, therefore, in the hands of capitalists has a power that labor and other commodities in the hands of the masses have not. Having this power, and the happiness and prosperity of the country depending almost entirely upon the proper use of it, it is of the highest importance that it should be so regulated by law that its use should work to the good and not to the injury of the great masses.

To show the power of money over labor when used for a long period of years at different rates of interest, let us take a few examples. One thousand dollars used for sixty years in discounting notes at 6 per cent., having six months to run, would lay aside a fund of $38,671.58; while a man, if he labors for sixty years at $1.50 per day, counting three hundred working days in the year, and not losing a single day, could only earn in that time $27,000; so that the $1,000 in a period of sixty years, at 6 per cent., is able to earn for its owner $11,671.58 more than the laboring man could possibly earn by his labor. Hence we see that a thousand dollars in the hands of a capitalist, even at 6 per cent. compounded, has a greater earning power by far than the most stalwart yeoman of the land who earns his living by labor, though he work hard each day.

To put the interest on the notes thus discounted at 12 per cent.—what most people now in the West pay—in sixty years the thousand dollars would accumulate until it would amount to the enormous sum of $1,677,481.45, which would be more than the labor of sixty-two men for sixty years at the rate of $1.50 per day, providing they worked three hundred days in each year during all that time—a thing utterly impossible.

If we should increase the time for a longer period—say three or four hundred years—the accumulations of labor would make no showing whatever compared with that of capital even at 7 per cent., which is far below the average now paid throughout the country. For example, $100,000 loaned at 7 per cent., and compounded every six months for three hundred and sixty years, would amount to the enormous sum of $6,971,947,673,600,000; which is two hundred thousand times more than the whole United States are worth.

Commodities such as wheat, corn, labor, &c., instead of accumulating by compounding like money, are consumed almost as fast as produced; and men who engage in their production do not as a general rule loan money, and hence about 3 per cent. is as rapidly, counting all losses, as the people of this country, taking them as a whole, accumulate. Those who loan money accumulate faster than those who labor. And if allowed to continue to charge the present rates of interest, their accumulations will far exceed those of labor; so that in the course of a few generations capital will have such power that labor will stand no show, but will be wielded and controlled by it like the present pauper labor of Europe. It is therefore high time that the people commence dealing with this question of interest before it shall be eternally too late.

In the very nature of things we must have, in order to be prosperous, both capital and labor. Neither is profitable without the other. And if left free to operate according to the laws of trade, as most contend they should be, capital will accumulate faster than labor, and in the course of time will oppress it in this country the same as it now oppresses it in Europe. The reason is simple. We now purchase manufactured articles abroad, where interest is low and labor cheap, and charge such rates of interest here that men cannot engage in manufacturing so as to compete with foreign cheap labor and cheap money except by grinding labor. It is not for the public good that labor should be oppressed. How, then, is it possible to prevent it, if we are to trade abroad, unless we can have money in this country at a rate of interest and with a tariff such as public sentiment will maintain, that we can compete with foreign manufacturers and at the same time pay to labor a living price?

We must remember that our country has arrived at that period of its existence where its prosperity depends upon the development of all its varied industries and not upon a speculative growth. We now have a heavy laboring population; to be prosperous we must keep that labor employed; otherwise we will lose millions each day. A financial system, then, that looks to making money better and not cheaper is not what the country needs. Our money is good enough now, if it could only be had at rates that men could afford to engage in business, so as to give employment to labor; but those who have it ask such rates of interest that men of enterprise cannot afford to use it in legitimate business; hence all our business interests are prostrate, and the labor of the country is idle and suffering for the comforts of life. Unless we make interest cheaper the business of the country cannot revive. Successful operators in stock-gambling are the only persons that can afford to pay the present rates, and all their operations are a positive injury instead of a benefit to the country.

How, then, shall interest be cheapened? Some insist by the issue of the 3.65 convertible and reconvertible bond. So far I have favored the issue of that kind of bond, because I believe it will give money to the Government at cheaper rates than it is now paying. But exactly how it will cheapen money to the people who want to borrow it to engage in business, so as to give employment to the labor of the country, is a proposition that I have never yet had explained to my satisfaction. I can see how cheapening money to the Government would cheapen it to the people who have to borrow, if provision was made in some way for them to borrow it from the Government; but the proposition to issue the 3.65 bond does not in any way contemplate the idea of the Government loaning money to the people who wish to borrow, but it simply provides for the Government to borrow from those who have money at a low rate of interest. Men who follow the business of loaning money, and from whom the people must borrow if they get it, will not loan their money to the Government for the interest provided for in these bonds, for the reason that they can get three times that amount by loaning it to the people. It will only be banks that have to keep a reserve and persons who deposit in banks and savings institutions that will patronize the Government and purchase these cheap-interest bonds—persons who do not keep their money to loan, but who keep it in the shape of savings or to be invested in speculations, and only want to use it at certain periods of the year, and will not risk loaning it to the people, but will deposit it for these bonds, so that it will draw them interest while idle, and then be ready for them when needed for use or speculation.

Men who purchase these bonds will not loan them to the people, for the reason that if they had wanted to loan their money they would have loaned it in the first instance, without going to the trouble of purchasing these bonds. Then exactly how the issuing of this bond will cheapen interest to the borrowers of money I cannot see. I am answered that it is insurance and security that enter into and regulate the cost of money; that the Government, being more safe than individuals, can get money cheaper than it can; that 3.65 per cent. in currency, having been established as the Government rate of interest, would necessarily bring down the rate of interest to individuals to about 5 or 6 per cent., the only difference in interest being the difference in security between the Government and the individual borrower. The fallacy of this argument consists in this: It takes it for granted that because the Government will be able to get a large amount of money in exchange for these 3.65 bonds, therefore the permanent rate of interest that the Government will pay in the future will be fixed at that amount. What is taken for granted is not true in fact. While the Government will be able to get money in exchange for these bonds, it will only be the money that the owners of it do not want to loan, but want to keep ready for use or speculation. As above shown, they will exchange it temporarily for these bonds, because it will be safe and they can get their money again, when needed, in exchange for them, and in addition get interest on their money, which would otherwise lie idle.

The Government could not go into the money market and make a permanent loan on these bonds, therefore the issuing of them will have no effect whatever in regulating the interest on permanent loans to the Government, or on loans made to the people. The Government cannot go into the New York money market to-day and make a permanent loan on its bonds, which are free from all local taxation, at less than 5 per cent. in gold interest, payable semi-annually. Neither would it be able to do so were the 3.65 bonds issued and now in full use, for the reason that they would only be exchanged for money temporarily and not permanently loaned. Therefore the issuing of this bond, while it will give money temporarily to the Government at a cheap rate, will be of no special benefit to the borrowers of money, so far as cheapening interest to them is concerned. It will not make money more plenty unless the bond should circulate as money, which it would not to any great extent for the reason above given, that if the purchasers of these bonds had wanted to put them in circulation the same as money they would have done so in the first instance, and not put themselves to the trouble of purchasing the bonds; but for the very reason that they did not want to loan their money, they converted it into these bonds so that it might draw them interest until they should need it for other purposes than loaning it. For the above reasons the issuing of the 3.65 bond, in my judgment, will not give to the money-borrowers of the country the relief that they demand; that is, money at a cheaper rate of interest.

Others favor cheapening interest by doing away with the national banks and issuing greenbacks to supply the place of bank-notes.

How that will make interest cheaper to the money-borrowers I cannot understand. It certainly makes money no more plenty by retiring national-bank notes and replacing them with greenbacks. Neither does it make our money better, for a bank-note will answer every purpose that a new greenback will. Some think that by doing away with the national banks we make a large saving to the people in the shape of interest on the bonds that we could purchase and retire with the greenbacks issued to take the place of the bank-notes, but when we undertake to figure out the saving we fail to find it, for the reason that the taxes which the national banks now pay to the States and the General Government are fully equal to the interest saved by the retiring of the bonds. So that by doing away with the banks the people would lose as much in the shape of taxes that the national banks now pay as the interest they would save, in the purchase of bonds, as the following statement will show:

On the 2d day of October, 1874, the amount of bank-notes then in circulation were $333,225,298. If that amount of greenbacks had then been issued to take their place, they would have purchased bonds, one half 5 and the other half 6 per cents, counting the bonds at an average premium of 17 per cent., amounting to $276,576,998. Interest on these bonds in gold at 5½ per cent. would amount to $15,211,734; gold premium on this interest at 11 per cent., $1,473,289; amount in currency saved by destroying banks, $16,685,023.

Let us next inquire how much the people would lose by their destruction. By the organization of national banks stock is created, and it becomes taxable property. On the 2d day of October, 1874, the capital stock of the national banks amounted to $493,765,121. The Comptroller of the Currency in his report made November 23, 1874, page 20, says that "the average amount of taxation assessed upon the capital of the national banks of the country is estimated at from 3 to 3½ per cent." But count it at 2½ per cent., which is below the average, and it makes the tax which the national banks paid to the people of the States on $493,765,121 of bank stock, for 1874, $12,344,128.

Tax on bank stock.....	$12,344,128
They paid to the United States as follows:
On circulation.....	3,404,483
On deposits.....	3,209,967
On capital not in bonds.....	513,711
Amount Government would lose.....	19,472,299
Deduct amount saved by Government.....	16,685,023
Net loss.....	2,787,266

The above statement shows that if the national banks had been done away and greenbacks issued to supply their place, the people, instead of gaining, would have lost this year $2,787,266. In answer to this it may be said that if the national banks were broken down, most of their capital would go into private banking, and would then pay a large amount of taxes to the Government, as private banks now do. I suppose most of this loss of $2,787,266 would be made up in that way. But it must be remembered that private banks evade the law, and do not, as the reports show, pay in proportion to their capital more than one-fourth the taxes that the national banks pay. Therefore by breaking down the national banks we would strike out of existence at least three-fourths of the $493,765,121 of taxable property in the shape of bank stock, which now pays to the people a tax of at least $9,258,096, which as private bankers they would not pay. We would also strike out of existence our present national-bank circulation, which amounts to $333,225,298, upon which national banks now pay to the Government a tax of $3,404,483. Private banks, having no circulation, would pay no such tax. We would also lose most of the $513,711 now paid by the national banks as tax on capital, not in bonds. Private banks evade this tax by converting their bonds into greenbacks before tax-paying time.

We would also lose a large amount each year on deposits, as private banks, not being under the control of the Government like national banks are, do not pay in proportion to their deposits near so large a tax as the national banks do. In addition to this it would cost the Government at least $1,000,000 to keep up the printing of these greenbacks each year, more than it costs it for the printing of the national-bank notes, estimating the cost according to the present rates of difference in printing between the greenbacks and national-bank notes.

From the figures, then, we find that by issuing greenbacks to supply the place of the bank-notes we make no actual saving to the people; neither do we make our money any better by so doing or increase the amount of its circulation; and therefore we in no way cheapen interest or benefit the money-borrowers of the country by this plan.

We still have another class of financiers who favor cheapening interest by a new issue of greenbacks to an amount sufficient to supply the wants of the country. By so doing we depreciate our money, put up the price of interest and raise the price of gold, and make it that much harder on the Government and people to pay her debts in gold, which she is compelled to, or violate her solemn pledge of faith, which she cannot now do except by repudiation.

To justify Congress in making a new issue of greenbacks, there must be a public necessity for it that is overwhelming in its nature; such as arises during war, when the life of the nation is at stake. Being now at peace, such a necessity does not and in the very nature of things cannot exist. Their issue would therefore be a question of expediency and not of necessity, and Congress would be compelled to place it upon that ground. Their issue would then present the question squarely before the courts as to the power of Congress, under such circumstances, to issue the paper promises of the Government and make them a legal tender in payment of debts and in discharge of contracts. If I believed the power existed, I would favor such an issue at the present time, as it would give at least temporary relief to the country; but feeling satisfied in my own mind that it does not exist, and that the courts would so decide, I cannot see how the passage of such a law would give to the country the permanent relief it requires. It might be a benefit for a time, until the courts would decide that the legal-tenders were issued without authority of law, which they certainly would. Then our condition would be far worse than now, and repudiation would be our only relief.

Another class favor cheapening interest by allowing persons having our present gold bonds to deposit them with the Government as security for greenbacks to the amount of their face. This plan would necessitate the issuing of more greenbacks by the Government, and would therefore be subject to the objection just urged as to the power of the Government to do so in time of peace; but waiving that objection, I cannot for the life of me see how this plan would cheapen money to those who have to borrow, for the reason that men who have bonds and could deposit them for these greenbacks are money-lenders and not borrowers; therefore, if they deposited their bonds to get money to loan there would be nothing to prevent them from charging 10 and 12 per cent. for this money to those who have to borrow, and they would do so. Such a law, then, could in no way benefit money-borrowers, for they have no bonds to deposit; if they had, there would be no necessity for their borrowing money—it would only benefit money-lenders who desired to deposit their bonds in this way. It is the money borrowers and not the lenders that need relief, and which I wish to protect.

If provision is to be made for men to borrow money from the Government in order to cheapen interest, I want it so made that the poor as well as the rich will be benefited by the law. Instead of requiring bonds to be deposited for the loan of money, let the money be loaned at a low rate of interest on mortgage of real estate. I do not advocate the plan of a loan from the Government; but if it should be adopted, I say make it so the poor man will be benefited. The bill which we passed at the present session, and which is now a law, I voted for, not because I fully approved it, but because I thought that it was better than the old law, and the only measure that could pass during this Congress. But I feel that it will not meet the wants of the people, for the reasons I have urged; it does not regulate the question of interest. It is better than the old law in this: it makes national banking free.

During the last session of Congress I tried to put a provision upon the bill we then passed to regulate the question of interest, but it met with so little favor, and especially with the Committee on Banking and Currency, that I did not try to attach it to the bill we passed this session, for I knew that all efforts to do so would be hopeless. Regulating interest by the National Government is a new question, and strikes the money-lenders unfavorably as an undue interference with their business, and therefore with them it is unpopular; but it is a question that in the future must be met. It is in my judgment the only solution of our financial troubles that will give permanent relief to the people, and therefore I feel it my duty to bring it to the attention of the country so that it may be studied and understood.

It must be evident to every one that interest now is too high; more than legitimate business can pay. The question then is, what are the people to do? How is interest to be cheapened? Business must go on and money must be had. High interest benefits the money-lenders, but it impoverishes and grinds labor. Must that state of affairs be allowed to exist? If not, what must be done to prevent it? Capitalists say let the laws of trade, supply and demand, regulate it. Others say the States must do it; that Congress has no power over the subject. The States for at least one hundred years have been trying to regulate this question of interest, and have made about as bad a failure at it as they did in trying to furnish the people a currency that would meet the wants and demands of the country. But, having utterly failed, Congress, in compliance with the public demand, took hold of the question and furnished the people with a national currency that exactly met the wants of the country, and without which we would now scarcely know how to do business; and in order to get rid of the money furnished by the States, it imposed a tax upon it that drove it from circulation. The power of Congress to do this was at first questioned, but the national currency met with such public favor that all soon acquiesced, and none now dispute its right. So with the question of interest; when it is thoroughly studied, it will be found that Congress has not only the right, but that it is an absolute necessity, for the good of the people, that it take hold of and regulate it, so far as the loaning of the national currency is concerned.

The States cannot regulate interest on money, even if they have the power, so as to give to the people the relief that they really demand, for the reason that when a State fixes the rate of interest, say at 6 per cent., and makes its law so strong that no person or bank dare violate it, the result is that those who have money to loan in that State transfer their loans to other States, where a higher rate of interest is allowed. And hence the people, instead of finding the law a benefit, find it a positive injury, as it takes all their money out of circulation; and they are compelled for their own protection to repeal the law or let it remain on the statute-book a dead letter, so that none are punished for its violation. It is therefore impossible for the people to protect themselves against usurious interest by State laws, unless they would act in each State at the same time and make their laws uniform—a thing impossible; and hence the masses, who have to borrow money, must suffer for all time, unless Congress will take hold of the question and lay its strong hand on the usurers, and compel them to comply with the law it passes or suffer the penalty.

When we look over the country and see the amount of misery and want that is produced by the exorbitant rates of interest, we wonder why it is permitted by the laws of the country. I venture the assertion that you cannot go into a single county in any State of this Union where you will find less than one-third of the business men of that county but who are oppressed with the present exorbitant rates of interest, and many of them utterly bankrupt.

Men must do business. If they have no money of their own they will borrow from others, and being naturally honest and proud-hearted, and when once in business, in order to meet their obligations, will agree to pay almost any rate of interest that is demanded. To meet it when due they go to work, stinting themselves and their families; but at the end of the year they find that the interest has accumulated faster than their labor. New obligations are entered into to secure the money-lender for this balance of interest, and new exertions are made to pay it; but at the end of the second year they find themselves still further embarrassed, and so on from year to year, until in the course of eight or ten years they and perhaps some of their securities are hopelessly ruined—their homes and everything they have, except the little left exempt from execution, must be sacrificed to pay the accumulations of this exorbitant interest. The money loaned proves to be of no real benefit to the borrower, as it does in nine cases out of ten when these high rates are charged; for after working hard for eight or ten years, stinting himself and family, he is not as well off as when he borrowed it; for the interest accumulated faster than legitimate business can make it, as it always does when 10 per cent. is charged. He is therefore compelled to give to the money-lender not only his labor, but sacrifice his home and his all, besides witnessing the suffering and poverty of his family, to meet the demands of usury. Some will answer that he was a free agent and was not compelled to borrow the money, and therefore has none to blame but himself. Misfortune may have compelled it, or he might have been induced to borrow it to engage in business in order to give employment to labor which would have suffered without it.

Business must be done and labor must be employed in order to make the country prosperous. Six per cent. is as much as legitimate business can pay. If money must be had in order to carry on business and give employment to labor, and the men who have it will not put it into business, shall they be allowed to take the advantage of the necessities of the country and demand for the use of their money a greater interest than legitimate business will pay? When the life of the nation is at stake, if men will not volunteer and fight, we draft and compel them to. For the support of the Government we compel men to pay taxes, whether they want to or not. Money, then, being absolutely necessary in order to do business, and it having such power and control over the welfare and happiness of the whole people, and those who have it fail or refuse to put it in business that will give employment to labor, but insist on loaning it to others who will, I submit the question whether it is not right and proper for the good of the people that those who have this money shall not be allowed to demand or receive for its use more than legitimate business can afford to pay; for whatever is paid beyond that is and in the very nature of things must be ground from the sweat and toil of labor. To allow money to be used so as constantly to grind labor is worse than a crime, and ought therefore to be prohibited by law.

It is the duty of the Government to see that the people have a money that is good and in sufficient quantity and a rate of interest that will justify its use, so that every legitimate want of the country may be fully supplied. Money-lenders, as a general proposition, I know object to this, and insist that money is worth what it will bring in the market, the same as wheat and pork, and that its rate of interest should therefore be governed by the law of demand and supply. That is just what we have permitted, until interest has almost eaten up the country. The States have tried to regulate interest, as I have shown, but their efforts have proved an utter failure. The money-lenders have paid but little attention to State laws, but have demanded and received from those who were compelled to borrow just such rates as they saw fit to charge, without any reference to the question as to whether legitimate business would justify its use at those rates. And nearly every person who has attempted to do business at the rates charged has failed; and that is the cause of the general prostration of business all over the country. I am answered that these failures and this prostration of business have occurred because our people have undertaken to do too much, and have gone far beyond the wants of the country. They have only tried to keep the labor of the country employed; and certainly business ought to justify that; if not, something must be radically wrong. Some of the labor projects may have been wild and visionary, but the great majority of the business which is now prostrate, and on account of which the country has and is now suffering so much, is of the most substantial character. The truth is that our people have paid these high rates of interest and undertaken to manufacture and compete with the manufacturers abroad, where labor and money are cheap, until they have become completely broken down. High interest, which compelled them to work at a disadvantage all the time in order to compete with the cheap labor and cheap interest abroad is the real cause, and not doing work beyond the wants of the country.

Every person will admit that no one can afford to do a legitimate business upon money at 10 per cent. Yet money cannot be borrowed for less than that to do business in any part of the country. It is therefore evident that all legitimate business in the country must suffer, or money must be had at cheaper rates than the present. If supply and demand will regulate the price of interest, so as to cheapen it and make it meet the legitimate wants of the country, then there is something terribly out of joint at the present time; for it has utterly failed to do so, for business is not prosperous anywhere. Yet the demand for money for business, such as it is, keeps it up to 10 per cent. in a great portion of the country, and in some of the States from 12 to 15 per cent. A greater demand would put interest still higher. Why is this? Is it because we have not enough money? Money-lenders say no, and insist that there is plenty of money in New York City at 5 and 6 per cent. If there is, it is only loaned at those rates on call; that is, to be paid whenever the lender demands it. Business cannot be done on those kinds of loans. Neither can it be had in New York City to be invested in business in the West for less than 10 per cent., I care not how good the security offered; and every one knows that business cannot afford to pay that amount.

If we should increase the volume of our currency up to a thousand millions by a new issue of greenbacks, conceding the power to issue them, we would so depreciate our money that interest would go to 15 and 20 per cent., as it was after the war. The money-borrowers would suffer then as much as now, for they would have to pay whatever was demanded. I care not how plenty you make money, it will soon get under the control of the money-lenders; then they and not the borrowers dictate the rates of interest. I have considered with some care all the various financial plans now before the country, and have shown that none of them will accomplish what the people want, that is, make interest cheap. Look at the question as we will, and it will be found that there is but one way certainly to bring interest down, and that is for Congress to take hold of it and fix the interest at an amount not exceeding 6 per cent., and then make the law so strong that no man would dare violate it, and if he did, make him suffer the penalty.

No one who favors cheap interest and insists that competition or the laws of supply and demand will bring money down to 6 per cent. ought to complain of the plan I propose, for it only compels to be done what he says the laws of trade will accomplish, that is, it makes certain what would otherwise remain uncertain. Money is not worth more than it will earn when employed in legitimate business, and no man ought to be allowed to charge or receive more than that for it. Experience has shown that 6 per cent. is the outside limit that business will allow being paid, and with that sum the money-lender should be made satisfied. If he will not loan it at that interest to be put in business by others, let him keep it or put it in business himself. He could not afford to let it lie idle, and therefore he would be compelled to either loan it at that interest or put it in business himself. Either would benefit the country, for what it needs is money to do business, and it makes no difference who puts it into business; but if it has to be borrowed, let it be at rates that those who use it and those who labor shall not only live but prosper.

That Congress and not the States has the power, when it deems it necessary and proper for the good of the people to regulate the value of its national currency by fixing the rate of interest at which it shall be loaned and used by the people, is a question to my mind that will not admit of a doubt. The United States notes commonly called greenbacks are Government securities, created by the Government to circulate as money. The national-bank notes are also issues made by authority of Government to circulate as money, for the benefit of the Government as well as the people. It is expressly declared on the back of all these national-bank notes that they are "receivable at par in all parts of the United States in payment of all taxes and excises and all other dues to the United States, except duties on imports, and also for all salaries and other debts and demands owing by the United States to individuals, corporations, and associations within the United States, except interest on public debt." The Government is bound for their redemption, because its bonds are pledged for their payment. They are to all intents and purposes a national issue of money, and serve the Government every purpose that the greenbacks do.

The issue of the United notes and the national-bank notes as money was authorized by Congress for the express purpose of having a circulating medium by which the Government as well as the people could carry on business in every part of the United States. The States have not the power to tax either of those issues of national money without the consent of Congress, for the reason that the power to tax implies the power to destroy. They fall clearly within the decision of the celebrated case of McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland. If the States were permitted to tax this money, they might put the tax so high as to drive it out of circulation, which would effectually destroy its use to the Government as a circulating medium.

If the States, then, have not the power to tax this money, as the Supreme Court, in 7 Wallace, page 26, has decided, where do they get the power to regulate the interest upon it unless Congress grants it? It must be remembered that the value of this money is fixed by the amount of interest it will earn. If the States are permitted to say at what interest it shall be loaned and used, they could as effectually drive it out of circulation by declaring that it should not be loaned within their limits at a greater rate of interest than 1 per cent., as they could by imposing a tax of 75 per cent. upon it. The Constitution of the United States declares that Congress shall have power to coin money and regulate the value thereof. Under the Constitution Congress has made or coined two kinds of money, one metal and the other paper. To give this paper money value it must circulate and be able to earn an interest. If the States, then, have the power to fix that interest, then they and not Congress have the power to regulate its value. In the case of gold and silver coined by the Government, if it was not allowed to circulate in the States by reason of adverse legislation, admitting their power to so legislate, still its value would not be destroyed like the paper money, for it could be sold as bullion; but paper money, that cannot circulate and bear an interest and which is not redeemable in gold or silver at the pleasure of the holder—which is the condition of our greenbacks and national bank notes—would be for all purposes as money perfectly worthless.

If Congress, therefore, has not the exclusive power to regulate and control the interest that our national money shall bear when loaned or used by the people in the different States, then the States have it in their power as effectually to destroy it at their pleasure by placing interest at a rate that it would not circulate as by imposing a tax that would drive it from circulation. I hold, therefore, that Congress and not the States has the exclusive control over our national money; and as the welfare of our people depends upon having that money at a rate of interest that it can be used in business so that labor as well as capital can be benefited by its use, it is the duty of Congress to pass a law fixing the interest upon all national money at a rate not exceeding 6 per cent. in every part of the United States, and that it make its provisions broad enough to prevent evading the law by indirect means, and with penalties strong enough to punish those who will dare violate it.

There is also another provision of the Constitution under which I think Congress clearly has the right to regulate the question of interest upon all commercial transactions between the people of the different States. It is the one which provides that "Congress shall have power to regulate commerce * * * among the several States." Interest, like transportation, enters very largely into the question of trade or commerce that is carried on among the people of the different States. If Congress, then, has the power to regulate transportation, which but few at the present time deny, it as clearly has the power to regulate the interest upon all commercial transactions between the people of the different States.

I do not contend that Congress has the power to regulate the interest on all contracts made by the people of the same State. For example, if a man sells his farm, stock, grain, or the like, and the purchaser executes his notes, the interest that such notes should bear should be regulated by the States, and the owners of the notes should be left perfectly free to dispose of such notes at such rates of discount as allowed by the laws of the different States.

It is only the loaning of national money or where contracts are made between persons of different States that I insist Congress has the power to legislate and should do so. When Congress shall have passed such a law and made a few healthy examples by punishing violators of the law with both fine and imprisonment, men will not be so ready to violate law, and we will not then hear so many say that Congress cannot regulate interest by law.

With a strong law, such as I propose, usury in a few years would be effectually stopped, for the people would see the good effects, and would, by State laws, soon put an end to all usurious transactions among them in the different States. That once done, business would be prosperous all over the country, and would remain so, and we would hear but few complaints of hard times.

A financial system, then, to suit the wants of the country ought to embrace the following provisions:

First. Impose a Government license that will be sufficient to drive men out of all kind of gold and stock gambling. Make the money used in it go into legitimate business.

Second. Prevent money being loaned on call, for it aids speculation when so loaned, to the injury of regular business. Legitimate business cannot be done on such loans. Let all loans be for at least ninety days.

Third. I would put a Government license so high that men could not engage in business as private bankers or brokers. I would drive their capital into national banks or other business more profitable to the country. National banks issue money which the people need, and they have to protect it and keep it good. I would therefore have all the capital of the country that wished to bank in national banks. The business of private bankers and brokers partake more of a private than a public good. Having no money of their own issue to protect, they frequently make runs on banks that have, and thus injure the public for their own private good. National banks will serve every good purpose that the private banks and brokers will, and at the same time be more beneficial to the country.

Fourth. I would establish national free banking; allow every one to engage in it that desired who would deposit bonds to secure his issue in sums as now provided by law. I would be willing to allow 100 instead of 90 per cent. to be issued to the banks, as the security would be perfect. More men would be induced to engage in it, which would make money more plenty, the very thing that the mass of the people want. Our money would be as good then as now, for it would be redeemable in our present greenbacks; the Government would gradually appreciate them; and as they increased in value the banknotes would increase in the same proportion, until our whole currency would be par in gold. Then all the expense and trouble of redeeming our money would be thrown upon the banks instead of the Government, where it naturally belongs.

Fifth. I would put interest at 6 per cent., and allow no bank or individual, either directly or indirectly, to charge a greater rate, and would make the law broad and strong enough to accomplish the work. Business having been established upon a basis of 6 per cent., national banking would then be profitable, for the reason that banks could get 6 per cent. on their money, and from 5 to 6 per cent. in gold on their bonds. I would relieve the banks of all national tax, except enough to cover expenses of the Government in connection therewith.

Sixth. I would make provision for the issue of the 3.65 bond, so that the Government might get the use of all the money it could at a low rate of interest. The bond, being reconvertible, would have a tendency to regulate the volume of the currency.

With these provisions in addition to the present law, I feel the country would be enabled to prosper in a manner entirely satisfactory to the great mass of the people. Some of the provisions, I admit, are strong, but I hold they are justifiable on the ground of public good.

TREATY RELATIONS WITH CHINA.

[Mr. PAGE addressed the House upon the subject of our treaty relations with China. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

FAILURE OF THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

[Mr. CRITTENDEN addressed the House upon the failure of the republican party to give peace and prosperity to the country. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

LOUISIANA.

Mr. BANNING. Mr. Speaker, after the many able speeches made in Congress upon southern affairs it is a delicate matter for me to ask the attention of the House to what I may have to say upon the subject. The importance of the question under discussion, involving as it does the rights and liberty of every American citizen, is my apology.

Believing in the saying of that founder of the Republic who told us "eternal vigilance is the price of liberty," also in the saying "it is better to defend our liberties upon the door-sill than upon the hearth-stone," I come to the consideration of this all-important question without any partisan feeling whatever, as a humble representative of a great constituency, who, without respect to party, at the largest meeting held in Cincinnati since the firing upon Fort Sumter in 1861, adopted the following resolutions:

The following resolutions were received with applause and unanimously adopted: Whereas it is part of the current public history of the country that on the 4th day of January, A. D. 1875, a general of the Army of the United States detailed an armed body of soldiers with orders to enter the legislative hall of the State of Louisiana, while the Legislature of said State was engaged in the work of organization, and to compel the withdrawal from said hall of persons claiming membership in said body, and who had been admitted to seats and qualified as members, said orders being executed by said soldiers, thus interrupting the organization of said body, and affording an opportunity to other persons claiming the same seats to enter and occupy the same and to organize said Legislature, thus practically determining a contest of election; and whereas a general of the Army has publicly called upon the President of the United States to declare a portion of the people outlaws, and to grant him authority to try, condemn, and punish them by martial law: Therefore,

Resolved, That as citizens of the Republic, invested with the right and charged with the duty of giving earnest attention to public affairs and pronouncing dispassionate judgment thereon, we regard these events with alarm and indignation.

Resolved, That it is essential to the preservation of free institutions in the United States that the military power shall at all times be subordinate to the civil power; that the Army shall not be called upon or permitted to perform mere police power in any part of the Union; that the right and the duty of preserving social order within the several States shall at all times be recognized as belonging to the respective State governments, except in the single instance provided by the Federal Constitution, which authorizes the General Government to protect the States respectively "against domestic violence upon the call of the executive when the Legislature cannot be convened."

Resolved, That our judgment of the action of General Sheridan is formed without regard to the truth or falsity of the grounds upon which he has sought to justify it; that upon his own statement of the facts it was an unwarranted and violent usurpation of power, a violation of the Constitution and of his duty as a citizen and as a soldier, and we call upon our fellow-citizens throughout the Union not to be misled in the discussion of this grave topic by the recital of the alleged wrongful and illegal acts of other persons at other times and places, but to judge the action of General Sheridan upon its own merits; that the usurpers of power in all periods of the history of the struggle between liberty and despotism have justified themselves by the plea that the public safety required their usurpations.

Resolved, That the call of General Sheridan for power to arrest, try, condemn, and punish citizens of Louisiana by martial law is a gross insult to the whole people of the country, and deserves signal rebuke from the Government and from the people.

Resolved, That we view with distrust and disapprobation the multiplication of military titles, military offices, and military emoluments, believing that the true military power of the Republic is, and should be, its citizen soldiery; and that we call upon our immediate Representatives in Congress to support the bill recently introduced providing for the abolition of the office of Lieutenant-General of the Army of the United States, with an amendment including all the unnecessary military officers.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be forwarded to our Representatives in Congress by the chairman.

Hon. George Hoadly, one of the ablest lawyers in the country, a republican who supported General Grant for the Presidency, prevented by a business engagement from attending the meeting, wrote to the presiding officer this letter:

CINCINNATI, January 14, 1875.

DEAR SIR: Your note of the 13th is just at hand and contents noted. I regard the Administration as having been engaged now for three years in a conspiracy to deprive the people of Louisiana of their just right to govern themselves and an effort by force and fraud to substitute a State government which has never been chosen by that people for that of their own selection. So believing, I should, without regard to the particular question who first called in the military on this occasion, have been glad to take part in the meeting you speak of. But business engagements in the supreme court compel me to be in Columbus on Saturday, and you will therefore please accept my sympathy and excuse my absence.

Yours, truly,

GEORGE HOADLY.

Hon. GEORGE W. C. JOHNSTON.

Hon. W. S. Groesbeck, whose national reputation makes his name familiar to all, wrote as follows:

JANUARY 14, 1875.

DEAR SIR: I received yesterday your note asking my opinion as to the propriety of calling a meeting "to express the sentiments of our city in regard to the recent transactions at New Orleans," and I notice in the papers of to-day that such a meeting has been resolved upon and will soon be held.

I think such a meeting will be very proper, and that it should be so managed as that all will feel free to participate in it. The transactions to which you refer were most extraordinary, and should be promptly noticed by public meetings throughout the country. They have no precedent in our past, and should not be allowed to become a precedent for our future. Bayonets are out of place in legislative halls.

Very respectfully,

W. S. GROESBECK.

Hon. G. W. C. JOHNSTON, Mayor.

Hon. Job E. Stevenson, my predecessor in this House, and republican candidate against me last fall, sent the following letter:

CINCINNATI, January 15, 1875.

DEAR SIR: Yours in relation to a proposed meeting of citizens to consider recent and pending events in Louisiana received.

It seems to me that such a meeting properly assembled and conducted, might do good service, and I should be not unwilling to participate.

Yours, truly,

JOB E. STEVENSON.

Hon. G. W. C. JOHNSTON, Mayor, &c.

Governor Allen, in answer to an invitation to be present, wrote:

STATE OF OHIO, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
Columbus, January 16, 1875.

DEAR SIR: For official reasons I cannot, as you request, be with our friends in your city to-night.

Things look gloomy, yet I do not dread the future. A few of the republican politicians may but the republican masses will not stand passively by and see any man seek to assuage his thirst for power in the blood of the people. The democracy, of course, will be true to itself.

Your friend,

W. ALLEN.

Hon. G. W. C. JOHNSTON, Mayor of Cincinnati.

Hon. George H. Pendleton addressed the meeting, and among other things said:

My fellow-citizens, there is order and quiet and, in some sense, peace in New Orleans to-night. The interest there is intense, but it is not turbulent. I rejoice that it is so. This conduct is an evidence of wisdom and virtue and good citizenship. Those men who addressed the meeting in New York and promised that their fellow-citizens should not be goaded into conflict with Federal authority, but that they would rely upon the moral power of their sister States to restore free government in that section of the country, uttered no vain words. Stigmatized by the military commander who the day before had assumed command over them as banditti; abused by every Federal officer as cut-throats and assassins; treated as if free government in this country had no rights which Federal power was bound to respect; governed by a power which confessedly will fall the moment that Federal bayonets are taken away, they have, nevertheless, by rare magnanimity, by wonderful self-control, thrice-armed their quarrel which was already just.

I am glad, as I said, that it is so for their sakes, because it is evidence of wisdom and virtue. I am glad that it is so for our sakes, because it gives no alloy to the sympathy that we can feel for their private wrongs, and puts no check upon the indignation and public sentiment for the unparalleled outrages upon public liberty. I am glad that it is so for another reason. It shows that all over this country, even under the most trying circumstances, the people of the country have accepted everywhere the results of the war. It shows that everywhere they have accepted the constitutional amendments, and mean to abide by them. It shows that everywhere they have accepted the doctrine of civil and political rights of all citizens. It shows that after the wave of civil war has passed away all our people everywhere are coming back to the recognition of that peace and order which must be the concomitant of liberty, and without which there can be no good government.

The able lawyer and author Dr. Thuro Wright, addressed the meeting. From his remarks I read the following extract:

He was here as a citizen of the United States who did not want to see his country a military despotism. He did not want needlessly to find fault with the authorities or indulge in harsh terms concerning their public acts; but that our rulers were above criticism no one would venture to assert. He would pray, if he prayed at all, "O God, may we not despise our rulers;" and would also add, "O Lord, may they not act so that we cannot help despising them."

Mr. Speaker, this large meeting at Cincinnati, the resolutions adopted, the letters and sayings of the distinguished men which I have quoted, show the deep-seated indignation of our people, and this regardless of party division. The people are shocked at the military interference in civil rights, and the sooner, Mr. Speaker, we return to the guarantees of the Constitution, the better it will be for us and the government of the fathers it is our patriotic duty to perpetuate.

I invite the attention of the House to the political situation in the South since the close of the war; and permit me, sir, to say when the late war began I enlisted and marched to the front, and fought through to the end. That end came when with Lee's surrender the South laid down its arms, and our flag waved in triumph over every foot of our territory. I was a soldier in war; I propose to be a citizen in peace. When the men of the southern army laid down their arms and accepted the situation, I supposed they were to be restored to all their rights under the Constitution. Knowing their bravery, admiring their gallantry, and the pluck, courage, and obstinacy with which for more than four long years they sustained their confederacy against superior numbers, I did not want to see them punished. Nor had I (much as I mourned their loss) any wish to revenge with more southern blood the blood of my dead comrades. And I prayed God to receive it as a sufficient atonement and offering upon the altar of peace, and make it the sacred cement of an everlasting Union of States. I felt toward the South like our heroic General Sherman when he made terms of peace with Johnston, that we were the conquerors and that we could afford to be generous to the men of the South who had staked their all upon the confederacy and lost.

The armed conflict between the North and the South was war, honorable war, each side believing itself to be in the right, and carried on for years by huge armies and able officers. We called it a rebellion; and yet no man dreamed of hanging or shooting a prisoner. During its progress the soldiers upon both sides felt a respect for each other that in the hour of misfortune amounted to affection. When the confederates laid down their arms our soldiers met them with smiles and shared with them, as only soldiers can share, their rations and their blankets. This feeling was so strong that when the gallant Sherman dictated terms of surrender they seemed to be terms tendered friends, not foes. The home-guard and the politician shrieked with anguish. And now, ten years after, we find the same deadly animosity animating the same class, and a bitterness of feeling that was not felt by the soldiers amid the roar of cannon upon the field of battle.

Of this we had, I am pained to say, a humiliating illustration upon this floor in the last few days. The honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, [Mr. BUTLER,] the leader of the House upon the other side, said in response to a charge of hanging a man in New Orleans during the war:

So far from taking offense, I glory in it; and the trouble has been that I did not hang more than I did.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is the first time, and God send that it may be the last, that we are called upon to hear a northern gentleman and soldier boast of having been an executioner, and regretting that it had not been in his power to hang other men for political offenses. The feeling of the brave soldier on looking back upon the bloody battle-fields where he led his columns into fight is one of regret. He has pride in his success, but pain over the cost of that success; but here is a boast over the gallows when no great soldierly impulse could enter to give it dignity or virtue.

I should feel some alarm lest a portion of the people at the North shared in this feeling, for the remark passed unrebuked from the other side of this Chamber, but the late elections that turned mainly on this grave question reassures me.

In the gentleman's own district there seems to have been a revulsion of popular sentiment, and all his brilliant attainments and powers of speech proved insufficient to retain his valuable services upon this floor. While I speak the party of deadly antagonism is going to pieces, and the legislation of hate, thank God, approaches its end.

The better feelings that animate the soldier seems to have taken hold upon the people, and now, instead of gloating over the slaughter of the past and legislating as if we were in the midst of a bloody war, the Congress of the United States is instructed through the late elections to preach "peace on earth, good will to men." Why, sir, if by marching South we could call from their narrow beds the moldering bones of the confederate dead and reanimate in life those we destroyed, such march would be made with more enthusiasm by the men of the North than any that animated our soldiers in their campaigns of the late conflict.

I believe that with all the abuse and humiliation heaped upon the South since that war, their manhood survives the oppression, and the same generous impulse animates their hearts that stirs our own. It remains for the Christian statesman to grow fat on the legislation of hate and gloat over the cruelties he has through the courage of others been able to practice.

Another distinguished gentleman from the same State drew a vivid picture of the dangers through which he had passed where as he said:

I have been here, sir, when the freedom of debate was vindicated only by forming a hollow square in front of the Speaker's desk while men uttered their sentiments here in the House; when the galleries were filled with armed men, whose threats to silence debate on this floor were audible in any part of this Hall. I had hoped, sir, that that day had passed and passed forever. I had hoped that the condition of things which made such a proceeding possible was never to return again.

Certainly, sir, these were deplorable times and much to be lamented; but, sir, I think that bad as ruffianism was, according to the gentleman's story, it was a healthier thing than that condition which, however pleasant it may have been, gave the country the "Credit Mobilier," the El Paso corruption, the Pacific mail subsidy, and other frauds that have gone well-nigh to destroy the faith of the American people in their Government. The late war, properly considered, wiped out the deadly antagonism that gave birth to the violence the gentleman laments. He need fear no return of such. In the next Congress we shall have, it is said, eighty-odd confederate soldiers. I can assure my friend that in these eighty members he will find not only gentlemen, but kind-hearted and generous men, whose impulse will be to protect the weak rather than to encourage violence. The men who had the courage to fight for the confederacy, now that they have given their promise, will have the honor to keep it and stand for our liberties and the right.

With these views I have watched with anxiety the course of the General Government in its treatment of the South. And, sir, it is hard to tell whether that treatment has been more stupid than fraudulent or more fraudulent than stupid. The corruptions that characterize the political management of the South culminated under a pretense of protecting the colored people. The political managers have been the colored people's deadliest enemy. Organizing these ignorant masses into secret associations, they have sent down political adventurers to control and direct them, and brought the whole Army of the United States to protect their infamous plunder and oppression. Keeping alive the animosities of the late war, these men have sought through an abuse of the word patriotism to perpetuate its despotism. The negro race is mainly the unskilled labor of the South. Left to themselves labor and capital would have naturally harmonized, stimulated by the wants of the late war that made commercial reconstruction a necessity. In clothing the negro with full citizenship and giving him the privileges of the ballot-box we made him master of the situation. If he failed in securing safety to himself, it was not the fault of the southern white man, but the misconduct of the political managers under the patronage of the General Government.

It will be observed that in those States where the democracy obtain control, such as Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina, Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, Missouri, and Texas, we have peace, prosperity, and good order. No man is made afraid, and equal political rights are extended to all; while in those States that are under the despotism of republican politicians and the Army anarchy and outrage, hand in hand, shock the people of the United States.

A southern State under control of the Administration, is a state where officials plunder with impunity, protected by the bayonets of the regular Army. Take, for instance, South Carolina. The retiring governor plundered the State on a taxation that amounted to confiscation, and while the debt was piled up in hopeless bankruptcy, there is nothing left to show in return but the enormous wealth and riotous living of shameless officials. Negroes, but lately field hands, are made officials because they are negroes. All social restraints are swept away. Taxation is but another name for confiscation. To illustrate, I give the following statement:

Taxes and taxable property in South Carolina before and since the war.
The taxable property before the war was.....	$490,000,000
Taxable property in 1874.....	170,000,000
Taxes levied before the war.....	500,000
Taxes levied in 1873.....	2,700,000
Legislative expenses before the war.....	40,000
Legislative expenses, 1873.....	291,000
Public printing before the war.....	5,000
Public printing, 1873.....	450,000

And when the oppressed tax-payer of South Carolina came to Washington last winter for relief, he received no encouragement from the President, and his petition to Congress was referred to a committee, where it will sleep until adjournment on the 4th of next March. These tax-payers were white men and democrats. How different would have been their reception and the consideration of their petition had they been negroes and republicans I need not stop to say.

LOUISIANA.

More than ten years have rolled by since the close of the war. The republican party during all this time has had control of the General Government and in Louisiana, but has not succeeded in reorganizing and reconstructing this State; and why? The happiness, prosperity, and welfare of the people of Louisiana would be advanced by reconstruction and self-government; while both the material and political prosperity of the country would be increased by quiet and proper self-government in Louisiana.

During all these ten years the war, which we supposed ended in the surrender of the South, has been continued in Louisiana solely for the purpose of robbing her helpless people. Kellogg and his followers, backed by the regular Army, have been managing the affairs of this unfortunate people, and have so robbed and wronged and have so outraged every principle of self-government and civil liberty as to cause the deepest indignation among the people of the country, without respect to party, against the cruelty and tyranny of the authorities in power. From the records of Congress I gather the story of this unfortunate State to be as follows:

During the late presidential contest steps were taken to secure the vote of Louisiana. It was known it would be largely liberal and democratic. To this end a bill was filed and an order of court procured from Judge Durell, since arraigned for impeachment, and his resignation accepted by the President while charges were pending against him.

Prior to the issuing of this order of court W. P. Kellogg, acting governor of Louisiana, which place he then as now holds by the bayonets of the regular Army, wrote to Attorney-General Williams the following, and I quote his words:

The supreme court is known to sympathize with us and has incidentally passed upon the legality of our returning board.

And again he says in the same communication:

Our returning board being held as the legal returning board, and in nowise affected by the promulgation of the recent election bill, may make the return required by law, which will show the republican State ticket elected and a republican majority in the Legislature.

But to enforce his wicked proceedings it was necessary to have the support of Government bayonets, therefore this man concludes his communication with the following significant paragraph:

I therefore respectfully suggest that General Emory, who I think appreciates the necessity and sympathizes with the republican party here, be instructed to comply with any requisition that the United States courts may make upon him in support of its mandates and to preserve the peace.

To this demand the Attorney-General, George H. Williams, makes the following prompt response:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, December 3, 1872.

S. B. PACKARD, Esq.,

United States Marshal, New Orleans, Louisiana:

You are to enforce the decrees and mandates of the United States court no matter by whom resisted, and General Emory will furnish you with all necessary troops for that purpose.

GEORGE H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

Thus a bill in chancery was brought before a corrupt judge "known to sympathize," and whose decision was known in advance, and the necessary order obtained, which the troops were called in to enforce; and with what effect General Casey, collector at New Orleans, telegraphs to the President, as follows:

NEW ORLEANS, December 6, 1872.

President GRANT:

Marshal Packard took possession of the State-house this morning at an early hour with military posse, in obedience to a mandate of the circuit court, to prevent illegal assemblage of persons under guise of authority of Warmoth's returning board in violation of injunction of circuit court. Decree of court just rendered declares Warmoth's returning board illegal, and orders the returns of the election forthwith to be placed before the legal board. The board will probably soon declare the result of the election of the officers of the State Legislature, which will meet in the State-house with the protection of court. The decree was sweeping in its provisions, and if enforced will save the republican Legislature and State government, and check Warmoth in his usurpations.

JAMES F. CASEY.

The troops, however, do not seem to have acted with sufficient promptness, and General Casey again flies to the telegraph:

NEW ORLEANS, December 11, 1872.

President GRANT:

Parties interested in the success of the democratic party, particularly the New Orleans Times, are making desperate efforts to array the people against us. Old citizens are dragged into an opposition they do not feel, and pressure is hourly growing; our members are poor and our adversaries are rich, and offers are made that are difficult for them to withstand. There is danger that they will break our quorum. The delay in placing the troops at the disposal of Governor Pinchback in accordance with joint resolution of Monday is disheartening our friends and cheering our enemies. If requisition of Legislature is complied with all difficulty will be dissipated, the party saved, and everything go on smoothly. If this is done, the tide will be turned at once in our favor. The real underlying sentiment is with us, if it can be encouraged. Governor Pinchback acting with great discretion, as is the Legislature, and they will so continue.

JAMES F. CASEY,
Collector.

In the mean time the good citizens of Louisiana, amazed and disheartened at these arbitrary and despotic proceedings, selected a committee of one hundred of their ablest and their best-known citizens to proceed to Washington and respectfully petition the President for relief. Before the committee could leave New Orleans to execute the humble right of petition, it was met by the following shameful order from Attorney-General Williams, that far exceeds any ever issued by a European despot:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, December 13, 1872.

Hon. JOHN MCENERY,

New Orleans:

Your visit with a hundred citizens will be unavailing so far as the President is concerned. His decision is made and will not be changed, and the sooner it is acquiesced in the sooner good order and peace will be restored.

GEORGE H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

The usurpation was accomplished; and from that day to this the people of Louisiana have been plundered and oppressed by these creatures of the Administration, over whom they could have no control. The ballot-box was denied them. They could not punish; the courts were closed against them; and, bound hand and foot, they have been the helpless victims of the foulest oppression. If any one doubts, let him read the speech of Senator CARPENTER in the Senate last session.

The Kellogg government came in with a Gatling gun in the hands of United States officials, sustained by the bayonets of the regular Army in the enforcement of an illegal order from a corrupt and incompetent court. It was driven out last fall before the frown of an exasperated and desperate people. At that time we are told that even Collector Casey, who assisted in inaugurating Kellogg, turned upon him and besought the President not to interfere; while the very negroes themselves cheered the victors as they marched in triumph to the State-house. Before this march of an indignant people the usurpers, possessed of the guilty feeling that makes cowards of all men, fled in dismay. It was claimed that they had a majority at the back of the people of Louisiana. This majority, if it existed, as they claim, was thoroughly organized and well armed, and yet their leaders, without striking a blow worthy the name, hid themselves from sight, while crying piteously to the Executive at Washington for help. Then came an event that illustrates with striking force two facts. The first is the conservative feeling that animates this sorely tried and down-trodden people. The other, the fearfully despotic power that has grown up since the war at this national capital. A single officer, with less than a regiment, by an order of a few words, restored the usurping government and caused the indignant citizens to quietly lay down their arms and retire to their homes. There is no despotism in Europe that can give an instance of power such as this. I know, sir, it is alleged that a fear of the General Government controlled the people. And I might say that such argument only proves what I assert. Why should our Government be feared by a people it was created to protect? Have we come to that pass that our Union is held together by the Army? If so, and fear was the element that caused the oppressed to submit in silence, it is not Louisiana alone, but every State in the Union that is threatened with the loss of its liberties.

Following this extraordinary chain of events came a struggle through the ballot-box. I will not say this people had the promise of a fair election; but, animated by a hope that they might be heard through that which makes the very foundation of our political structure, they appealed to the ballot-box. We may be sure that the men who would seize and hold by violence the powers of government would not hesitate to secure that usurpation through fraud. The so-called count of votes, the action of the returning board, was in accordance with all that had preceded in this history of outrage. Under pretext of intimidation of voters, that never existed in fact, enough conservative members of the Legislature were thrown out to insure a majority for the usurpers by a board pronounced by the republican committee sent by Congress to investigate the matter to have been illegal. And now, sir, the fraud ends and the violence begins again. So infamous was the outrage contemplated, that it was necessary to select a man who could carry it through without hesitation and with unscrupulous energy of purpose. What they needed is what is known as a "mere soldier." General McDowell was in command of the department, as gallant a soldier as ever blessed a country with his courage; he is no less the citizen. Possessed of fine abilities and a rare culture, he could not be called upon for work such as this. His subordinate, General Emory, had already shrunk from the duties imposed upon him. General Sheridan was the man selected.

Not daring to assert their work in advance, he went South under a pretense of relaxation from duty. Arriving in New Orleans at the moment when the Legislature was about to assemble, he struck the opportune moment and at once assumed command. We had had Gatling guns and bayonets under the control of custom-house officers. We had seen the regular Army dispersing an armed people under a pretext of re-establishing law and order, but now, for the first time, the second officer of the Army of the United States orders that Army into a legislative hall of a sovereign State, not for the purpose of preventing bloodshed or even preserving order, but to settle a mere political question by the bayonet; not for the purpose of driving that Legislature out, but for the purpose of settling with the bayonet who might sit as members of that Legislature and who might not.

The feelings that animated this soldier on approaching the scene of his action may be gathered from his first dispatch. He had scarcely landed at New Orleans before he telegraphed to his chief at Washington the following extraordinary indictment of a people he was to govern:

HEADQUARTERS DIVISION OF THE MISSOURI,
New Orleans, January 4, 1875. (Received 4—11.45 p. m.)

W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

It is with deep regret that I have to announce to you the existence in this State of a spirit of defiance to all lawful authority and an insecurity of life which is hardly realized by the General Government or the country at large. The lives of citizens have become so jeopardized, that unless something is done to give protection to the people all security usually afforded by law will be overridden. Defiance to the laws and the murder of individuals seem to be looked upon by the community here from a standpoint which gives impunity to all who choose to indulge in either, and the civil government appears powerless to punish or even arrest. I have to-night assumed control over the Department of the Gulf.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General United States Army.

On the very day of this dispatch armed soldiers of his command invaded the halls of legislation and threw out by force enough conservative members to leave the conspirators in possession of the government. The day following he again telegraphed a dispatch that indicates the "mere soldier" is yet animated by feelings that possessed him before he had even a knowledge of affairs he was sent to control. Burke said "that he would not know how to frame an indictment against an entire people." The "mere soldier" gives him the form of such indictment in the following dispatch:

[Telegram dated headquarters Military Division of the Missouri, New Orleans, Louisiana, January 5, 1875. Received January 5.]

W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

I think that the terrorism now existing in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas could be entirely removed and confidence and fair dealing established by the arrest and trial of the ringleaders of the armed White Leagues. If Congress would pass a bill declaring them banditti, they could be tried by a military commission. The ringleaders of this banditti, who murdered men here on the 14th of last September, and also more recently at Vicksburg, Mississippi, should, in justice to law and order and the peace and prosperity of this southern part of the country, be punished. It is possible that if the President would issue a proclamation declaring them banditti no further action need be taken except that which would devolve upon me.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General United States Army.

You will observe that in this dispatch he sweeps in the entire people. And at the end of ten years so-called reconstruction finds no remedy for the disorders charged than those gained through martial law, drum-head courts, and sudden executions. This is the duty that he proposes should be devolved upon him through a proclamation of the President.

The man who would have made such a proposition as this when Lee surrendered, at the end of a cruel and bloody war, would have been regarded with horror by the entire people of the United States. A war of hate has produced more evil than a war of arms. At the end of ten years of what should have been peace we have this bloody proposition made by the second officer of the Army of the United States, and this, sir, receives the sanction of his masters at Washington. In response the Secretary of War telegraphs as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington City, January 6, 1875.

General P. H. SHERIDAN,
New Orleans, Louisiana:

Your telegrams all received. The President and all of us have full confidence, and thoroughly approve your course.

WM. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

Fearing this telegram may be considered hasty, later in the same day the Secretary reiterates it, as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 6, 1875.

General P. H. SHERIDAN,
New Orleans, Louisiana:

I telegraphed you hastily to-day, answering your dispatch. You seem to fear that we had been misled by biased or partial statements of your acts. Be assured that the President and Cabinet confide in your wisdom, and rest in the belief that all acts of yours have been and will be judicious. This I intended to say in my brief telegram.

WM. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

Now, sir, since when in the history of our Republic has the interference of the "mere soldier" in our civil affairs become a necessity? In a war with a foreign power I can readily understand that the Army is from sheer necessity a mere "machine," but it is in civil differences that the soldier disappears in the citizen. We have been told in Europe, in like cases, "that tyranny ceases when the bayonet thinks." Regardless of this great lesson we now find ourselves called upon to recognize the "mere soldier." Sir, it were better for us to suffer from the assassination pictured by this general and all the evils that come of a disorganized political and social condition (for they will in time correct themselves) than to build up in our midst that blind military power that has been through all ages the fittest tool of despotism. The "mere soldier," sir, is not only foreign to our traditions but he is fatal to our liberties. Under the name of law and order through such instruments the most fearful crimes have been perpetrated against law and order. The people of Louisiana are no aliens, and in this they become the people of the United States. I speak not only in behalf of their privileges, but that of my own and of every citizen of the Republic.

We cannot disturb one stone in the great structure of civil and political liberty without weakening the foundation. We cannot employ the armed man, who has been educated and trained to blind obedience, without taking the very key-stone from the arch. This is not punishment in Louisiana, it is ruin to us all. The same authority and blind obedience that sent a file of soldiers into the Legislature of Louisiana, can send an armed force into this Hall and in the name of law and order wipe out the last vestige of constitutional liberty. And were this done we would find the same men on this floor and throughout the country denouncing us for any remonstrance or resistance that we might make.

It is said that history repeats itself, which means that human nature is the same throughout all time. The factious supporters of despotism in Europe find their counterpart here. From them we appeal to the people and the Constitution. I thank God that the late elections indicate knowledge, firmness, and courage in our court of appeal.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, the people of this country were startled at the announcement of the events that transpired on the 4th day of January, 1875, at the capital of the State of Louisiana. On that day, at that place, in a time of peace, the soldiers of the United States Army, with fixed bayonets, entered the capitol of the sovereign State of Louisiana and broke up and dispersed by armed force the representative branch of her General Assembly. This outrageous act of tyranny and military despotism was committed upon the order of the person who claimed to be the governor of the State, and was approved by the President of the United States and his Cabinet ministers.

The sole pretext for this high-handed usurpation was that in the opinion of William Pitt Kellogg the house of representatives was an illegal assembly. The members were chosen by the electors of Louisiana at the time and place and in the manner prescribed by law. The house of representatives had assembled at the time and place fixed by law for the meeting of the Legislature under a written constitution, which provides, among other things, that—

Each house of the General Assembly shall judge of the qualification, election, and return of its members.

The returning board failed to pass upon the election of five persons claiming to have been chosen, and expressly referred the question of their election to the house of representatives. The house, in the exercise of a plain constitutional right, adjudged that they were entitled to seats, and adopted a resolution seating them as members, subject of course to any contest that might be filed. And this is the ground of alleged illegality upon which Kellogg based his order or request to the military to disperse the house. What law made Kellogg the judge of the qualification, election, and return of the members of the house of representatives? The constitution of Louisiana made the house itself the judge of that question; and the assumption on the part of Kellogg to determine the question of who were or who were not qualified, elected, and returned as members was a plain and palpable violation of the constitution which he had sworn to support. Claiming to be the chief magistrate of a great State, the guardian of her rights and the defender of her constitution, he tramples that constitution into the dust at the expense of his official oath, and sacrifices the rights and liberties of the people to personal aggrandizement and party supremacy, and thus embalms himself in historic infamy as a usurper and a tyrant. There are none so stupid as not to know that Kellogg invoked the arm of military power to disperse the house of representatives, not because it was illegal, not because the five members were improperly admitted, but because a majority of the members were not in political sympathy with him and the party with which he is allied, and of which he is the fit representative and exponent in the South. The incipient step, therefore, in all this trouble on the 4th of January was a usurpation. The whole difficulty arose from the claim of that burlesque upon the idea of a governor to judge of the qualification, election, and return of the members of the house of representatives, a right which the constitution secured to the house itself, and a right about which there could not possibly be any doubt.

The American people begin to understand, and history will faithfully record, the extent to which the irrepressible carpet-bagger has exhausted southern patience and fatigued southern indignation. And by whom was this judgment of illegality pronounced? By a man who held the office of governor by virtue of an order issued ex parte at the dark hour of midnight by a judge who resigned to avoid impeachment by his own party, for granting that order, upon the ground that he had no jurisdiction in the matter. If Durell had no right to grant the order, for the want of jurisdiction, that practically kept Kellogg in office, then the judgment was a nullity and Kellogg took nothing by it. If Kellogg held the office by virtue of a popular election, and in accordance with the popular will, why was it necessary for a corrupt judge to draggle the judicial ermine in the mire of party politics to sustain him?

The next step in this drama of usurpation and outrage was the invasion and dispersion of the house of representatives by armed Federal soldiers, supplied by the Federal Government upon the application of Kellogg. The ground upon which this interference is based is not that there was an invasion of Louisiana, not that domestic violence existed, but that in his opinion the house of representatives was an illegal assembly. And the Federal authorities coincided in judgment with Kellogg and granted his request, dispersed the representatives chosen by the people according to the constitution and laws of Louisiana, and installed in power those whom the people had rejected but whom the returning board, by the most stupendous fraud, declared to have been elected. But concede that it was an illegal assembly; concede that the five men sworn in as members under the resolution of the house were improperly, were illegally admitted; what law constituted either Kellogg or the armed military the judge of the qualification, election, and return of these members? What constitution authorized them, or what law, State or Federal, authorized them to break up and destroy one branch of the General Assembly of a State of the American Union? Whether the house of representatives was an illegal assembly or not is not the question. But the question is, by virtue of what authority the Federal Government took it upon itself to judge of the legality of the assembly, and by virtue of what authority of law the Federal Government enforced with the relentless arm of military power the judgment which it pronounced adverse to its legality. These are the questions which the law-abiding and liberty-loving people of the United States, in a thousand forms and through a thousand instrumentalities, are pressing with the earnestness of alarm upon the Chief Magistrate and his constitutional advisers. Failing to show the authority demanded, the act stands a naked usurpation.

Is there no cause for alarm when the Chief Magistrate of the Republic, clothed by law with vast power and patronage, the chief of a powerful party, distinguished for military prowess and achievements, destroys by the fiat of power the Legislature of a State and strikes down at one blow the constitutional liberty of the people?

The question still recurs, by what authority of law can this interference be justified? Section 4 of article 4 of the Constitution is invoked in vain for this purpose. It provides—

That the United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion, and on application of the Legislature, or of the executive, (when the Legislature cannot be convened,) against domestic violence.

This section neither binds nor authorizes the President of the United States to guarantee to each State a republican form of government. The usurpation of this power by a republican President was one of the grounds of impeachment alleged against him by a republican House of Representatives.

In the case of Luther vs. Borden, Chief Justice Taney said:

It rests with Congress to decide what government is the established one in a State; for as the United States guarantees to each State a republican form of government, Congress must necessarily decide what government is established in the State before it can determine whether it is republican or not; and when the Senators and Representatives are admitted into the councils of the Union, the authority of the government under which they are appointed, as well as its republican character, is recognized by the proper constitutional authority, and its decision is binding on every other department of the Government, and could not be questioned in a judicial tribunal.

But no question is made upon the form of the government of Louisiana. All concede that her government was republican in form. If the question were involved, Congress and not the President would be the judge. Does the provision of the section under consideration, which guarantees to each State protection against invasion and domestic violence, justify the dispersion of the house of representatives by the armed military? Unquestionably not, because there was no invasion and no domestic violence, and for the additional reason that the Legislature must make the call, if it can be convened. The Legislature was convened, and did not make the application for the interposition of the military. The state of facts upon which alone the governor was authorized to call for Federal assistance did not exist. This call for Federal troops was made by Kellogg when the Legislature could have been convened, when it was actually convened, and for that reason Kellogg had no constitutional right to make it, nor any other power except the Legislature. The application of Kellogg was itself a violation of the Constitution. It was the exercise of a power which depended upon the happening of a contingency, when the contingency upon which the right attached had not happened.

Again, domestic violence did not exist in New Orleans at the time. If it is said that white men were armed, or that white-leaguers were armed, the reply is that the Constitution protects white men and white-leaguers in the right to keep and bear arms. And the truth is that they were compelled to bear them in New Orleans to prevent the armed police from stealing them.

The exercise of a constitutional right by the people of Louisiana, or any other State, cannot justify the dispersion and destruction of the house of representatives by armed power.

The American people thoroughly understand the reason why Kellogg appealed to force, and the alacrity with which the force was supplied, and the vigor and promptness with which it was used. It was not to protect the State against domestic violence, because domestic violence did not exist, in the sense in which that term is used in the Constitution. The expulsion of a legal, and the induction of a fraudulent house of representatives was not protection against domestic violence. The plea of domestic violence is a pretext, a sham. The aid of the Federal arm was invoked to dissolve the house of representatives because that house was adverse to Kellogg in political sentiments and party affiliation. It was invoked to maintain a government that did not derive its powers from the consent of the governed. It was invoked to maintain a usurpation, in defiance of the popular will, originating in fraud and upheld by the midnight order in chancery of a judge driven to resign by an impending impeachment, and a government that is still maintained by the unconstitutional interference of armed Federal power.

I have characterized Kellogg as a pretended governor, and I have the very highest official authority for insisting that he is not and never was the rightful governor of Louisiana. The President of the United States, in his special message to the Senate upon the question of Kellogg's election, says:

It has been bitterly and persistently alleged that Kellogg was not elected. Whether he was or not is not altogether certain, nor is it any more certain that his competitor, McEnery, was chosen. The election was a gigantic fraud, and there are no reliable returns of the result.

The President's recognition of Kellogg as the governor is not based upon the fact of his election, for the election under which he claims to have been chosen is pronounced to be a gigantic fraud. And it is expressly declared that there are no reliable returns of the result of that election.

From these two facts it would seem to be impossible that Kellogg should be the governor. If the election was a gigantic fraud, then nobody was elected. Fraud vitiates elections as well as contracts. No person ever did or ever can rightfully exercise the functions of an elective office when the election itself is a gigantic fraud. The President says that "there were no reliable returns of the result." Then there is no evidence of his election; because the only legal evidence of his election is reliable returns of the result, and that evidence the President declares does not exist. The presidential recognition is based upon the ground that "Kellogg obtains possession of the office, and in his opinion had more right to it than McEnery." But how did Kellogg obtain possession of the office? By reliable returns of the result of the election, the only way in which he could rightfully obtain it? Not at all; but virtually and practically by the midnight ex parte order of a Federal judge, who was compelled to resign to avoid impeachment by a republican House because he granted that illegal order in the exercise of a usurped jurisdiction. And this is the governor who appealed to bayonets to determine a question that the constitution of Louisiana declares the house of representatives shall decide!

The constitution of a sovereign State of this Union has been trampled into the dust in the capital of that State beneath the ruthless tread of an armed soldiery, and the patriotic citizens of the Republic, East, West, North, and South, in alarm demand to know by what authority of law the deed was done, and with united voice and earnest hearts they press the question. The leaders of the republican party have shrewdly attempted to divert the public attention from this thrilling inquiry by the oft-repeated and threadbare cry of outrages, proscription, murder, and insecurity of life and property in the South. Is this a manly meeting of the issue? Do they suppose that the American people will accept this old story, repeated a thousand times and as often refuted, as a justification of this wrong done to Louisiana? Crimes always have been and always will be perpetrated by all classes in every form of government and in every type of civilization. Lawlessness, crime, and bloodshed exist to a greater or less extent in every State in the Union. This is to be deplored, it cannot be prevented; it can only be punished. If crimes are not punished in the States of Louisiana and Mississippi, who are to blame for it? The republican party has had control of these State governments in all their departments, executive, legislative, and judicial, ever since they were reconstructed; whether rightfully or by usurpation, they have had control. Why has crime not been punished? Where is the judicial arm of those States under the domination of the colored republican officials? Why does it not afford protection? The admission that crime cannot be punished is a confession that the republican party is incapable of governing in those States at least. In every State under democratic rule and government in the South crime is punished, rights are protected, law enforced, and peace and order assured. This difference does not arise from a difference in the people to be governed, but from the difference in the capabilities and methods of those who govern.

Everybody knows that the lamentable state of affairs in Louisiana has resulted from the efforts made to secure power and plunder by the miserable rival factions of the republican party, headed respectively by Warmoth and Kellogg. Yet this wretched abortion of a State government, brought into being at the dark hour of midnight by the order in chancery of a judge then drunk and since abhorred, confessedly unable to protect life or punish crime, is the government which Federal soldiers overthrew the constitution of Louisiana to perpetuate over a people that have the right to be free. What agency General Sheridan had in this affair does not appear. The President informs us that he—

Requested him to go to Louisiana to observe and report the situation there, and, in his opinion necessary, to assume the command; which he did on the 4th instant, after the legislative disturbance had occurred, at nine o'clock p. m., a number of hours after the disturbance.

Whether he was sent down with the view of hurting somebody we are left to conjecture. It is clear he was on the ground at the time, and deemed it necessary to assume command and "report." He reports as follows:

W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

I think that the terrorism now existing in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas could be entirely removed and confidence and fair-dealing established by the arrest and trial of the ringleaders of the armed White League. If Congress would pass a bill declaring them banditti, they could be tried by a military commission. The ringleaders of this banditti, who murdered men here on the 14th of last September, and also more recently at Vicksburg, Mississippi, should, in justice to law and order and the peace and prosperity of this southern part of the country, be punished. It is possible that if the President would issue a proclamation declaring them banditti no further action need be taken except that which would devolve upon me.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General United States Army.

To which report the Secretary of War replied:

Your telegrams all received. The President and all of us have full confidence and thoroughly approve your course.

The simple proposition in this suggestion is that Congress suspend the writ of habeas corpus in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas, and turn the destinies, rights, liberties, and life of the citizens of these States, in a time of peace, over to the tender mercies of a military commission appointed by General Sheridan. But reflecting that Congress might not see it in that light, and might still have some little regard for the Constitution and the liberties of the people, he recommends a shorter and more summary method of disposing of the white citizens of three States:

Let the President issue a proclamation declaring them banditti, and no further action need be taken except that which would devolve upon me.

That would settle the question truly. That would put a quietus to strife; that would protect law and suppress terrorism; that would give peace to these States; the peace that Hastings gave to Hindostan; the peace that Austria gave to Hungary; the peace that Russia gave to Poland—the peace of death. Yet this advice is given by the second officer in rank in the United States Army, coolly, deliberately, in a time of peace, to the republican President of the United States, and the lightning flashes back the presidential expression of confidence and approval. And all this under a Government whose written Constitution declares that the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus shall not be suspended unless when in cases of rebellion or invasion the public safety may require.

Mr. Speaker, it is singular that so much horror is manifested at the White Leagues of the South and none against the black leagues. It is notorious that almost the entire body of colored voters in the South are members of oath-bound leagues, meeting in darkness, and many of them armed and incited to the most deadly hostility to white men by bad men of the republican party for selfish partisan ends. But no word of complaint or rebuke escapes republican lips, no republican press teems with denunciations of them, and no arm of Federal power is bared for their suppression.

The midnight heavens blush in redness with the flames of burning dwellings and gin-houses in South Carolina, and the Lieutenant-General of the Army advises no suspension of the writ of habeas corpus that he may summarily try the incendiary and punish the arson. Why is this? Is it because the turpitude of crime consists in the color of the perpetrator; or is it because it is done by those who maintain a negro despotism over the people of that suffering State? Why is there no condemnation of the black-leaguers in the South? Is it because they were organized by adventurers in the interest of the republican party that they are not condemned?

Why are not the armed organizations and hostile demonstrations of the negroes in the South denounced? It was this state of affairs that created the necessity for White League organizations. It is because the negroes have been armed and incited to hostility to the whites by republicans to secure power and plunder in defiance of the popular will. This denunciation of the White Leagues, this cry of lawlessness and insecurity of life and property is raised to evade the issue and divert the public attention from the true, the vital question involved. That question is by virtue of what authority of law the armed soldiers of the United States dispersed the house of representatives of the State of Louisiana. It is no answer to this question to say that lawlessness, violence, and intimidation exist in Louisiana. This is the answer of the Lieutenant-General of the Army. Three bishops of different branches of the Christian church, and the pastor of the synagogue caveat the truth of the allegation in these words:

We, the undersigned, believe it our duty to proclaim to the whole American people that these charges are unmerited, unfounded, and erroneous, and can have no other effect than that of serving the interest of corrupt politicians who are at this moment using the most extreme efforts to perpetuate their power over the State of Louisiana.

I do not care to discuss the issue of fact thus joined. But I will be allowed to state that the very able report of the committee of this House, a majority of whom are distinguished republicans, explicitly and unequivocally sustains the bishops and contradicts the general. But admit that disorders exist in Louisiana; who is responsible for them? If crime is unpunished; if life and property are insecure; if business is deranged and ruined; if property is depreciated in value; if taxation amounts to confiscation, in the language of your committee, and if the people are discontented, who is responsible for it all? This deplorable state of affairs is the legitimate result of the misrule of rival republican factions utterly unworthy of public confidence and wholly incapable of securing the objects for which government was instituted. And it was to sustain those in power, thus unworthy, thus incapable, and of whose election there were no reliable returns, that the Federal soldiers broke up the house of representatives.

It is the duty of the State governments to punish crime, to enforce law, and to protect right. And that government that fails in these objects, fails to execute the high trusts with which government is invested for the public good. In the State of Georgia, under republican rule, crime was not punished; but it is due to the courts of that State to say that it was no fault of theirs. A republican governor, himself a fugitive from justice, pardoned the most outrageous cases of murder, both before and after conviction, and in many cases after convictions had been affirmed by the supreme court. The corruption of the executive palsied the arm of the judiciary, and the criminal went free.

It is true, and the people of this country know that it is true, that crime is punished, right protected, and order maintained in every southern State in which the democracy are in authority. Why? Because democrats have been placed in power by the popular will. The people govern themselves. If disorders exist in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas, they were produced by the struggle for power by rival republican factions in Louisiana and Arkansas, and by a carpet-bag, negro government in Mississippi that was incapable of discharging the functions of government.

I cannot relieve my mind from the conviction that there is method in all this madness. I think that Kellogg discloses the secret when in his communication to the President at Long Branch of August the 19th he despondingly says that Louisiana is now the last State in the Southwest, except Mississippi, that remains true to the republican party. It would seem, then, that the supremacy of the republican party after all was the great question. If Louisiana remains true to the republican party, why is not the republican party able to govern Louisiana?

A distinguished leader of that party in high official position says, speaking of the southern people:

What they want is to be let alone, and then they will take possession of Louisiana, and they will take possession of Mississippi in the same way, and they will take possession of Florida in the same way, and they will take possession of South Carolina in the same way, and thus they intend to secure a solid democratic South.

Can it be possible! Is it credible that peace, quiet, law, and order in these States are to be sacrificed to party supremacy; and still who doubts it?

It is boldly proclaimed by one of the first men in ability and position in the republican party that if the white people of the South are let alone it will secure a solid democratic South. And that is literally true. If let alone by the Federal Government, if left to exercise the constitutional right of local self-government, there would soon be a solid democratic South. This is the reason why the Federal soldiers did not let Louisiana alone. When let alone, the people are opposed to usurpation; when let alone, they are in favor of the subordination of the military to the civil authority; when let alone, they are capable of punishing crime, of preserving peace, and of enforcing law.

The trouble with Louisiana has been that she was not let alone. Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, and other States were let alone, and they recently went solidly democratic. And leave the South alone, and every State will soon be solidly democratic. This is the reason why the armed soldiery of the United States did not let the house of representatives of Louisiana alone. It was if let alone democratic. It may soon become necessary to apply the method adopted in Louisiana to Massachusetts and New York. It is a very effective way to convert democratic States into military despotisms. But just now a universal demand comes up from the people to be let alone. They are honest, they are capable, they are patriotic, and when let alone they will maintain public liberty, they will preserve free institutions, and transmit unimpaired to posterity the blood bought heritage of constitutional government. The complaint they make is that they are not let alone; that the armed soldiers of the United States determined a question by force which under the constitution the house of representatives alone had the right to determine. Our fathers intended that they should be let alone in the exercise of those rights which were not expressly delegated to the Federal Government; hence they said in article 9 of amendments to the Constitution that—

The enumeration in the Constitution, of certain rights, shall not be construed to deny or disparage others retained by the people.

And in article 10 of amendment that—

The powers not delegated to the United States by the Constitution, nor prohibited by it to the States, are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people.

The people of this country have the right to be let alone in the exercise of all the rights and powers which were not surrendered by them in the Constitution to the Federal Government, and this is the difference between the creeds of the democratic and republican parties. The democratic doctrine is the freedom of the people to exercise those rights of local self-government not surrendered in the Constitution to the Federal Government; while the republican party maintains the supremacy of the Federal authority over the local affairs of the States, even to the installation and maintenance in power of a governor never elected and the dispersion of a house of representatives duly elected, and that this power may be rightfully exercised by the executive through the arm of the military. This issue is fairly and squarely made. Louisiana is the illustration. It cannot be evaded. This usurpation must be sustained or repudiated. If sustained, constitutional liberty in this country is dead; if repudiated, the supremacy of the republican party is ended. It remains for the American people to decide it. No graver question ever engaged the attention of any people or the deliberations of any assembly. The number of public meetings throughout the country shows with what intense anxiety the great heart of the American people throbs at its contemplation.

This question of usurpation cannot be answered by charges of treason and rebellion in the late deplorable war. That national calamity is past. The issue it involved was submitted to the arbitrament of the sword, and the award was against the South. The people of that section accept the situation and abide the result. They pressed their bleeding lips to the oath of allegiance which you presented, and repledged their fidelity to the Constitution and the Union. By that pledge they stand, and in its maintenance they would perish. The brave men of the South will defend the flag of the Union with the same heroism that they bore it on the bloody hillsides of Buena Vista and Cerro Gordo. But they want liberty with the Union. They re-echo the immortal sentiment of New England's greatest statesman, "Liberty and Union, now and forever, one and inseparable."

When the people of this great Republic meet at the approaching centennial, they want no State crushed beneath the iron heel of military despotism, bound by the cruel chains of slavery, bleeding in the dust from wounds inflicted by Federal bayonets. They wish to meet the people of this country on that occasion from the East, North, and West as brethren, identified in interest, sharing the same hopes, animated by the same patriotism, and involved in a common destiny, and in the spirit of magnanimity and fraternity forget and forgive the bitter and unfortunate past; and drawing inspiration from the spirit of our fathers, on that hallowed ground, rekindle on the altar of a common country the flame of freedom. The institutions of this country cannot be perpetuated by force. They rest for support upon the hearts and affections of the American people. Then let justice be done to suffering, down-trodden Louisiana. Let the Federal soldiers be withdrawn from her soil; leave her ruined yet patient people to govern themselves. And let us inaugurate an era of equality among the States and of devotion to the Constitution; an era of peace, of justice, of friendship. And let us maintain and transmit to posterity unimpaired the sacred trust of free institutions and constitutional liberty secured to us by the heroism and blood of our fathers.

TARIFF FOR PROTECTION TO AMERICAN INDUSTRY.

Mr. WARD, of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, approving as I do the objects and purposes to be attained by House bill No. 4680; to further protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government, introduced by the Committee on Ways and Means, I desire to occupy the attention of the House for a few minutes in favor of its general provisions.

When we look at the condition of the country and find almost every branch of industry depressed, capital and labor alike without the rewards and remuneration they should receive, it becomes our plain duty, so far as we are able, to devise measures which will restore the country to thrift and advancement. To secure these objects I would give to our vast agricultural interests, our cotton, our tobacco, our rice, sugar, and cereals all the aids which an enlightened public policy can give them; and we should build up every department of manufacturing skill and labor by steady, wise, and liberal protection. Duties on certain productions grown abroad, such as tea and coffee, which are almost classed among the necessities of life, have been entirely abrogated, but those on articles of luxury and taste and those on important manufactures which enter into direct competition with home labor and home interests should be protected.

Our present tariff system is wanting in symmetry and proportion in some of its parts, and should be adjusted to the interests of the country. We must not be misled by the fallacies which are presented to us on this subject. We have a country of almost boundless resources, and we must seek to develop them with a steady eye to our growth and prosperity. Our mines of coal and iron, the boundless wealth of the Pacific coast, the wonderful areas of the precious metals, give us the real prestige of power, and we must build on them a true and lasting prosperity. The industries of the southern people must be sustained and manufactories must use the cotton where it is grown. The interests of the Eastern and Middle States must be judiciously watched and guarded. Their mechanics and laborers must be protected from a too direct competition with foreign labor. We should accomplish all these results here by wise and generous legislation. We must not be afraid of increasing the free list if it will add to the success of our industries, but we must watch all the insidious steps by which injudicious legislation would injure them.

The remarks which I shall make will be directed to the purpose of showing that the policy of protection should be unswervingly adhered to, and that any departure from it will be signally disastrous to our prosperity. The advantage and even necessity of sustaining our home interests and manufactories have been so frequently demonstrated by the unerring law of national prosperity, as shown in periods of our history, that it is unnecessary to repeat the arguments and statements which have been so ably and forcibly presented. It is sufficient to say that the periods of our manufacturing success and prosperity have been those of our country's greatest progress and advancement, and the periods of depression have been accompanied with general public disaster. Statistics prove that our commerce participates in the general prosperity as well as in the subsequent depression. Agricultural distress is frequently due to the unusual amount of production glutting the market and thus reducing the price of these staple articles of food upon which the country relies; but in this case the individual loss is the public gain. Manufacturing distress, on the contrary, is always the result of want of production. It affects the manufacturer, mechanic, and the laborer, and through them all the other classes of society. The ore remains within the mine, the machinery is silent, the wages of industry are not earned or paid, and the interest on capital is absorbed and lost in the general disaster. Neither does any portion of the community derive advantage therefrom. Even commercial pursuits languish, and an agricultural community feels its effects more certainly and disastrously than it does in a period of short crops, or one where nature lavishes too richly of her abundance.

It is one of the fallacies of free trade that the prosperity of England is mainly owing to its advocacy and support of the doctrines which the friends of this system have advocated. The point of this fallacy may be seen by the statement that Great Britain has reached its present manufacturing success through centuries of constant and careful protection to her interests. When our manufacturers shall have acquired the capital which they command; when our labor shall be as poorly remunerated; when our Government shall press with the same unremitting energy our manufactured products upon the world, we may be enabled by this means to secure all the advantages of protection. In the mean time we must rely upon the intelligent support of this principle by the representatives of the people.

In my own district there is perhaps a larger variety of manufactures than in any other city in the country. In its workshops are gathered the skillful artist, the thorough mechanic, the untiring laborer, and they are all guided by the business energy which, in connection with capital, insures success. But except in very few instances they are dependent upon the careful protection of their interests by the Government. In all these diverse productions of ingenuity and skill there is the necessity of a prudent care and support, so that they may become strong and self-supporting.

It is sometimes asserted that this protection given to the struggling industries of the country is partial in its character, and inflicts injury on other and equally important interests. This is in no sense true. All the great departments of labor are mutually dependent on each other. The prosperity and vigor of the industrial classes are reflected in the general advancement and growth of the country and in the consequent prosperity of all its interests. There may be differences of opinion in some sections of the country, and they are more apparent than real, and they will disappear as the new States approach the greater maturity of the old. Already the South is discussing the question of developing the cotton manufactures in the cotton States, and the time will come, I doubt not, when this scheme will be fully realized. The West, the great West, will find the signal advantage of bringing the factory and the workshop into immediate proximity with its great agricultural interest. It will make a secondary question of the means by which its cereals shall reach the sea-board when it has a remunerative market in the towns and villages which protected industry has built up in its midst. If its friends shall be able to sustain this principle now, time will so attest its wisdom and advantage that it will become the settled policy of the nation.

We are passing through a partial crisis which temporarily deranges the business of the country. Some attribute it to the inflation of the currency and the consequent unsettlement of values, and others to the want of sufficient currency to transact the largely increased business of the nation. My own views upon this aspect of the question are clear and decided, and I am of the opinion that the way out of our difficulties is to be found mainly in the development of our natural wealth and in the success and prosperity of our manufacturing interests, through which labor finds remunerating employment. We must convert our iron into wealth, our labor into forms of beauty and taste, or we will become impoverished by the necessary drains upon us. All legislation which, under any pretext, changes this policy is as unwise in its conception as it will be injurious in its results. Next in importance to the establishment of right principles is a steady and uniform adherence to them. Such is the testimony of all who are interested in these great branches of industry which forms so important a feature in our national prosperity.

Interested as I am in the prosperity and welfare of the people of my own district, so largely engaged in manufacturing pursuits, yet it is in no narrow or selfish spirit that I advocate the policy of protection to American industry. I believe it to be identified with the soundest principles of political economy, with the future success and prosperity of the Union, and with that real independence which enables us in peace or war to rely upon ourselves. It enriches the country in a variety of ways. It provides material wealth; it develops the hidden ore; it constructs the most complex machinery; it insures the reward of skill to the inventor; it shapes continually new forms of beauty and taste, and it throws new comforts over the whole domain of life. In addition, it brings to our shores large numbers of skilled artisans, opening continually new branches of industry and giving us the full advantage of all that is known in foreign countries. How much wiser in a national view is it to have our workshops here at home than abroad!

It has not been my desire, Mr. Speaker, to make any extended remarks upon this question, but in justice to my constituents I have felt it necessary and proper to place on record my earnest convictions that the protection of our home industries lies at the base of our whole prosperity. If you weaken that protection a blow is aimed at the whole structure which constitutes our strength and safeguard, encircled and guarded by the intelligent labor and industry of the country.

HENNEPIN CANAL.

Mr. HOLMAN. On Saturday last I submitted some remarks upon the subject of the Hennepin canal, as it is commonly termed. I ask consent of the House to add to those remarks some matters which I then omitted.

No objection was made, and leave was granted accordingly. (See Appendix.)

LOUISIANA.

Mr. HEREFORD. Mr. Speaker, we have fallen upon evil times. What American could have believed a few years ago that the military power of the land would ever be used to trample in the dust all we hold most dear and sacred?

On January 4, 1875, the Legislature of a sovereign State (Louisiana) under its constitution was to assemble in the city of New Orleans. Three days before, namely, January 1, P. H. Sheridan, the Lieutenant-General of the American Army, arrived in that city and in hot haste sent the following telegram to the Secretary of War:

HEADQUARTERS MILITARY DIVISION OF MISSOURI,
New Orleans, January 4.

Hon. W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

It is with deep regret that I have to announce to you the existence in this State of a spirit of defiance to all lawful authority and an insecurity of life which is hardly realized by the General Government or country at large. The lives of citizens have become so jeopardized that unless something is done to give protection to the people all security usually afforded by law will be overridden. Defiance to laws and murder of individuals seem to be looked upon by the community here from a stand-point which gives impunity to all who choose to indulge in either; and the civil government appears powerless to punish, or even arrest. I have to-night assumed control over the Department of the Gulf.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General.

Why was he sent there just upon the eve of the assembling of their Legislature; especially when we know that General McDowell was then in command of that department? General Emory was also there. Was he not sent there to carry out some fell purpose? Why take him from his own department in the West, from the defense of the helpless men, women, and children from the tomahawk of the savage?

In three short days he had made the astounding discoveries contained in his remarkable telegram. How did he ascertain that there was such a "spirit of defiance to all lawful authority?" How did he ascertain in such a short time that "murder of individuals seems to be looked upon by the community from a stand-point which gives impunity to all who choose to indulge in it?" How did he ascertain in such a short time that the "civil government was powerless to punish or arrest?" As far as we are informed no such state of affairs had been communicated to the President by the executive of the State as the law contemplates.

Their recent election had passed off quietly and peaceably; as much so as in any State of the Union. No murder or violence had taken place since his advent into the city.

But on the next day, January 5, a still more remarkable telegram is forwarded to the President, the like of which has never appeared in this country before, and I hope will never be repeated. It fell upon the ears of all liberty-loving people like a fire-bell at night. Listen:

HEADQUARTERS OF THE MILITARY DIVISION OF MISSOURI,
New Orleans, Louisiana, January 5, 1875.

Hon. W. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War, Washington, D. C.:

I think the terrorism now existing in Louisiana, Mississippi, and Arkansas could be entirely removed and confidence and fair dealing established by the arrest and trial of the ringleaders of the armed White Leagues. If Congress would pass a bill declaring them banditti, they could be tried by a military commission. This banditti, who murdered men here on the 14th of last September, also more recently at Vicksburg, Mississippi, should, in justice to law and order and the peace and prosperity of this southern part of the country, be punished. It is possible that if the President would issue a proclamation declaring them banditti, no further action need be taken except that which would devolve upon me.

P. H. SHERIDAN,
Lieutenant-General United States Army.

This irrefutable general has accomplished a feat that the great Edmund Burke said he could not do—he has drawn an indictment against a whole people. For years past he has been stationed on the plains of the far West. How could he ascertain in four short days time that there was a "reign of terrorism" existing in Arkansas and Mississippi, in which States he had not been? He wished the "White Leagues" arrested and tried. O, shame upon this man! It was this same spirit that arrested the "United Irishmen" of Ireland, who clamored and protested against their outrageous oppression by England. Why did Sheridan's ancestors flee from Ireland and come to this land of liberty? It was from just such oppression as this. He has disgraced the name of Ireland, their native land; he has disgraced the United States, his adopted land. The spirit that actuated Emmett, Grattan, and a host of others is foreign to his nature; and I believe that all liberty-loving sons of Erin will disown him and brand him as a traitor to the sacred cause of liberty, for which so many brave Irishmen have shed their blood.

But this man advises the President to do what? To issue a proclamation declaring these persons in these three States banditti, and let the rest devolve on him. He must certainly have been reading the life of his prototype, the Austrian General Haynau, whose memory is execrated the world over for his savage ferocity at Ferrara, Bergamo, and at Brescia, which carried dismay and consternation to the Italian population. He was called the Austrian hyena. What term shall be applied to this man? Haynau had been honored by the Austrian government, but was afterward dismissed from the service in disgrace. A similar fate should fall upon his imitator, P. H. Sheridan.

Most men shrink from the shedding of blood of their fellow-beings, but this man thirsts for their blood; he invites the opportunity; he asks to be made the wholesale executioner; declare them banditti, and he and any one else has the right to shoot them down wherever found.

Where did this petty tyrant learn such lessons? Perhaps while on a visit to Prince Bismarck, who had just dared to arrest a member of the German congress, but who, be it said to the honor of even the German Empire, was immediately released and Bismarck thus rebuked. But what is more painful, mortifying, and alarming is the following telegram to Sheridan, dated Washington City, January 7, 1875, from the Secretary of War:

Your telegrams all received. The President and all of us have full confidence, and thoroughly approve your course.

Up to the date of this dispatch what had he done? What "course" had he taken which "the President and all of us approve?" The legislative halls of a sovereign State had been entered by one of his subordinates commanding a squad of United States troops, some of the members of that body ruthlessly arrested and dragged from their seats, and the Legislature dispersed at the point of the bayonet. And all this is approved by the President! The constitution of Louisiana provides in article 34 that—

Each house of the General Assembly shall judge of the qualification, elections, and returns of its members.

Such a provision is ingrafted in the constitution of nearly every State of the Union. The same provision is found in article I section 5 of the Constitution of the United States in regard to the Congress of the United States.

In the name of liberty, in the name of a violated Constitution, I demand by what right, warrant, or authority has the President and his Lieutenant-General thus disbanded a legislative body of a sovereign State? The Legislatures of the States in their sphere are as much sovereign as the Congress of the United States. So sacredly are they regarded that it is forbidden by the Articles of War for any officer of the Army to even use contemptuous or disrespectful words against the Legislature of any of the United States. On page 231, article 19, title "Articles of War," of the Revised Statutes of the United States, we find the following explicit language; I commend its perusal to the President and his Lieutenant-General:

Any officer who uses contemptuous or disrespectful words against the President, the Vice-President, the Congress of the United States, or the chief magistrate or Legislature of any of the United States, in which he is quartered, shall be dismissed from the service or otherwise punished as a court-martial may direct. Any soldier who so offends shall be punished as a court-martial may direct.

How much less, then, had they the power to arrest and disperse a Legislature. The house had organized and elected a speaker and clerk, a quorum being present. Two years ago a like act of usurpation was committed by the military. The military was called to enforce the infamous military midnight order of Judge Durell, the capitol taken possession of, and the legally elected members driven out. All this was done under the order of President Grant, under the flimsy pretext of enforcing a decree of a court. And what has been done at this very session of Congress? The Judiciary Committee, composed of a large majority of republicans, reported articles of impeachment against this same judge for the issuance of this order, and this House passed the resolutions. But the deed was done, the object of the order accomplished; Kellogg and his legislature placed in power and retained to this day. That infamous proceeding went unpunished; and the same parties, emboldened by this act, seek in a more high-handed and arbitrary manner again to take and continue in possession by military power. How long, gentlemen of the House of Representatives, will you permit a sovereign State to lay prostrate under the heels of military despotism?

But it is pretended that in the first act of usurpation Durell acted upon his own motion. In this way it is sought to relieve the Administration from the odium and responsibility of the act. But this is not true. Durell did not do it upon his motion; he did it at the behest of the President. This order of Durell was issued at midnight, in his own room, on December 5, 1872. On December 3, 1872, only two days before, the following telegram was sent to the United States marshal at New Orleans:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, December 3, 1872.

S. B. PACKARD,
United States Marshal, New Orleans:

You are to enforce the decrees and mandates of the United States courts, no matter by whom resisted, and General Emory will furnish you with the necessary troops for that purpose.

GEORGE H. WILLIAMS,
Attorney-General.

How did the Attorney-General at Washington know that any decree or mandate was to be issued by the United States court at New Orleans? No clearer case of conspiracy was ever proven. Now the scene is re-enacted. The Louisiana Legislature was to assemble on January 4, and Sheridan is sent there by the President three days before. The proofs of conspiracy against Catiline and his co-conspirators against the liberties of Rome were no more clearly proven than this against President U. S. Grant and his co-conspirators. The President has no power to use the military against the citizens of a State in cases like this until he has first issued his proclamation commanding the insurgents to disperse within a limited time; and if they do not disperse within that time, then, and not till then, can he use the military forces. This express provision of law you can find by turning to page 1035, section 5300, of the Revised Statutes of the United States. In this case nothing of the kind has been done or attempted to be done. Cromwell, when he dispersed the British Parliament in 1648 by the military, was no more a usurper than is President Grant and Sheridan in this case. He had no more right or power to disperse that Legislature than he will have to disperse the Fourty-fourth Congress when it shall meet in December next. Neither the President, nor Kellogg, nor any other person or body on earth had the right to judge of the election, returns, and qualifications of the members of that Legislature except the Legislature itself.

In the year 1865 President Johnson sent General Grant down South to examine and report to him the condition of the South. On the 18th day of December, 1865, among other things General Grant used the following language in that report:

I am satisfied that the mass of thinking men of the South accept the present situation of affairs in good faith.

My observations lead me to the conclusion that the citizens of the Southern States are anxious to return to self-government within the Union as soon as possible; that while reconstructing they want and require protection from the Government; that they are in earnest in wishing to do what they think is required by the Government not humiliating to them as citizens, and that if such a course were pointed out they would pursue it in good faith.

Now, after a lapse of many years, his Lieutenant-General reports they are banditti. During all this time the republican party has had absolute control throughout the United States and in the State of Louisiana. If Sheridan speaks the truth, why the change? It is because of the great oppression, tyranny, and wholesale plunder under which they have been compelled to live. But protests loud and long come up from all classes of citizens—native Louisianians, northern men living there, foreigners, merchants, tradesmen, and ministers of the gospel, Protestant and Catholic, Jew and Gentile—repelling the foul and slanderous charge upon them. But the denial and complete refutation of these charges does not rest here.

During this session of Congress, in obedience to a resolution of this House, the Speaker appointed a committee of seven, consisting of five republicans and two democrats, to visit Louisiana and report upon the condition of affairs in that State. That committee appointed a sub-committee of its number, consisting of two republicans and one democrat, to go to New Orleans and take the testimony and report in the case. That sub-committee, after taking fifteen hundred printed pages of testimony, make a unanimous report in which these foul charges are refuted and the character of those people triumphantly vindicated. I wish time permitted me to quote more at length from that report.

A few citations from this able and impartial report must suffice. First they say:

The election embraced but one State officer. The chief struggle was over the election of members of the State Legislature and parish officers; and in these elections local and personal considerations, as well as national or State politics, entered. The returns by the commissioners of election, compiled and forwarded by the supervisors of registration, gave the conservatives a majority of twenty-nine members out of a total of one hundred and eleven members. In only a few instances where there any protests accompanying these returns.

Yet the returning board under the direction of Kellogg found fifty-three Republicans and fifty-three Democrats elected. As to the other five no decision was made, their cases being remitted to the Legislature. The committee, after examining several parishes in detail which the returning board acted on, say, in regard to the parish of Rapides:

Your committee are therefore constrained to declare that the action of the returning board, in rejecting these returns in the parish of Rapides and giving the seats for that parish to the republican candidates, was arbitrary, unfair, and without warrant of law. If the committee were to go behind the papers before the board and consider the alleged charge of intimidation upon the proofs before the committee, their finding would necessarily be the same.

The committee, after having investigated the other parishes, further say:

Without now referring to other instances, we are constrained to declare that the action of the returning board, on the whole, was arbitrary, unjust, and in our opinion illegal, and that this arbitrary, unjust, and illegal action alone prevented the return by the board of a majority of conservative members of the lower house.

On the subject of the present government being upheld by the military, the committee say:

Indeed, it is conceded by all parties that the Kellogg government is only upheld by the Federal military. Withdraw the military, and that government will go down.

On the subject of those people being "banditti," bidding defiance to law, &c., as charged by Sheridan, this committee say:

Indeed, in our judgment the substantial citizens of the State will submit to any fair determination of the question of the late elections, or to anything by which they can secure a firm and good government. What they seek is peace and an opportunity for prosperity; to that end they will support any form of government that will afford them just protection in their business and personal relations. In their distress they have got beyond any mere question of political party. They regard themselves as practically without government and without the power to form one.

Thus we see that this committee in their report find these people as well disposed as did General Grant in his report years before to President Johnson. Yet what do we see? This Legislature, composed of a majority of twenty-nine conservatives, disbanded at the point of the bayonet and those not elected filling their places. O shame, where is thy blush!

But let us go a step further in this high-handed and despotic attempt on the part of President Grant to overturn free government in this land. On February 8, 1875, the President sent to the Senate a special message, as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

Herewith I have the honor to send, in accordance with the resolution of the Senate of the 3d instant, all the information in my possession not heretofore furnished relative to affairs in the State of Arkansas. I will venture to express the opinion that all the testimony shows that in the election of 1872 Joseph Brooks was lawfully elected governor of that State; that he has been unlawfully deprived of the possession of his office since that time; that in 1874 the constitution of the State was by violence, intimidation, and revolutionary proceedings overthrown, and a new constitution adopted and a new State government established. These proceedings, if permitted to stand, practically ignore all the rights of minorities in all the States. Also, what is there to prevent each of the States recently readmitted to Federal relations, on certain conditions, from changing their constitutions and violating their pledges, if this action in Arkansas is acquiesced in? I respectfully submit whether a precedent so dangerous to the stability of State government, if not of the National Government also, should be recognized by Congress. I earnestly ask that Congress will take definite action in the matter to relieve the Executive from acting upon questions which should be decided by the legislative branch of the government.

U. S. GRANT.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, February 8, 1875.

In this message he says that Brooks was elected governor of that State in 1872, and that he has been unlawfully deprived of his office since that time.

Now what is the truth?

On the 15th day of May, 1874, the President himself recognized Baxter as the de facto governor, and maintained him in power to the exclusion of this man Brooks, who he now says is governor. If Brooks was unlawfully deprived of his office, Grant did it.

Now as to the new constitution and the present State government, with Garland as governor.

We will see the singular and unexpected fact that this new constitution, which he says was brought about by fraud, "violence, intimidation, and revolutionary proceedings," was brought about with his consent and approval, and sustained by the military obeying his orders.

On the 22d of April, 1874, Baxter telegraphed to the President as follows: "I propose to call the Legislature together at an early day, and leave them to settle the question, as they alone have the power; but to do this the members of the Legislature must have assurances of protection from you and a guarantee that they may meet in safety. This will be a peaceable solution of the difficulty, and I will readily abide by the decision of the Legislature." On the same day the President replied to Baxter as follows: "I heartily approve any adjustment peaceably of the pending difficulties in Arkansas by means of the Legislative Assembly, the courts, or otherwise. I will give all the assistance and protection I can under the Constitution and laws of the United States to such modes of adjustment. I hope that the military on both sides will now be disbanded." On the 24th of April Baxter replied as follows: "In accordance with my correspondence with you by telegraph, I have convened the Legislature for the 11th May. I have sent home part of my forces, and would willingly send the balance, except a small body-guard, but Brooks retains his whole force and receives re-enforcements. All the people desire is that peace be restored, and the Legislature protected in the performance of their legitimate business."

This Legislature called a constitutional convention, as it had a legal right to do; which question as to whether they should have a constitutional convention was submitted to a vote of the people in June, 1874. The vote stood, for convention, 80,259; against convention, 8,607; making the whole vote cast 88,866, and a majority for the convention of 71,652. Upon the ratification of the new constitution in October, 1874, the vote stood for the constitution, 78,697; against it, 24,807; being a majority of 53,890, and a total vote of 103,504. And yet this is the government, thus brought into existence by the President himself, that he now seeks by the military to overthrow. He now seeks, years afterward, to reinstate Brooks, whom he previously put out of office.

The secret of this whole matter is this: Baxter was the candidate of the republicans, Brooks of the democrats. Hence Grant at the point of the bayonet placed Baxter in power as governor de facto, as he has done Kellogg in Louisiana. But after Baxter was thus installed as governor he turned conservative in his views, and Brooks turned to be par excellence radical; hence Grant's wish now to install Brooks as governor, and which he threatens an American Senate he will do.

Let us see when the voice of the people was heard most potentially! We have seen that upon the ratification of the new constitution there were 103,504 votes cast. When Brooks and Baxter were candidates for governor the total vote was only 80,721. Yet when 103,504 voters have spoken their will, this despot of American growth seeks and threatens by military power to thwart their wills. He claims the power to make and unmake States at his imperial will. He treats Legislatures of sovereign States with not half the importance that should attach to an ordinary town meeting. But still persistent in his vaulting and mad ambition, he now comes to the American Senate, representing forty million of freemen, and dictates to that body. All these facts that I have stated in regard to Arkansas are found by another committee appointed by the Speaker of this House, composed of three republicans and two democrats, Hon. LUKE P. POLAND being chairman.

The committee in its report uses the following noble words, which should be placed in letters of gold over every door leading into this Capitol and into the Executive Mansion, as well as over the doors of every State capitol:

The people of every State have the right to make their own constitution to suit themselves, provided it be republican in form and in harmony with the Constitution of the United States, and the National Government has no authority to deprive them of that right.

The committee close their report with the following language:

The committee do not recommend any action by Congress or by any other Department of the General Government in regard to the State government of Arkansas.

President Grant, unwittingly it is true, admits in his message of February 8 that it is a majority he seeks to put out of power, and that it is a minority that he seeks to put in power. In this land where, heretofore we have been accustomed to govern ourselves, majorities will never consent to be governed by minorities. Take away your armies and let the people govern themselves, and all will be well. In my own State of West Virginia for many years we were governed by a minority; in my own county, with a voting population of sixteen hundred, only about three hundred were allowed to vote; in a neighboring town of a population of about twelve hundred only six were allowed to vote; and so it was nearly all over the State under our infamous registration law such as they have in Louisiana and Arkansas. Such outrages shocked the sentiments of the liberty-loving people of my mountain home, and they arose peaceably in the might and majesty of their power and hurled their oppressors from their places, which will know them no more forever.

During all this reign of terror in my State the United States military were stationed upon us, but as soon as the people spoke and placed the men and party of their choice in power the military left; and, thank God, no soldier has placed his foot upon the soil of West Virginia since. With us now all is peace and prosperity, and thus it will be with Louisiana and Arkansas if you will withdraw the military and let them govern themselves. Give them local, home self-government and all will be well. But we are told that in order to maintain the present usurped State organization the presence and actual co-operation of the military is necessary. Necessary for what? It is necessary for England to keep an armed force in Ireland; Germany an armed force in Alsace and Lorraine; Spain an armed force in Cuba—all this for subjugation and slavery.

It looks to me very much as if this Administration did not wish for peace, tranquillity, and good government in the South.

It looks as if the Administration was actuated by the same motives toward the South that Queen Elizabeth was toward down-trodden Ireland. Her plan of pacification was very simple. One of her intimate counselors said:

If we undertake to restore to this country order and civilization it will soon become powerful and rich. It ought therefore to be our principle to keep the country in a state of confusion.

History is but repeating itself.

If the policy of this Administration is to be continued toward the South; if Sheridan's wishes are to be carried out, we will find the South in the same condition that Lord Gray, governor of Ireland, wrote to the queen as to the condition of that country, "that her Majesty would soon reign over only ashes and dead bodies."

Let Sheridan's "course," which the Secretary of War says is approved by the President and his Cabinet, be continued, and the whole southern people will be compelled to flee from the land of their birth to some place or government where they can have peace and protection like the flight of the Tartar tribe from the oppression of Russia so vividly described by De Quincey.

Year after year Louisiana has been rattling her chains and showing her scars. Will you listen? Will you look upon them, or will you continue to close your ears and shut your eyes to their wrongs and sufferings as did the haughty Pharaoh to the children of Israel? If you do, as sure as there is a just God who reigneth, the God of the Israelites will be the God of those oppressed people; and as surely as Pharaoh and his hosts were punished, so surely will the oppressors of these our southern brethren be punished. If you continue in this course scenes will occur which will cause your ears to tingle and the eyes of those who witness them to shed drops of blood. Admit for the sake of the argument that these people have done wrong; what right or power had the Administration to use the military as they have done?

Allow me to adopt the language of one of Ireland's greatest orators in the British Parliament:

If there were crimes committed, they were excited by you. I think now as I thought then, the treason of ministers against the liberty of the people is much more culpable than the rebellion of the people against ministers.

So spoke Grattan to an English Parliament.

Napoleon I dispersed one of the branches of the French congress, the five hundred, with his armed grenadiers. Napoleon III with fixed bayonets also dissolved the National Assembly of France. Napoleon I had his Murat; Napoleon III had his General St. Arnaud, and President Grant has Sheridan and Kellogg; and in my judgment unless this military interference is promptly rebuked, like scenes will be witnessed in this Hall on the first day of the Forty-fourth Congress.

It is asserted by those in authority that the present government of Louisiana cannot be sustained except by military power; that thousands of murders have been committed. The very announcement of such a fact carries with it the condemnation of the Administration. Whenever military power is necessary to maintain a State government and preserve peace these States become military provinces and our present system of government is a thing of the past; the destruction of one State will only precede that of others, and State after State will fall before the tramp of armed warriors.

Under such a state of affairs no wonder we hear of the exodus of foreigners from our land. During this state of anarchy and military rule can we expect a continuance of the flow of immigration to our country, once the "land of the free and the home of the brave?" When foreign peoples who have struggled to imitate our example by throwing off the yoke of their oppressors and establishing a republican form of government see this state of military domination, is it any wonder that their hearts sicken?

The patriots of Spain have taken the alarm, and Alfonso has been placed on the throne. Castellar, their patriot, orator, and statesman, the Patrick Henry of Spain, has become disheartened; all his hopes for the future forever blasted. He desired to and was about to visit our country and congratulate us upon our form of government; but he turns from the scene in sorrow, and has resigned his position as president of the commission to visit our country at the centennial celebration July 4, 1876. France, taking the alarm, is about to follow the example of Spain.

Now, in conclusion, in whose hands is the power for relief? Not in the South. She lies prostrate and bleeding; like Samson shorn of his locks, weak and powerless. Gentlemen of the House of Representatives from the Eastern, Northern, and Western States, the power is with the people you represent. The South and the liberty-loving people everywhere turn to you. Shall they be disappointed? I believe not. I have an abiding confidence in their love of justice, home rule, and constitutional liberty. We look to you to rise in the might and majesty of your power, and promptly take such measures as will transmit to posterity that form of republican government in all its beauty and strength that was bequeathed to us by Washington and his compatriots in arms.

In the language of that patriot orator and ex-president of Spain, Castellar:

When Michael Angelo saw the liberties of his country expire he carved a most beautiful and melancholy figure, gave it the Grecian perfection of form and Christian sorrow in the expression, closed its eyes, extended it on a bier, and called it "Night."

May God in his infinite mercy avert the day when any Michael Angelo shall see the liberties of our beloved land expire, or any such melancholy figure aptly represent our condition.

POLICY OF THE ADMINISTRATION TOWARD THE SOUTHERN STATES.

[Mr. ROBBINS addressed the House upon the policy of the republican party and the Administration toward the Southern States. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

INDIAN POLICY.

[Mr. McCORMICK addressed the House upon the subject of the proper policy to be pursued by the Government toward the Indians. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

AFFAIRS IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. ATKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say something in reference to the affairs of Arkansas. Toward the close of the last session of Congress a resolution was introduced by the gentleman from Vermont, [Mr. POLAND,] and was adopted by this House, raising a committee to inquire whether a republican form of government existed in the State of Arkansas. Had such an investigation been proposed in reference to either of the great States of New York, Pennsylvania, or Ohio—constitutional conventions having been held in each of them recently—it would doubtless have met with a storm of opposition from all sides. Loud and earnest protests would have been made upon this floor against such interference in the name of the dignity, majesty, and rights of those great and influential States. But, sir, as it is the affairs of Arkansas, only, that were to be overhauled and investigated, no such obsolete ideas of State rights and statehood presented a barrier to the investigation. As Arkansas was one of the "wayward and erring sisters," no doubt in certain high political circles she is deemed legitimate game for political gambling, and is therefore subject to endless reconstruction and liable to be remanded at will to territorial pupillage.

But I had supposed that the days of reconstruction were over; and that, having been readmitted into the great sisterhood of American States, she is the peer of any, even the proudest.

I assume in this discussion that the people's Representatives here assembled will not, nay, cannot, afford to view this question in any other light than as a legal and constitutional one. I assume that they are disposed to respect the learning of the past and to be guided by the precedents which the history of very many States in this Union abundantly furnish. I confidently assume that it is their wish to guard with scrupulous care that no violence be done to the great principles of civil liberty first evolved amid the throes of the Grecian and Roman republics, reasserted when the brave barons wrung Magna Charta from King John, and defended by Washington through the momentous period of the Revolution, and has since been canonized as household words by Adams and Jefferson, Jackson and Polk, and Clay and Webster, to wit: "That all free governments derive their just authority from the consent of the governed." Standing upon this great rock of political truth, rooted as it is in the profound depths of human freedom, the friends of the existing government in the State of Arkansas respectfully challenge the most thorough investigation of the motives which prompted it, or the principles which underlie and guided it, or of the regularity which marked its proceedings. They invite their whole movement to be subjected to the closest scrutiny, and to be tried by the severest tests of constitutional arbitrament before which states were ever arraigned, believing that her cause will not be prejudged through the blind zeal of the partisan or condemned by the trick of the sophist, but that she may appeal with confidence to the just judgment of this House, based as it should be upon the eternal principles of right and guided by the uncompromising tests of truth and logic.

I shall maintain that the people of Arkansas had the indisputable right to amend or make anew their constitution, and that she has today a republican form of government.

In order that the House shall form a correct judgment as to the merits of this case, it is necessary to pass rapidly in review some of the leading events connected with the government of Arkansas for the last six years. Without intending to enter into a minute detail of the political affairs of that people, it suffices my purpose to state that Arkansas, after passing from beneath the rod of the military commander to which reconstruction had subjected her, organized a convention and adopted a constitution in 1868. In the formation of that convention the usual ostracism and disfranchisement of the intellect of her people prevailed, and the convention was composed of men, to say the least of it, who were not representative men, either in interest, identification, public service, or intelligence. Not only were men of this class not allowed to hold seats in the convention, but they were not permitted, many of them, to exercise the right of suffrage in the selection of the delegates who were to be charged with so sacred and delicate a trust as the forming of the organic law of a State, where life, liberty, and the rights of property were involved. The fundamental principle of free government—that which is peculiarly American and is forever historic, as are the plains of Concord and Lexington historic—that without representation there shall be no taxation, was disregarded, nay, spat upon and openly contemned and repudiated. Of course an assemblage of law-makers elected upon such principles felt but little of the responsibility of the public servant to his constituency; and, as is ever the case of such irresponsibility, a constitution was framed and set in motion the effects of which retarded the material and social progress of that people, so much so, that years to come the people will suffer beneath their blighting influence. The Legislature which followed, like father like son, was of course of the same type—proscriptive and illiberal.

I will not undertake to speak of laws that were passed and measures set on foot which have proven so disastrous to the well-being of that people—laws and measures in the enactment and support of which no one now connected with the present State government or the constitutional convention recently held had ought to do. But so oppressive had they become, so grievous were their burdens, that a large proportion of the republican party, irrespective of color, rose up and demanded relief and reform. It was in answer to this general cry of distress from all sides and throughout the limits of the State that the people ranged themselves under whatever banner gave strongest assurances of deliverance, without special regard to party names or party leaders. Hence in 1872 Brooks and Baxter, both republicans, were opposing candidates for the office of governor. The extreme wing of the republican party supported Baxter; the other wing of the party and the conservative and democratic party supported the Brooks ticket, who sailed beneath the "independent reform" banner. The men who had been swaying the destinies of that unhappy State for years determined, upon canvassing the returns, that Baxter was elected, and the President and Attorney-General solemnly approved and sustained that decision. The pressure of public sentiment within the State as well as from abroad had wrought a change among the leaders of the republican party, and both candidates stood upon the platform of the enfranchisement of the whole people.

Baxter being installed, let him tell why he was deserted by the ringleaders; how his election was denied by the very men who had manipulated the returns; his right to the office contested unsuccessfully in the circuit court of Pulaski County in a test case by "a writ of prohibition issued out of the supreme court," through the case of J. R. Berry vs. Stephen Wheeler for the office of auditor. Foiled in that, open attempts at bribery were made to seduce Governor Baxter, as he alleges, from the path of honor and of duty. He says:

I had scarcely been installed when the chief justice and his friends began a series of demands in partial or total violation of every pledge upon the strength of which I had been elected to office. Unwilling to array myself against men who had drawn me from comparative retirement to exercise the functions of chief magistrate of the Commonwealth, and above all unwilling even to appear to furnish occasion for discussion within the republican party of the State, I at first endeavored to effect a compromise by yielding, so far as I might without substantial injury to the popular interests. When I gave them an inch they demanded an ell. I soon learned that to satisfy them I must at their every beck or nod violate every principle of public policy, faith, or honor; in short, that I had to choose between being their tool or their enemy.

I may name, among the measures of which they attempted to compel my approval, the subsidy bill by which certain railway companies were to be released from payment to the State, on account of bonds issued to them for the construction of their respective lines, of about $6,000,000; the metropolitan police bill, which proposed to constitute the entire area of the State a metropolis, the police of which should have power to arrest without warrant any citizen of the State, and drag him for trial to the capital, (the monstrous provisions of this bill, in violation of the fundamental principles of constitutional liberty, to be enforced by an appropriation almost unlimited;) an election bill, concentrating in the hands of three men, designated as a board of canvassers and having for their chairman the Lieutenant-governor, not alone the power of appointment of judges and clerks of election in every precinct of the State, but also the supervision and review of all proceeding and returns of election—a triumvirate which would have held the liberties of the people of Arkansas in the perpetual grasp of the clique.

With all this I have no concern, except to show how fallen the great State of Arkansas was, how her dearest and most sacred rights were being bandied by a political cabal for purposes and objects wholly at war with the true interests of the people. Brooks, toward the close of the session of the Legislature, appealed to that tribunal his right to the governorship. It was voted down by a vote of 63 to 8. The attorney-general then brought suit by a writ of quo warranto in behalf of the State to ascertain who the legal governor was, the supreme court, five out of six, deciding that the court had no jurisdiction, and that the Legislature under the constitution of the State alone had the power to determine that question. Article 6, section 19, reads as follows:

The returns of every election for governor, lieutenant-governor, secretary of state, treasurer, auditor, attorney-general, and superintendent of public instruction shall be sealed up and transmitted to the seat of government by the returning officers, and directed to the presiding officer of the senate, who, during the first week of the session, shall open and publish the same in presence of the members then assembled. The person having the highest number of votes shall be declared elected; but if two or more shall have the highest and equal number of votes for the same office, one of them shall be chosen by a joint vote of both houses. Contested elections shall likewise be determined by both houses of the General Assembly in such manner as is or may hereafter be prescribed by law.

The Senators in Congress from Arkansas, both republicans, addressed Governor Baxter congratulatory letters or telegrams upon his final triumph over Brooks. Here they are:

His Excellency ELISHA BAXTER:

NEW YORK, June 3, 1873.

Quo warranto proceedings against you have been inaugurated without my knowledge or approval, and are in my opinion unwise and highly detrimental to the interests of the State. My judgment did not approve your late action, because I did not believe that such a move was seriously contemplated; and even if contemplated, I regard the calling out of the militia as premature. Nor would I now advise any show of force unless a forcible attempt should be made to oust you. I believe you are the legitimate governor of Arkansas; and as much as I regret to see our State disgraced abroad by distractions at home, I hope you will stand firm, regardless of results.

POWELL CLAYTON.

NEW YORK, June 3, 1873.

To Governor ELISHA BAXTER:

You have the unqualified support of myself and friends. The revolutionary proceedings instituted will not be sustained by the people.

S. W. DORSEY.

The whole people, almost, seemed to rally around Governor Baxter, democrats and republicans. They were tired of anarchy and misrule and were glad to embrace a fit opportunity that promised deliverance. To this certain leading men took mortal offense, and additional demands were made, to some of which Governor Baxter, through a spirit of compromise, acceded, as well as through apprehension that he would at last fail to reap the benefit of the recent decision of the supreme court in his favor, because of the failure of Mr. Justice Stephenson to place the quo warranto decision on file, but carried the same secreted in his coat pocket. Baxter could no longer retain the support of these men, but devoted himself to the service of the State and the people. Events hurried along which I deem further allusion to unnecessary.

Brooks finally obtained, in the absence of Baxter's counsel, a judgment of ouster, which court it is admitted on all sides had no jurisdiction whatever; and according to the court Baxter was deposed. By convenient and rapid coincidences Brooks was sworn in as chief magistrate, and in the absence of Baxter took armed possession of the State and of the executive office. Forthwith each party began to call out the militia, each claiming to be the lawful governor of Arkansas. Troops gathered around each standard in considerable numbers. A company of United States regulars stationed at the capital of the State prevented a serious collision of the two contestants. Immediately Brooks and Baxter called upon the President of the United States for assistance.

Governor Baxter made two requisitions upon the President without avail. Finally Governor Baxter convened the Legislature elected at the same time that the election took place for governor. The Legislature, being in session, sustain Governor Baxter as the rightful governor of the State, and call upon the President for United States troops to assist in quelling the insurrectionary Brooks and his followers; to which application the President, on the 15th day of May, 1874, issues his proclamation commanding the disorderly persons to disperse. Whereupon Brooks abdicates and vacates the executive office, and Baxter once more is installed with the baton of executive authority. In such cases the Constitution of the United States, article 4, section 4, provides—

The United States shall guarantee to every State in this Union a republican form of government, and shall protect each of them against invasion; and on application of the Legislature or of the executive, (when the Legislature cannot be convened,) against domestic violence.

This is the only clause in the Constitution of the United States that gives Congress jurisdiction of the affairs of a State of this Union, and of course that jurisdiction is limited to the plain meaning of the language employed.

The President by the authority herein granted disperses Brooks and his confederates and recognizes Baxter. In this he is sustained in an able and cogent opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States, utterly rejecting all jurisdiction of the courts over the contest for the office of governor, it being distinctly settled, as before observed, by article 6, section 19, of the constitution of Arkansas.

The following extract from the opinion of Attorney-General Williams, dated Washington, May 15, 1874, is conclusive upon this point:

It is assumed in the argument for Brooks that the judgment of the Pulaski circuit court is binding as well upon the President as upon Baxter until it is reversed, but where there are conflicting decisions, as in this case, the President is to prefer that one which, in his opinion, is warranted by the constitution and laws of the State. The General Assembly has decided that Baxter was elected. The circuit court of Pulaski County has decided that Brooks was elected.

Taking the provision of the constitution which declares that contested elections about certain State officers, including the governor, shall be determined by the General Assembly, and that provision of the law heretofore cited which says that all contested elections of governor shall be decided by the Legislature, and the two decisions of the Supreme Court affirming the exclusive jurisdiction of that body over the subject, and the conclusion irresistibly follows that such judgment of the circuit court is void. A void judgment binds nobody.

The Legislature was again in session in obedience to the popular will, which rose high all over the State, demanding relief from their oppressions. The people called loudly upon their representatives to submit to them a call for a convention for the purpose of framing a new constitution. The resolution was accordingly passed, and the call was submitted to a vote of the people, and it was sustained by the overwhelming majority of eighty thousand to eight thousand—twenty to one.

Delegates were elected, and a constitution framed. It was submitted on the 13th of October, 1874, to the popular vote, and was ratified by over fifty-four thousand majority, many republicans voting for its ratification. Now, the resolution of the gentleman from Vermont, under which this committee was appointed, is confined to the single point of investigation; that is, to inquire whether the present form of government in Arkansas is republican in form. Examine that constitution. It is a monument of the patriotism, wisdom, and devotion to public liberty and free government which that convention reared, and now bids the world with confidence to look upon. It is liberal, just, and progressive; not a word in it which discriminates between citizens of any creed, race, or color. It is drawn after models that challenge the admiration and commendation of the vast majority of the American people. The legislative, executive, and judicial departments are each distinct and separate, each moving within the sphere of its orbit, and yet each retaining a just and proper relation to each other, so as to form a harmonious whole. Sir, it is republican in form. Unfortunately that is not the real ground of complaint; it is that the people are not republican or radical, but are democratic. All accounts from the State concur that the people have not been so quiet, so diligent in their fields and shops and places of business since the war. Everybody is contented except a handful of would-be office-holders and malcontents whose desperate fortunes have driven them to the criminal expedient of asking this Congress and this Federal Government to do an unparalleled wrong by overturning by force the State Government of Arkansas, and destroying the peace and contentment of the people, and spreading ruin and anarchy once more throughout her borders, and dedicating her fair fields to desolation and decay.

If Brooks ever was elected governor by the people, the case has gone too far, and he is legally barred by the Legislature, whose duty it is to decide all contests. It has gone too far since he allowed himself to be counted out by the very men who are now seeking to induct him into office. If frauds were committed, they were committed by them, and they must therefore father their own offspring. Without going into details, the proof is conclusive that if frauds were committed in behalf of Baxter, they were done by the men who now, through a show of saintly virtue, sustain Brooks. What new light has dawned upon their hitherto benighted visions that did not exist when they were swearing for Baxter? But may not Baxter's determination to serve the best interests of the people of Arkansas, instead of lending himself to the doubtful uses of adventurous and reckless politicians, account for the sudden revolution in opinion in reference both as to facts as well as to legal principles involved in this important controversy? To listen to them now, admitting that they testified originally to the truth, would be encouraging men to take advantage of their own wrong. But I deny that Congress has any jurisdiction or right of censorship over the governorship of Arkansas or her State government in any way whatever except as limited under section 4 of article 4 of the Constitution of the United States. Where, may I inquire, does Congress derive its authority to constitute itself a canvassing board to decide upon the validity of the elections of State officers? Who ever heard of such extraordinary assumption of Federal power? It is one of the scions which sprang from the reconstruction policy which, being long and patiently submitted to by a powerless people, is now attempted to be palmed off as a constitutional prerogative of Congress.

If Congress can in the plenitude of its power undertake to revise the State officers and decide who is and who is not elected, I beg to inquire what use is there of State lines, State courts, or Legislatures? In that view, Congress is a great central revisionary power, which absorbs all other legislative functions of this country, and it were better and cheaper at once to dispense with the machinery of local self-government. Sir, was this the view of the fathers of the Republic? Such a view is a total subversion of our whole theory of government, and constitutes Congress a mighty ghou, which would engulf the liberty of the citizen and the freedom of the State in a common destruction.

If Congress can canvass and decide upon the election returns in a State for other than Senators and Representatives in Congress, then why may it not decide upon the qualifications of the voters—indeed, why not appoint the officer at once? The idea is preposterous, anti-republican, and unconstitutional.

This great warrant of article 4, section 4, of the Constitution, which clothes Congress with the power to inquire into the affairs of a State to the end that a republican form of government is assured, cannot be too well understood in its scope and meaning, or too cautiously and yet promptly exercised when justifiable. Mr. Madison, in No. 43 of the Federalist, in commenting upon this power, says:

It may possibly be asked what need there could be of such a precaution, and whether it may not become a pretext for alterations in the State governments without the concurrence of the States themselves. These questions admit of ready answers. If the interposition of the General Government should not be needed, the provision for such an event will be a harmless superfluity only in the Constitution. But who can say what experiments may be produced by the caprice of particular States, by the ambition of enterprising leaders, or by the intrigues and influence of foreign powers? To the second question it may be answered, that if the General Government should interpose by virtue of this constitutional authority, it will be, of course, bound to preserve the authority. But the authority, of course, extends no further than to a guarantee of a republican form of government, which supposes a pre-existing government of the form which is to be guaranteed. As long, therefore, as the existing republican forms are continued by the States, they are guaranteed by the Federal Constitution. Whenever the States may choose to alter republican forms, they have a right to do so, and to claim the Federal guarantee of the latter. The only restriction imposed on the States is, that they shall not exchange republican for anti-republican constitutions; a restriction which it is presumed will hardly be considered as a grievance.

Mr. Justice Story concurs in the foregoing, adopting the very language. (See 2 Commentaries on the Constitution, section 1817, pages 630, 631.)

How light the restriction! The States bind themselves under the Constitution of the United States to be republican in form. Further than that Congress has nothing whatever to do with them. No matter whether Brooks or Baxter was governor; is the State government of Arkansas under Governor Garland's administration republican in form? If so, the power of the General Government is exhausted. Did the Legislature observe the requirements of the Constitution of 1868? It does not matter, if her constitution is republican in form, and is the act of the people, which even blind partisan malice will not deny. Arkansas has the republican form of government the Constitution requires, and is therefore, like the rest of the States of this Union, entitled to non-interference by the Federal authorities. If her right to local self-government be not established, there is no State of the Union secure in its fancied right. Her cause then becomes the cause of every other State. The jurisdiction of Congress over the affairs of a State begins and ends at that point. For a State does not hold its political and civil tenure from the Federal Government. When organized as a State and presented at the door of the Union with a republican form of government, the Constitution declares that Congress shall admit it. And if afterward the State should alter its form of government and cease to be republican, then Congress is empowered and enjoined to bring such State back to the form of government required by the terms of the Constitution.

The great danger in this country to civil liberty arises not so much from military despotism proper as from an ultra centralized congressional oligarchy, wherein the will of a jacobinical majority is substituted for constitutionalism, and the Presidency is converted into an imperialism, whose only restraints are to be found in the resolves of Congress instead of the grants of a written constitution. True, the recent acts of the Executive in dispersing a legally elected Legislature of the State of Louisiana by Federal bayonets, under the command of Lieutenant-General Sheridan, and which have no parallel for usurpation in American history, and against which the patriotism, irrespective of party, throughout the length and breadth of the country is rising up in indignant protest, and declaring that if the precedent here set is taken and accepted as authoritative, the knell of civil liberty is already sounded—I say these acts seem to be done upon Executive responsibility; and yet I maintain that the whole course of Congress in reference to Louisiana is suggestive of this policy, and which the country must and will deplore. No doubt these most extraordinary acts of the President accord with the voluntary spirit of his own arbitrary and iron will, nevertheless he is simply executing the will of a majority of both Houses of Congress; for has not the failure of Congress to guarantee to Louisiana a republican form of government for the last two years thereby tacitly suggested to the President the course he has doubtless too willingly pursued.

But to return from this momentary digression. The Legislature, then, was legal. Grant, Williams, and Baxter, and his associates, all recognized it as legal; also the Arkansas supreme court recognized it. Even Brooks, if his opinion were important all, recognized it by submitting the contest for the office of governor to it; and the people, who are above all other authority, indorsed its action. It was, then, a de facto government. No principle is better established by all writers and standard authors upon public law than that the acts and authority of a de facto government must be held as binding and in force until the legal government displaces it. In the case of Louisiana, the President recognized and sustained the Kellogg government simply because, as he alleged, it was a de facto government. In the case of the Baxter government, not only was it de facto, but it was likewise de jure; so determined by the only power on earth that was competent to decide the question—first by the Legislature, the constitutional tribunal to decide that particular question; and secondly by the overwhelming indorsement of the people. And if Congress now should so far misunderstand its powers and duties as to pass an act deposing the present governor and his government and installing another, it could not be Brooks, as he is, as before remarked, forever foreclosed and estopped.

Let us for a moment examine the ground upon which one V. V. Smith, who was the lieutenant-governor in the Baxter government, and who to-day is a fugitive fleeing the clutches of the laws of Arkansas, bases his claims to be the governor of Arkansas. This man and his abettors, who are seeking to overthrow the State government of Arkansas, base their claim to the rightful control of the State government and the emoluments of its offices upon the plea that the constitution of 1868 requires resolutions for amendment to the constitution to be first passed by the Legislature, then ratified by the people, and again passed by a majority of a subsequent Legislature. They insist that this action of a subsequent Legislature is wanting in the proceedings in Arkansas which have resulted in erecting the present government. This flimsy plea will not stand the test either of facts or of logic.

In the first place, the constitution itself of 1868, from which this argument is drawn, was not republican in the manner of its adoption or indeed in form. It was the legitimate offspring of the reconstruction policy, and was hoisted into existence by force over the will of a majority of the people of that State; and being in operation, laws were enacted by Legislatures elected and acting under its aegis, which disfranchised the almost entire intelligent opposition in the State. It enacted a system of taxation unprecedented except in three or four Southern States who like itself were the victims of misrule, boldly setting at defiance the well-established American principle that taxation and representation should go hand in hand. With such a constitution and such laws we may well question the sanctity of such constitutional inhibitions or obligations. We might be excused if we were, in our foolish allegiance to an old idea not yet banished from the moral world, sometimes called consistency, to modestly ask that the beam be plucked from their own eye before they complain of the mote in the eye of their adversary. It is an old and much venerated legal aphorism that he who asks equity shall first do equity. It is remarkable that Mr. V. V. Smith, or any other man connected with the government, under that pink of a constitution of 1868, which now causes the blush to mantle the cheeks of its projectors, if indeed they be not lost to all sensibility, should come forward and ask Congress to do a thing that it has no power to do, and if it had would be an act which it would be mild language to characterize as folly—an act which would paralyze business, unsettle the affairs of the entire State, demoralize and irritate the people, and remit the political and social relations of the community to chaos.

But this technical plea does not apply, for no amendments were offered whatever. An entirely new constitution was framed and put in force, and the old one was destroyed. And in any event the utmost which could be claimed under this clause of amendment would be simply to amend by resolution twice adopted by the Legislature and ratified by the people, dispensing with the more costly and cumbersome agency of a convention of delegates—a sort of cheap and convenient mode provided in most of the State constitutions for the purpose of effecting amendments only to the organic law.

But lest this view of the case is not satisfactory—and I take it that it will hardly be so accepted by the opponents of the Garland government, especially as they are driven to desperate straits for an argument—it might be well just here to recall the fact that this same constitution of 1868 did not so far depart from the usual formulas of American constitutions as to forget to attach a bill of rights. In that bill of rights it is declared solemnly that the people have at all times an indefeasible right to alter, reform, or abolish their constitution at will. Here, then, was the undoubted authority, and under it the Baxter Legislature called the convention to abolish the old constitution and to create entirely a new one; and the people ratified their action in both instances by tremendous majorities. But suppose that the bill of rights had been silent upon this point, and that the constitution was likewise silent—that is, contained no prohibitory clause, as it did not in this case—shall we be told that the people must be circumscribed to the limits laid down in the old constitution, and therefore the manacles which our predecessors, either through ignorance or design, once forged and placed upon our limbs shall forever remain? Such a position is abhorrent to all ideas of progression, and would forever defeat all advancement in the science of government.

The constitution being silent, there was of course no restriction upon the Legislature. It was free to act and did act in regular form, in harmony both with the constitution and with the great reserved right declared in the bill of rights. Happily, however, in this case there was an entire absence of constitutional prohibition, and therefore it is clear that the power vested in the Legislature. The authorities sustaining this view are abundant and of the highest respectability, such as will command the respect of the judicial learning of this House. I might here invoke an authority which commands universal respect throughout the limits of the Union. In the case of McCulloch vs. The State of Maryland, 4 Wheaton, page 420, speaking of the power of Congress to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper to carry into execution the powers of the Government in the absence of a positive grant, Chief Justice Marshall, in delivering the opinion of the court, said:

Its terms purposed to enlarge, not to diminish the power vested in the Government. It purports to be an additional power, not a restriction on those already granted. * * * The result of the most careful and attentive consideration bestowed upon this claim is that if it does not enlarge it cannot be construed to restrain the powers of Congress or to impair the right of the Legislature to exercise its best judgment in the selection of measures to carry into execution the constitutional powers of the Government. If no other motive for its insertion can be suggested, a sufficient one is found in the desire to remove all doubts respecting the right to legislate on that vast mass of incidental powers which must be involved in the Constitution, if that instrument be not a splendid bauble.

I do not understand that the opinion just quoted intends to convey the idea of wide and latitudinarian construction, but simply to mean that such power as is essential to carry out the express provisions was conferred. I will refer without reading to McLean's Reports, pages 348, 349, and to 7 Peters, page 546; also section 1, volume 1, page 8, Statutes at Large.

But I will quote in support of this principle from an authority which very many in this House profoundly venerate. I read from Mr. Webster's great speech in the Dorr case, 6 Peters, page 227. He says:

Another American principle growing out of this, and just as important and well settled as is the truth that the people are the source of power, is that when in the course of events it becomes necessary to ascertain the will of the people on a new exigency, or a new state of things, or of opinion, the legislative power provides for that ascertainment by an ordinary act of legislation. Has not that been our whole history?

Mr. Webster then refers to the Constitution under which we now live as a prominent instance among many others. He says:

The old Congress, upon the suggestion of the delegates who assembled at Annapolis in May, 1786, recommended to the States that they should send delegates to a convention to be holden at Philadelphia to form a constitution. No article of the old Confederation gave them power to do this; but they did it, and the States did appoint delegates who assembled at Philadelphia and formed the Constitution.

It was communicated to the old Congress, and that body recommended to the States to make provision for calling the people together to act upon its adoption. He says—mark the language:

Was not that exactly the case of passing a law to ascertain the will of the people in a new exigency?

Again, Mr. Webster says:

Of the old thirteen States the constitutions, with but one exception, contained no provision for their own amendment. In New Hampshire there was a provision for taking the sense of the people once in seven years. Yet there is hardly one that has not altered its constitution, and it has been done by conventions called by the Legislature, or an ordinary exercise of legislative power.

The convention of 1786 which was holden at Philadelphia, and which "no article of the Confederation gave them power to do," was presided over by no less an illustrious patriot than the Father of his Country. Its members were among the foremost intellects of that or any other age or clime. The result of its labors secures us the freedom we enjoy this day.

Twenty-six instances of constitutions are cited by Judge Jamison, a standard writer on constitutional conventions, where the people of States have amended or abolished their constitutions without strictly adhering to the forms or requirements laid down in their former constitution. It has been done three times in Georgia, once in South Carolina, once in New Hampshire, three times in New York, once in Connecticut, twice in Massachusetts, four times in Rhode Island, once in North Carolina, once in Pennsylvania in 1837, once in New Jersey, three times in Missouri, once in Indiana, and again in Pennsylvania, in 1873, where the provisions of the constitution were precisely the same as they were in this constitution of Arkansas in 1865.

Now, if the vox populi of the State of Arkansas is to be disregarded, and her deliberately chosen government overturned by the edict of Congress and the bayonets of the Executive, may I inquire whether Congress will be consistent and proceed at once to dispatch the States just named and require them to remodel their organic laws and reconstruct their internal policy? Or would that be a feasible undertaking? Sir, Congress treads upon narrow ground. I hold that Congress should acquiesce in the conclusions of the report of the majority of the committee and leave Arkansas to work out her own destiny in her own way under the Constitution of the United States.

These citations show that statesmen were jealous of forms in which human rights are contained, illustrating this principle and establishing this precedent in most notable and historic instances. Who questions the authority of the mighty name of Webster, thrown with its immense weight in all questions of constitutional law into the scale, asserting in no doubtful terms this very power? The Legislature, although not itself sovereign, is nevertheless the agent of sovereignty. And where no constitutional prohibitions intervene, it can but obey the voice of the people whose creature it is. To do otherwise would be to sink the will of the constituency in the will of the representative. The exercise of this power by the Legislature has been so frequent and general that we see from the long line of authorities referred to it has become the settled policy. The very authorities quoted settle the question. How, then, was the action of the Baxter legislature irregular? There was no prohibition in this case, and the power to call a convention according to these authorities vested in the Legislature.

But the minds of Representatives have been often puzzled in reference to the necessity of what are called enabling acts—the fact that Congress has in some instances passed acts of invitation or authorization, or enabling acts if you choose, prior to the action of the people of a Territory in throwing off its territorial form preparatory to being made and admitted as a State. No particular rule even in such cases has universally prevailed. Many States were admitted with and many were admitted without enabling acts into the Union.

Mr. Butler, Attorney-General, in speaking upon this point, (see 2 Opinions of Attorneys-General, 726,) said:

But the people of a Territory may peaceably meet together in primary assemblies or in conventions chosen by such assemblies, for the purpose of petitioning Congress to abrogate the territorial government, and to admit them into the Union as an independent State; and if they accompany their petition with a constitution framed and agreed on by their primary assemblies there is no objection to their power to do so, nor to any measures which may be taken to collect the sense of the people in respect to it; provided such measures shall be prosecuted in a peaceable manner, in subordination to the existing government, and in subservience to the power of Congress to adopt, reject, or disregard them at their pleasure.

California was admitted without ever having had a territorial form of government; but was a conquered province wrested by the United States from Mexico as indemnity for the past and security for the future, and was under the command and control of Colonel Riley, of the United States Army, who had been appointed by General Scott as governor of the province. On Governor Riley's proclamation alone the people of California met in convention and framed a constitution, and was immediately admitted by Congress as a State of this Union. The power of a people to meet and organize and frame constitutions is inherent.

Turn now to the Declaration of Independence. It declares that—

Whenever any form of government becomes destructive of the ends of government, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute a new government, laying its foundation on such principles, and organizing its powers in such form, as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness. * * * We hold these truths to be self-evident.

Jameson on Constitutional Conventions, page 236, in summing up the principles or rule of action of a large number of State conventions, says:

What they do declare is in effect this: the people cannot bind themselves or be bound irrevocably to continue a form of government when it has ceased to answer the ends of its establishment. They may change it or set it aside in any way whatever that circumstances may make necessary.

Applying this principle to American States under the Federal Constitution, there is no restriction whatever upon them except to be republican in form and in harmony with the General Government. This great right is the key-stone of the arch of civil liberty which so gracefully spans the American Union. This is the distinguishing feature of American States. The only restriction upon this power as a State in the Union is, that her government shall be republican in form. To her own people belongs the exclusive control of her own internal and domestic affairs. All attempts to impose restrictions upon her internal polity were held by the men who sat in the convention with Washington who made the Federal Constitution as an unwarrantable interference and dangerous to liberty. Pausing here amid the sacred memories of that most interesting era in our country's annals, with the venerable forms of the Father of his Country, and Hancock, and Adams, and Jefferson, and Madison, and other revolutionary names—rising up before me in defense of this noble truth, I look around at the sad mockery of freedom in several States of this Union and ask, are we the political lineal descendants of those patriots who consecrated their lives, their all, to this great birthright of American States—the right under the Federal Constitution to govern themselves? This is all Arkansas asks. Will Vermont and Massachusetts submit to less? If not, why then deny the boon to Arkansas? But so far as Arkansas is concerned her people acted under an enabling act of the Legislature, elected her delegates upon the broadest and most liberal basis, inviting all men twenty-one years and over, without distinction of color or previous condition, to come forward and vote. Nearly all did so. The constitution is unobjectionable; it is republican in form. The people have, as before stated, ratified it by large and overwhelming majorities, and the whole body of the people are satisfied. It is their own work, and all they ask is to be let alone. The Federal officers within her borders who are in the legitimate discharge of their constitutional duties are welcomed, encouraged, and sustained by the people and the State government; the authority of the United States Government in its rightful sphere is respected and obeyed. What more is demanded? Must the will of the people of Arkansas be set aside that a few malcontents and political adventurers shall be hoisted into office in the teeth of almost the entire people?

Departed spirits of the mighty dead—

Shall laws, constitutions, precedents, and living principles all be set at naught, and a whole State remanded to slavery, thus sapping the very vitals of her prosperity, that a few men shall gloat in malignant triumph over those people whom they have solemnly and deliberately and almost unanimously repudiated? Shall the American Congress forget that all free governments are based upon the consent of the governed; or shall the sovereign voice of the people be hushed and the men whom she has chosen to rule her destiny and administer her law give place to self-appointed rulers? If these imbroglions in the Southern States continue much longer, we shall be in danger of lapsing into the anarchy and factions which now distract some of the South American states, and some of the states of our unhappy neighbor, Mexico.

There is one remedy; that is, let the patriotic intelligence of the people govern; remove Federal bayonets, and let the State governments stand alone. Do this, and peace will reign throughout the South, life and property will be protected, the laws will be faithfully executed, and the people will once more move forward in the great race of life, happy, contented, prosperous, and free. Do this, and the clouds which have so long lowered over and darkened the once serene light of those bright southern skies will at last drift away and vanish from view as the shadows of night disappear at the rosy dawn of day.

But let Congress lend a willing ear to the seductive whispers of the petty few whose unholy ambition and inordinate avarice prompt them to adopt the dangerous motto of rule or ruin, and a precedent for congressional interference is set which overturns the whole theory of republican or representative government, and will finally end either in anarchy or in a grand centralized despotism, ruled by a few oligarchists for a time, but who would eventually be dispersed, and some Cromwell assume control. The rights of Arkansas are the same as those of any other State in this Union. Her cause is their cause, and you can no sooner separate them without fatal consequences than you can sever the arteries which give life to the limbs and body without death to the man.

Under this threatening attitude of the Federal Government, with the sword of Damocles suspended over the heads of the people, the South feels repressed; her energies are relaxed; she "shows a body rather than a life." This constant Federal interference will not only sow the seeds of political death, but material death will follow it. Those fertile fields whereon nature has lavished her most bounteous gifts, once the seats of grace, elegance, and opulence, are fast retrograding to their native jungles and wildwood. And the large volume of national wealth annually drawn from her generous bosom and placed on the world's ledger to the credit side of our country will under such treatment diminish to nothing. Already the Western States have lost their most profitable customer, and their products rot in their fields.

The people North, South, East, and West have proclaimed that the heel of arbitrary power must be removed, and the people of each State under the Constitution of the United States be allowed to control their own local affairs.

I do not believe that there is any disposition in any of the eleven States of the South recently at war with the Government to repudiate or disregard either of the three last articles of amendment to the Constitution. The people universally accept them, and regard them as binding and valid parts of that instrument. Nor do I believe that the people in any of those States cherish the least or faintest desire to renew the late fratricidal contest, now or hereafter. Nor do I believe that they cherish any unkind sentiments, except in individual cases where the rules of war were violated and personal injury was done through avarice or brutality. Nor do I believe that those people desire to deny to the black man a single political or civil right he has acquired by the recent legislation of Congress as the result of the war. What, then, is the cause of this renewed and systematic effort to influence the northern mind against the southern people? There is but one answer to it. It is to keep the republican party in power. States must be dismantled, governments of consent must be substituted for governments of force; the industrial energies of the people in those States must be strained to the point of relaxation when idleness ensues and poverty and want closely follow; the commercial interests of the whole country must receive a shock, and the trade of the Northern, Eastern, and Western States more or less diminished by demoralizing the labor and destroying the purchasing capacity of the southern people, thus paralyzing the whole business interests of the whole country—all to keep the republican party in power. What a sacrifice!

What is the crime of the South that she is not forgiven? It is not that she embraced the heresy of secession, for see the early and violent advocates of secession now among the honored leaders of the republican party. It is not that she tendered or accepted the gage of battle and appealed to the God of victories, for see General Longstreet and others occupying high and profitable seats in the synagogue. What, then, is her unpardonable sin? It is that a very large proportion of her people, having been brought up in the schools of representative government, and seeing that the republican party has no idea of constitutional liberty or of a sound and healthy economy in the administration of the affairs of the Government, but is given over to the expediences of the hour, without conviction or principle, have resolved to stand by their northern democratic and liberal friends in their party affiliations. They believe that the ark of the covenant of freedom is either with that party or it is lost upon this continent. The republican party has tried every avenue of empiricism which has opened to its imagination, never failing with each successive change or shifting scene to invent some new harassment for our people. How, then, could we love the republican party? Our loyalty to the Government is still distrusted, indeed impeached, but the mistake made is, that the South is only disloyal to the republican party and not to the Government. The recent elections point to the fact that a very large majority of the American people are able to appreciate the difference. The southern people are simply thankful that they can discern through these elections the approaching rainbow of peace.

Even Europe is startled by the arrest of Count Von Arnim upon Bismarck's demand; and why should the people of the United States not take alarm at the proclamations of the President commanding the people of Louisiana and Mississippi to submit quietly to the dictation of the usurpers of their liberties. But the country receives with greater alarm the brief, terse, ominous, and soldier-like message of the President on the 8th of this month, addressed to the United States Senate. Having by some incomprehensible mode changed his mind upon the subject of the gubernatorial election in 1872 in Arkansas, he now holds that Brooks was elected, while within less than a twelve-month he ejected Brooks from the executive office at the point of the bayonet as a usurping pretender, and recognized Governor Baxter as the governor of that State. The President assumes this most extraordinary position in the face of a report of the House committee, composed of able jurists, at the head of whom stands the distinguished member from Vermont.

The report says:

The new constitution we regard as republican in form and in many respects an improvement on that of 1868. The committee are satisfied that the convention to frame the constitution and the constitution itself were voted for and are satisfactory to a majority of the voters and people in the State. The State officers were certainly elected by a majority of the votes cast, and we think by a majority of the votes in the State.

And yet the President demands that Congress shall take action when there is really nothing to act on, as suggested by the committee. I confess that the country will feel quite as much surprised at the novelty as it will be shocked by the extreme and dangerous assumptions of the message.

Does President Grant intend to imply that any of the reconstructed States are under any obligation or disability not common to any other State? The adoption of the thirteenth, fourteenth, and fifteenth amendments by those States discharged every obligation, real or implied, of admission. Not one of those States propose in the slightest degree to abolish or evade those amendments. Is the doctrine intended to be asserted, that Congress or the Executive have peculiar privileges in interfering with the domestic polity of those States and to prevent at pleasure any changes in their organic law, provided always, that the form of government is republican and the relations of such States with the Federal Government are undisturbed? If the deductions of this message are correct, then indeed are the reconstructed States no longer equal with the other States of the Union, but are in name, as well as in fact, mere colonial dependencies of the Federal Government.

Arkansas was never more quiet than she is at this time; never was the majesty of the law more respected by her people than now. Her form of government is republican; her laws are executed by an able, discreet, just, prudent, conservative, and patriotic governor, who will be prompt to punish crime by whomsoever committed, and who will mete out equal and exact justice to all men with faithful impartiality and rigid inflexibility. From a long and intimate personal acquaintance with Governor Garland I may be allowed to say for him that he would scorn himself if he believed himself capable of oppressing the humblest citizen or withholding from the weakest the amplest protection, regardless of race or color.

Well may patriots everywhere all over this Union espouse the cause of those down-trodden States as their own if we would avoid the centralism in which it all ends. The Southern States must stand upon the great American idea of local self-government under the American Constitution or they must be ruled by the sword. Is it not better that the South be governed by her own people than that the peace of the whole country be constantly disturbed, our business interests deranged, and a heavy, increasing burden of taxation annually piled up upon the whole people of the Union for the support of the Army that will be necessary to enforce obedience to rulers not of her own choosing and to maintain State governments that rob and plunder instead of protect and foster their interests?

If freedom in the Southern States be smothered by military power, then the flame that now lights the altars of the Northern States must likewise ere long be quenched; for these American States cannot exist part slave and part free. Republicans have almost oracular authority for this. They must all be free or the yoke must all be under the yoke of the tyrant. I desire to be understood as discussing a fact or principle, and as being wholly impersonal in any application. I only design showing that the United States General Government cannot afford to treat the Southern States as conquered provinces without endangering, nay losing, every characteristic of free government. Local self-government is the great central idea of liberty in the American States. We cannot afford to follow the example of conquering nations. They were not free governments like ours. Viewed from the stand-point of material prosperity, it is equally fatal. Once the Southern States were supplied in a great measure by the grain and provisions and handicraft of the North; now, under the reign of misrule, their prosperity and wealth are gone, and the wave of poverty which has rolled over the South and left it in many places a desolation is now turning back and has already reached the poor of the Northern States, and the wail of distress now fills the air.

That the republican party should expect to preserve order in the Southern States, or indeed in any of the States, by substituting military for civil home rule is to me most incomprehensible. If so, away with liberty and the whole theory of representative government in America. Vanish the delusion! The people of New England, of the teeming North, and the great West are not willing to be taxed to support an army for the purpose of governing and ruling any of the States of this Union, southern though they be, if you please, at the cost of many millions annually. For a decade there has not been a hostile arm in the South raised against the authority of the Union. If the American flag were to-day insulted, there would as great a number of men from the South rush to its defense and to avenge its wounded honor as from any other section of our common country. In no State in this Union is the authority of the United States Government more respected or promptly obeyed than in the South. In Arkansas a single military company was sufficient to keep the peace between the armed forces of Baxter and Brooks. In Louisiana a telegram from the President restores a fleeing usurper, and the man chosen by the people lays down the ensign of power. In Mississippi a word from Washington restores to power officers illegally installed into office.

For ten long, dreary, and harassing years this vicious policy has been perpetrated upon the southern people. The party in power seems to have desired to make the South what India is to England or Poland is to Russia. The grossest fabrications of the animus of the southern people toward the Federal Government and toward the people of the Northern States have been gratuitously circulated, falsely representing the facts. They have been accused of hatred to the negro and of doing him systematic wrong and injustice, which is likewise untrue. That difficulties arise and men, white and black, are sometimes killed is of course true. These broils generally take place just upon the eve of the congressional elections, at a time when the southern people are most anxious for peace, knowing the effect it has upon the popular mind in the North. Why, then, do they occur just before the elections? There is but one reasonable answer. It is that malicious persons who are anxious for this influence in the northern elections foment these disturbances. There can be no other solution to it. May we not hope for peace in the future?

After the recent election I feel sure that the masses of the people, white and black, in the South (I at least speak for my own district) indulged the fond hope that every irritating cause would be removed on account of race and color. But the echoes of the political thunder of last November that shook the continent had not died away until in this Federal Capitol a fragment of a party met in caucus and in effect resolved that they would revamp the outrage cry and endeavor once more to regain lost power by the most wholesale detraction of the southern people. For myself I here assert, without intending to violate any of the parliamentary rules or courtesies of this House, that not one word or idea published in that manifesto of wrongs or dangers to southern republicans, white or black, in the district I have the honor to represent, is true either in letter or spirit. Mr. Speaker, this country needs peace, and the people intend to have it. The people will rule this country, in spite of Presidents or parties, and the sooner we all recognize their voice and heed their commands the better for all sides.

What greater submission or further humiliation does the enlightened and just public sentiment of the Northern States demand of the southern people? Their burdens are intolerable. Yet wisdom suggests patience upon their part. The American people are now sitting in grand inquest upon this vital question. The issue is presented and must be met squarely; there is no escape. This is either a government of laws and constitutions or it is a despotism under the rule of one man backed by a party which recognizes no law but that of success.

Let the entire democracy throughout the land send greeting to their stricken sisters of the South brave words of cheer and hope. The dawn that shall dispel the long night cannot be far ahead. The remedy is peace. "Learn to labor and to wait."

The voice of liberty bids the southern people to bear and endure whatever oppressions fate may yet have in store for them. The peace and welfare of the whole Union depend upon the patient submission and sublime endurance of the South. They must learn to endure the evils of civil-rights laws, bayonet election laws, Federal interference, and inquisition, all for the sake of peace and a deliverance from these intolerable burdens in the early future. These things must have an end.

Time and the hour run through the roughest day.

Governments are instituted among men for purposes of protection, and not for destruction. That government is fortunate which is always able by wise, just, and equal laws to command at all times the affections of the people. But the policy of the republican party seems to have been the reverse. Its mission seems, if it is to be interpreted by its acts, to foment discord and irritation among the people, so that other and additional burdens may be heaped upon them to incite them to violence. It has systematically engendered sectional animosities and race antagonisms as distracting elements among the people for the purpose of producing results by which they may continue in power. But, thanks to the patient, law-abiding, and conservative sentiments of the masses of the people, these indignities and injustices are borne almost in silence; and the people, by their manly fortitude and brave acquiescence in the demands of arbitrary power and military force, have rebuked the fell spirit that has caused throughout the Southern States

Peace to arise out of universal discord.

The opulent East, the powerful North, and the great West cannot safely consent to the permanent enslavement of the down-trodden South. I believe that the chains of Federal power which now fetter her limbs will soon fall in pieces, and that those States which now stand bowed as conquered provinces will, under the lead of the national democracy, aided by the patriotic of all parties at the grand assize of 1876, once more assume their places in the roll of American States, beneath one flag, one country, and under a written Constitution.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION.

[Mr. VANCE addressed the House. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

•LOUISIANA.

[Mr. MILLIKEN addressed the House in regard to the condition of affairs in Louisiana. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

CONDITION OF THE SOUTH.

Mr. CAIN. Mr. Speaker, I presume that every man sent to the Congress of the United States, from whatever State or community, ought to have some views upon the great questions that are now agitating the nation. I confess I have mine, however humble they may be, and I wish to express those views in regard to the affairs of this Government. I had, however, marked out for myself a different line of argument from that to which other gentlemen have addressed themselves. But so much has been said on the other side against the policy of the Government, so much against the usurpation of the Executive of the United States, that I am constrained to say, altering somewhat the language of the song:

Woodman, spare the tree,
Touch not a single bough;
In slavery it protected me,
And I'll defend it now.

Sir, it is strange that gentlemen cannot see the true idea of freedom and liberty. I do not know whether they are most blinded by their passions or their prejudices. I regret, however, that on these occasions my friend from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] and myself so often come in contact. I will, however, pass by his remarks without any special answer, because his frank expressions of good-will certainly should extort from me a recognition. Therefore I will say, so far as his remarks apply to the State of South Carolina and to myself, that we are in peace and good-will down there. The only class of persons who are not in peace are those who are dissatisfied with the Government. Perfect peace reigns in South Carolina outside of Edgefield County. When gentlemen speak of the ill-feeling existing in the South between the two classes, I wish to say that I do not know any State in this Union where there exists a better feeling between the two classes than in the State of South Carolina. So far as regards our government, I think it is shown by our last elections, by the inaugural address, and the messages of our governor, as well as the other reports upon the condition of affairs there, that to-day South Carolina stands as fair as any State in the South reconstructed under the laws of Congress. While it is true that much has been done which we ourselves have regretted, I do not think this is so much our fault as the fault of others.

But I am happy to say that a great change has come over us; that within eight years we have learned something; and our democratic friends in South Carolina have learned something also. They have learned that, being in a minority, it is a good thing to accept the situation and to recognize the fact that there is a majority on the other side. This having been done, we have shaken hands to a certain extent, and have inaugurated a new era of affairs. A large number of the best citizens of South Carolina are now members of the "negro Legislature" (as it is called) of that State. Things are now going on harmoniously. Hence I do not think there is much complaint to be made in regard to the condition of our State.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another consideration to which I wish to refer. I regard it as the duty of the nation to look after the education and development of the masses of the people who have been thrown upon their own resources by the great change that has taken place in the country. No gentleman on this floor fails to recognize the fact that the more intelligent any class of people are the more easily they are governed. Hence I desire to-night to express my thoughts on the importance of education in this country.

I regard it as essential to the welfare of the nation that there shall be inaugurated a system of education which shall meet the needs of the vast number of illiterate in this land. Sir, there is more danger to this country from illiteracy than there is from the five million negroes who have been made free. Possibly the prejudices existing in the South are the result of the vast mass of ignorance prevailing not only among the blacks but among the whites as well. Ignorance and superstition are the parents of almost all the evils which nations suffer. Hence I desire to dwell upon this subject of education.

Now, suppose that our friends and our opponents as well—those who deprecate our emancipation, those who discard the measures of reconstruction as applied to the colored race—should throw aside their prejudices and say that with heart and hand and purse they would strive to educate this great mass of ignorant people, to lift them up by every means of development, to open the school-house and the academy, to establish and maintain all the means of educational development; would there not be a great change in the South and in the country generally?

The complaint of many southern white people and of some gentlemen on this floor is our ignorance.

I will not tarry, Mr. Speaker, to say anything that might offend gentlemen on the other side. I will not answer the remark of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] that when the war closed there was not another four million of people so well educated as we were. I answered that last winter, and I now pass it by. It is a sorry picture, however; a sad commentary on the system of education which obtained before the war. Why, in the name of Heaven, if you gave us such a good system of education before the war, if you gave us such high development of moral worth, as the gentleman has said, do you now find fault with us for seeking still greater development? Your instructions have not done us any harm, but then why not continue them? If we were so well qualified under the system the gentleman speaks of, why complain now? We have only accepted what you gave us, and if there is any fault in our education it lies at your door. Shake not thy gory locks at us; thou canst not say we did it. Our debasement, whatever it is, and all the evils which the negro suffers from throughout the land to-day lie at the doors of those who held us in bondage and withheld us from the enjoyment of the same rights and privileges which they themselves enjoyed.

But I wish to speak, Mr. Speaker, of another matter, and that is in reference to the agricultural interests of the Southern States. Here we are, and here, as I have said, we are going to stay. Then what is the best policy to adopt in order to make us an integral portion of this Union? It is to seek by every means to lift us up to the level of manhood and womanhood; to develop our intellects, to develop our resources; to bring out of us that which is within us, to enable us to accomplish our destiny in this land and add largely to the welfare of the whole nation.

We are the agriculturists of the South. All the agricultural States of the South are in the hands of the black man. All acknowledge this. Your rice, your cotton, your tobacco, all the agricultural productions of the South, are in the main the fruit of the labor of the colored man. Is it not a fact the more intelligent operators are, the greater is the relative production? In other words, intelligent laborers produce more than those who are not intelligent. This I think is a truth which everybody will admit. Take the northern mechanics, the northern farmers, the northern machinists; they have had vast development. They have been wonderfully developed in science and art; and what has been the result in the North? The adoption of these measures in the North have developed the people and have lifted them up to a higher standard of science and art. Apply the same standard to the negroes of the South, and in less than ten years you will have no reason to complain of their ignorance or of anarchy, but on the contrary you will be proud of the black man as a citizen of the United States of America.

No, sir, the system of slavery was antagonistic to this grand idea of legislation and the development of man. The more besotted, the more bestial the slave was the better he was controlled, and vice versa; the more enlightened the slave, the less he was under control in slavery. It is just so with the white man. My distinguished friend from Kentucky [Mr. MILLIKEN] said that human nature was the same all over the world. That is true; and black human nature is the same the world over under the same circumstances. Why, five hundred years ago the Norman made the Saxon his slave, and the latter around his neck wore his master's collar with his master's name inscribed upon it. But what is the proud Saxon to-day? What has the Saxon done in that time? The distinguished statesman, Mr. Pitt, on one occasion made a notable remark in the House of Parliament while discussing the question of the abolition of slavery in the West Indies. His opponent spoke contemptuously of the negro race, and Pitt then said that—

It ill becomes an Englishman to talk of the African as being a slave, for only three hundred years ago your ancestors wore their masters' collars.

But what has the Anglo-Saxon race done since then? Under the circumstances, gentlemen, under the same influences, enjoying the same privileges, possessed of the same rights, elevated by the same means, this country will have no reason to regret the existence of the black men in this country.

I regard it as essential that the black race should be encouraged in their progress. What we ask in the South now, what is our right, is that the white people of the North should encourage us. I have felt that we were between the upper and nether millstones to be ground to powder. It is not an enviable position for any man, white or black, to be in; but, sir, I see a brighter future. As I have said before, I have hopes in the future of this nation. We need the same encouragement the white man needs under the same circumstances. We have human nature, too; we are Americans in feeling and in sentiment.

The colored people accept the proposition of the gentleman from North Carolina. We need peace. We have no ill-will toward you. God knows we have reason enough. We have no disposition other than one of kindness, and we are disposed to accept what you give us. We only ask you to give us a chance in the race of life.

My friend from North Carolina [Mr. ROBBINS] said in the course of his remarks that he was astonished to find colored men on this floor asking for their liberties now that they have been made free. The only reason is that they do not want down in North Carolina to accept the fact that we are free. We regret that it is necessary for us to come to the Congress of the United States and to ask them to give us protection in our liberties. If the kindly feeling in the South of which we have heard would throw itself around us; if the law of kindness was exercised toward us; if they guaranteed to us the free operation of the reconstruction laws; if they would let us enjoy the privileges guaranteed us by the Constitution of this country, we would have no reason to come to Congress or anywhere else and ask protection from midnight riders who would shoot us down and burn our cabins. No; we would have no reason for that.

There are two classes of whites in the South, and I make a discrimination between them; for I want to say here that there is a class of white men and women, too, in the South, noble-hearted, generous-hearted people, for whom I have now and always will have the greatest respect. Take the highest classes, the refined classes, and we have no trouble with them. It is the class of men thrown up by the war, that rude class depicted by Helper—you who have read his book know the class of men I mean, the "tar-heels" and the "sand-hillers," and the "dirt eaters" of the South—it is with that class we have all our trouble, and it is from them we have to get protection. It is that class who ride at night, who burn school-houses, who drive us from place to place. It is against that class we have to get some protection.

I regard it, therefore, of importance that we should have a change in the South. I will say in a word that all the South wants is peace and good-will, and no class of people can give us that so readily as the southern people themselves.

I believe that to-day the southern people have in their own hands the key to unlock all the doors through which will come peace to this country; and that is by acknowledging the laws of the country, and obeying the laws of the country, and letting all men enjoy their God-given rights according to the dictates of their consciences and the laws of their country. It is the violation of the laws of the country that makes the trouble in the South. They do not have it in New York or in any of the other States where the people accept and obey the laws. There is no trouble there at all. It is only where men are in defiance of the laws, and where men are determined that all classes of people shall not enjoy their rights—it is there only that we have trouble in the country.

Gentlemen have spoken of Louisiana. Why, sir, just think of it. Since 1866, for political reasons, there have been twenty-one hundred and forty-four murders outright, says General Sheridan, who is good authority; and there have been twenty-one hundred and fifteen people wounded because of their political opinions; making forty-two hundred and fifty-six maimed and murdered on account of their opinions, because they supported the republican party in Louisiana.

The gentleman from North Carolina says they have accepted the situation. Yes, sir, they have done so; they have accepted it in a way of their own. They now propose a change of the constitution of their State, as in the State of Arkansas they have changed theirs, overturning the government, without regard to any principle of honor, and putting in their own men to govern according to their own desires. It is because the revolutionary spirit is abroad that there is trouble in the South.

I say, then, Mr. Speaker, we want a change of policy in the South; and I say it would be for the advantage of the whole country the more readily the southern people accepted this great fact, that the Government must maintain the rights of all classes of its people. The more thoroughly they do this the better it will be for us all. I do not regard this as a fight against the black man especially. I regard it rather as a fight against the genius of our institutions. I regard it as a fight against the reconstruction acts of Congress. I regard it as a fight against the republican party, simply because the republican party has guaranteed to these people their rights and privileges. The fight is waged against principles and against the party now in power. But the South needs something else. It wants peace. It wants good-will. The great need of the South is good-will among its people, all classes of them. The rights and the value of the working classes must be recognized. Why, sir, every raid in the South drives away commerce. Every outrage down there keeps away capital from the South.

Give the South peace. I wonder the southern people cannot see that it is for their own advantage to give them peace, and it will give to their country and to those citizens all the means of development, all the means of advancement, all the great measures for the advancement of agriculture, all the great measures for the refinement of manufactures, and then the country will be blessed and benefited by this change. Without it we cannot have prosperity. Every outrage, every commotion, takes us further away from development and from the measures for our prosperity which rightfully belong to us.

Why, sir, the Southern States, as has been asserted here very truly, possess a climate unsurpassed and resources not yet developed; with broad rivers sweeping down from the mountains to the sea-board; with its vast savannas all pouring into the breast of the ocean; its resources, which with God's blessing might be used to make that country blossom like the rose. Instead of shipping our produce to

New England, we might have factories established where we could put our raw material and have it manufactured there into goods which we could ship ourselves to other portions of the country. To accomplish this we must have capital and labor. But so long as this constant howl is kept up capital will not come to the South, and the southern people will never have an opportunity to develop their resources and to send forth their commerce to whiten the sea.

This is the trouble with the Southern States. It is that the spirit of rebellion still reigns there, and as long as that spirit reigns the Southern States will never be enabled to establish their commerce, to advance in commercial prosperity, or to develop that commerce which is their due. We have iron ore, we have coal-beds in our Southern States; we have a vast system of mines which need development. What the South needs is peace and good-will only. We need some system adopted in the Southern States to bring about these results, and until we attain that we cannot be prosperous, because capital and labor will not come and northern men will not come within our borders. Capital has no partialities; and where there is peace then assistance in the shape of capital and labor will come from other States, because it keeps away from those States those men that would give her success and prosperity.

Sir, the South must have a change in its sentiments as relates to this race with a view to its future prosperity; a rigid and earnest effort by all classes of its population, as far as possible with any people, to re-establish peace and thus lay the foundations for a new civilization among that class against whom this prejudice exists, and on the part of all classes of men there. The future prosperity, therefore, of this nation would be advanced by the education and development of this race.

Sir, I have no feeling of unkindness to any class of men in this country. I look at this subject, I trust, from a higher stand-point than mere prejudice of race. I have learned to sink out of sight a race prejudice and to look higher. Sir, the highest conception of the great duties of the national character and statesmanship recognize the importance of the unification of these races and classes of people, and the opening of the doors to them for national progress and development. I regard the future of our State and country as important to us, as I said before, as an integral part of the nation.

Sir, I feel a pride that in the Halls of the National Legislature of the nation I may present my views as a Representative from one of the States, in part, and of five millions of the people of this country. It is an honor to my conscience to vindicate the rights of the whole people of the country. In the language of the lamented and martyred Lincoln, "with malice toward none and charity toward all," we are ready to bury forever out of sight all the asperity and ill-feeling which have resulted from the recent contest.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude with this thought: We are bound up together in this country—the two races—no legerdemain can separate us. I do not care what efforts may be made, we are going to stick right here. Here we began the work, and here we are going to stay and finish it. I rejoice to-day in this fact, that our democratic friends cannot succeed without us in the South or our republican friends either, because we are a part of this nation and you cannot get rid of us. The same principle that gives the democrat his liberty gives the black man his liberty also; the same principle that guarantees the republican in his liberties guarantees the black man also in his rights because he is a man. You cannot rub out our manhood by any constitutional enactment or legislation or by any edict of the governor of a State. We will be men still.

I want to say in closing that whatever the heated imagination of men may invent, in whatever movements you may make for the improvement and development of this country, the colored race must move with you step by step. If your commerce, bearing the products of your industry, whiten the ocean, we shall have our share in those products. If it be decreed that while the Stars and Stripes wave an American citizen shall be protected on every soil, we shall claim the same protection as you do. We are American citizens, with all the rights and privileges of American citizens, and hence our destiny will be linked with yours in the future.

I hope that the time is not distant when our friends upon the other side will see as we see; when our friends upon this side will see as we see; when liberty in its true sense will prevail in this country; when equal and exact justice shall be meted out to all; when the American people shall have forgotten their prejudices; when the lapse of ages shall have washed out forever the virus of slavery from our hearts; when the genius of liberty with all its glowing beauty shall extend its sway over all this nation; when there shall be no white, no black, no East, no West, no North, no South, but one common brotherhood and one united people, going forward forever in the progress of nations.

EQUESTRIAN STATUE OF GENERAL ZACHARY TAYLOR.

[Mr. MCCORMICK addressed the House in advocacy of the bill recently introduced by him to provide for the erection in the city of Washington of an equestrian statue of General Zachary Taylor, twelfth President of the United States. His remarks will appear in the Appendix.]

Mr. CLARK, of New Jersey. I move that the House now adjourn. The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at ten o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned.

IN SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 11, 1875.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. BYRON SUNDERLAND, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ROBERT TANSILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the request of the House of Representatives for the return of the bill (H. R. No. 3780) to relieve the political disabilities of Robert Tansill, of Prince William County, Virginia, that an omission in the engrossment might be supplied.

The request was ordered to be complied with by the Secretary returning the bill.

SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. As a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I beg leave to submit the views of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] and myself in regard to the admission of Pinchback as Senator from Louisiana.

The views were received and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. HAMLIN. I present the petition of Everett Staples and other persons, owners of the bark Alina, of Searsport, Maine, a vessel which was destroyed by the Shenandoah on the 29th of October, 1864, and for which they pray compensation. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN. I have also a petition signed by Josiah Wardwell, who represents that a minor son of his enlisted in the Navy against his consent and against his efforts to obtain his release; that he died in the service, in consequence of which he was deprived of his services. He therefore asks that Congress remunerate him for the loss he sustained. I move the reference of this petition to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMLIN presented a memorial of James S. Collins, of Hancock County, Maine, praying to be allowed a pension for services rendered to the United States in the war of 1812; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BOUTWELL presented a petition of Richard Hurd and many other citizens of Essex County, Massachusetts, praying for the equalization of soldiers' bounties; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Charles J. Brockway, of Newburyport, Massachusetts, praying indemnification for spoiliations committed by the French prior to the year 1801; which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SCOTT. I present the petition of a large number of importers and dealers in tea and coffee in the city of Philadelphia. They claim that the agitation of the question of the restoration of the duties on tea and coffee is very seriously interfering with the legitimate and natural trade of the country, and pray that the subject may be indefinitely postponed in Congress. They further state that the reimposition of these duties would benefit no home industry, but simply aid the speculators who have lately endeavored to control the market and who now so urgently advocate the measure from self-interest and to save the heavy losses they must otherwise inevitably suffer. I move that this memorial be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SCOTT presented memorials of citizens of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, of Walker township, Huntingdon County, Pennsylvania, of Ebensburg, Pennsylvania, and of Armstrong County, Pennsylvania, remonstrating against the restoration of duties on tea and coffee or any revival of internal-revenue taxes and praying for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of the duties upon certain foreign goods made by the act of 1872; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. SHERMAN presented two memorials of citizens of Ohio, remonstrating against the restoration of duties on tea and coffee or any revival of internal-revenue taxes and praying for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of the duties upon certain foreign goods made by the act of 1872; which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Leonard Zent, late of Company K, One hundred and twenty-third Regiment of Ohio Volunteers, praying to be allowed arrears of pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DENNIS presented the memorial of Benjamin P. Simcoe, Samuel Sturgeon, William H. Simcoe, and 88 others, of Northeast, Maryland, remonstrating against the restoration of the duties on tea and coffee; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. CLAYTON presented the petition of P. P. Pitchlynn, delegate of the Choctaw Indians, together with a memorial of the council of said Indians, asking payment of the award made to the Choctaw Nation March 9, 1859; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WRIGHT. I present the remonstrance of Mark Dodge and many other citizens of Clay County, Iowa, against the restoration of the duties on tea and coffee or any revival of internal taxes, because, as they allege, such action would make living more expensive and involve the country in distress; and they pray also for the repeal of the 10 per cent. reduction of duties upon foreign goods made by the act of 1872, which they allege has been alike injurious to the people and the public Treasury. I move its reference to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ALCORN presented the petition of Walter S. Campbell, of Pike County, Mississippi, praying payment of certain rents and costs of repairs on his property in New Orleans occupied by the Government during the war, or that his claim for the same be referred to the Court of Claims; which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CRAGIN, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 459) authorizing the President of the United States to purchase a site for a coaling station, navy depot, and other governmental uses at Foot Point, Port Royal, Beaufort County, South Carolina, and making an appropriation for said purchase, reported adversely thereon; and it was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CHANDLER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred a resolution of the Legislature of Oregon, asking that the taking of salmon in the Columbia River in traps, nets, seines, and other contrivances, with meshes less than four inches, be prohibited, to submit a report thereon, prepared by Professor Baird; which I move be printed, and the committee discharged from the further consideration of the subject.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 3706) granting a pension to Margaret H. Pittenger, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1060) granting a pension to Margaret E. Johnson, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was recommitted the bill (H. R. No. 3687) granting a pension to Victoria L. Brewster, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 2119) for the relief of Elizabeth McCluney, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PRATT, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1073) for the relief of John M. Dorsey and William Sheppard, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following petitions, asked to be discharged from their further consideration; which was agreed to:

The petition of William Koyal, an invalid pensioner, praying to be rated in the second class;

The petition of A. T. McReynolds, of Michigan, praying to be paid a pension heretofore granted him for services during the Mexican war for the time which he served in the late war, and of which he was deprived by reason of his appointment as a colonel of United States cavalry volunteers;

The petition of Henry Cramp and William Williamston, praying to be allowed a pension for services rendered the United States in the Yellowstone expedition in 1824 and 1825;

The petition of sundry citizens of Erie County, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the House bill giving pensions to all the soldiers of the war of 1812; and

The petition of Joseph H. Kavanagh, an invalid pensioner, praying to be rated in the second class.

Mr. PRATT. I am also instructed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of James Calloway, a citizen of Sullivan County, Indiana, praying to be allowed a pension on account of services rendered the Government in the Indian war of 1811, to ask to be discharged from the further consideration of the petition, on the ground that they have incorporated in the bill reported a few days ago a provision for all the surviving soldiers of the Indian war of 1811 and the war with England of 1812, and the widows of such as died or were married previous to the conclusion of the treaty of peace with Great Britain.

The committee was discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. BOGY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 1116) for the relief of John S. Friend, reported adversely thereon; and it was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. BOGY. I move that in this case permission be given to withdraw the papers on file, so that they may go to the committee of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 78) granting a pension to Salem P. Rose, of North Adams, Massachusetts, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. No. 60) granting a pension to Josiah Brinard, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was ordered to be printed, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. OGLESBY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was recommended the bill (H. R. No. 1644) granting a pension to Hannah E. Currie, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon; which was ordered to be printed.

Mr. GOLDTHWAITE, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. No. 831) for the relief of D. R. Haggard, of Kentucky, reported it with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. MCCREERY asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1286) authorizing the Secretary of War to detail a medical officer of the Army to investigate and report upon the existence and spread of cholera in Mexico and near the frontier of Texas; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CRAGIN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1287) relative to Benjamin F. Garvin and Henry H. Stewart, chief engineers in the Navy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. FENTON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1288) for the relief of John Charles Beales and Anita Eseter, citizens of the United States, and residents of the city of New York; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Private Land Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEVENSON asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1289) to amend chapter 7 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning actions and suits of foreclosure of mortgages in certain cases; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN (by request) asked, and by unanimous consent obtained, leave to introduce a bill (S. No. 1290) to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Asia; which was read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

INTERNATIONAL PENITENTIARY CONGRESS AT ROME.

Mr. CAMERON. I ask the Senate to take up for consideration the House joint resolution authorizing the President to appoint a commissioner to attend the international penitentiary congress at Rome, which was called up a few days ago and objected to by the Senator from California, [Mr. SARGENT.] He authorizes me to say that he withdraws the objection; and therefore I move that the joint resolution be taken up now.

Mr. BOREMAN. The Committee on Territories, I believe, are entitled to an hour this morning after the morning business is through.

Mr. CAMERON. This will take but a moment.

Mr. BOREMAN. If this matter provokes no discussion and occupies no time, I shall not object to its consideration. It is not morning business, however.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

The motion was agreed to; and the joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) authorizing the President to appoint a commissioner to attend the international penitentiary congress at Rome was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARKANSAS BOUNDARY LINE.

Mr. CLAYTON. I ask the Senate to take up the bill (S. No. 679) to establish the boundary line between the State of Arkansas and the Indian country. The Senator from California who objected to it the other day [Mr. SARGENT] has now examined the matter and has no further objection to the bill. I think it will lead to no discussion.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I understand that the Senator from Arkansas states that the Government will not be called upon to refund money for patents issued covering disputed ground in the Indian Territory. In other words, the Government has issued patents on the original line which has been changed by the subsequent survey. Now—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest to the Senator that the question now is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 679) to establish the boundary line between the State of Arkansas and the Indian country.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The question I ask is whether there is any appropriation to the present holders of patents involved in this bill?

Mr. CLAYTON. Not at all.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I remember the question was before the Committee on Public Lands and that point was involved. There seemed to be a call for money from the Treasury to refund for patents already issued.

Mr. CLAYTON. There is nothing of that kind in this bill. It merely calls for the establishment of the correct line.

Mr. SPRAGUE. No money at all?

Mr. CLAYTON. None whatever.

Mr. INGALLS. This bill was reported from the Committee on Indian Affairs and not from the Committee on Public Lands. I will state to the Senator from Rhode Island that it involves no appropriation whatever; on the contrary it is a bill that, if passed, will relieve the Government from demands that may possibly be made upon it if the lines continue as they are at present.

Mr. SPRAGUE. The question was before the Committee on Public Lands previously, and those considerations weighed with them at that time.

Mr. CLAYTON. It is not the same bill.

Mr. SPRAGUE. Very well.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COURTS IN TEXAS.

Mr. FLANAGAN. Senate bill No. 736 was passed by the Senate some two or three weeks since and a motion entered for its reconsideration. I ask that that motion be taken up and disposed of.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Texas moves to take up the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. No. 736) to change the boundaries of the eastern and western judicial districts of the State of Texas, and to fix the times and places of holding courts in the same.

Mr. WRIGHT. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Texas that I believe this motion was made by his colleague. If so, he perhaps has not observed that his colleague is not in his seat.

Mr. FLANAGAN. I did not know that he was absent; but nevertheless there is very little time and I have been waiting two weeks for him to call it up, but he has not done so and I must try to act. It is my duty to do so.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have nothing to say about it except the fact that the Senator's colleague who made the motion is absent.

Mr. MERRIMON. I know that this matter is controverted and I trust it will not be taken up now, especially as the other Senator from Texas is not in his seat. I object to its consideration if it is in order to do so.

Mr. BOREMAN. It being objected to, I suppose it cannot be proceeded with. The Committee on Territories, I believe, are entitled to this morning.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Committee on Territories are entitled to what remains of the morning hour.

PEABODY SCHOOL IN SAINT AUGUSTINE, FLORIDA.

Mr. HOWE. Will the Senator indulge me a moment? Yesterday I entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill (S. No. 782) to grant a site for the Peabody school in Saint Augustine, Florida. I would like to have that vote reconsidered this morning and let the bill stand upon the Calendar; I will not ask any further action upon it now.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I object.

Mr. HOWE. Does an objection defeat that motion?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate has adopted an order giving the portion of the morning hour remaining after the transaction of the morning business to the different committees in their order, and the Committee on Territories is entitled to the remainder of the morning hour to-day, and the Chair understands that objection is made to considering other business. The Senator can move to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of the motion he has indicated.

Mr. HOWE. That is what I wish to know. I take it, under that interpretation of the rule, the Senator from Rhode Island will withdraw his objection.

Mr. SPRAGUE. No, sir; I adhere to the objection.

Mr. HOWE. Then I move to postpone all prior orders and proceed to the consideration of that motion.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I call for the regular order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion to postpone.

Mr. BOREMAN. I do not know whether this motion will lead to any extended discussion or not; but this is the day assigned to the Committee on Territories and there is other business behind, and it seems to me that it is well to proceed according to the order which the Senate has heretofore made. The order is peremptory, unless of course the Senate votes otherwise. If the Senate votes to postpone the order, I shall have to submit; but I inquire of the Chair—

Mr. SPRAGUE. A majority cannot postpone a rule. This rule is already established.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest to the Senator from Rhode Island that it is not a rule but an understanding of the Senate, on which the Senate for several days have acted. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to postpone the present and all prior orders, and consider the motion to reconsider Senate bill No. 782.

Mr. INGALLS. Has not the rule granting each committee a portion of the time after the transaction of the morning business been adopted as one of the standing rules of the Senate? The Chair will pardon me; but it appears to me that if that is the case the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin would require an amendment of the rules, which can only be made on one day's notice in writing. Therefore his motion is clearly not in order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin is in order, and that this was an arrangement for the business of the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask for the reading of the rule.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the order referred to.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

Ordered, That during the remainder of this session, after the call for resolutions shall have passed, business on the Calendar shall, during the morning hour, be called for by committees in the order in which they stand in the list of committees, and so from day to day; but no committee shall have more than one day in succession.

Mr. INGALLS. I now call for the reading of the first paragraph of Rule 53.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The rule will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

53. No motion to suspend, modify, or amend the rules, or any thereof, shall be in order, except on one day's notice in writing, specifying the rule to be suspended, modified, or amended, and the purpose thereof. But any rule may be suspended by unanimous consent, except the seventeenth rule, which shall never be suspended.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair understands that this is an order of the Senate for this session and not a permanent rule of the body, and that the Senate can set it aside by a vote. The Chair may be mistaken, but that is his understanding.

Mr. BOREMAN. I understand, then, that the Chair decides that a majority of the Senate may postpone business, as this is not a standing rule, but a mere order.

Mr. HOWE. I did not mean to occupy one-tenth part of this time. I simply wanted that vote reconsidered and the bill placed on the Calendar; but it is occupying so much time that I withdraw the motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion is withdrawn. The Committee on Territories is entitled to the remainder of the morning hour.

Mr. BOREMAN. I ask that the Committee on Territories may have one hour, which has been accorded, I believe, to the committees generally.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from West Virginia moves that the Committee on Territories be allowed one hour from this time.

The motion was agreed to.

REAPPORTIONMENT OF IDAHO TERRITORY.

Mr. BOREMAN. The first bill I ask action upon is the bill (H. R. No. 3749) to provide for the reapportionment of the Legislative Assembly of Idaho Territory. The action contemplated by this bill has been taken by the Legislative Assembly, and therefore there is no necessity for passing it. I move therefore that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

SEATTLE AND WALLA WALLA RAILROAD.

Mr. BOREMAN. The next bill is Senate bill No. 591. I ask for action on it.

The bill (S. No. 591) granting the right of way to the Seattle and Walla Walla Railroad and Transportation Company, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The Committee on Territories proposed to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the county commissioners of the counties of King, Yakima, and Walla Walla, and the city council of the cities of Seattle and Walla Walla, in said Territory, be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered severally to contract with the Seattle and Walla Walla Railroad and Transportation Company, or its assigns, to construct and equip a railroad from the city of Seattle, in King County, to the city of Walla Walla, in Walla Walla County, and to issue the bonds of their said counties and cities respectively in aid thereof, not exceeding in amount the sum of $250,000 in any one county, and $100,000 in any one city, and to designate the time and manner of payment of the principal and interest of said bonds.

SEC. 2. That when the county commissioners and city council, or any one of said boards, acting for its own county or city, shall have agreed upon the terms for the construction of the said railroad with the Seattle and Walla Walla Railroad and Transportation Company, or its assigns, each board, acting for its own county or city, shall call a special election at such times as it may designate, by causing three notices of such election, which said notices shall contain the terms of the proposed contract, to be posted for twenty days in each election precinct of said counties and cities, at which the proposed contract shall be submitted to the legal voters of said counties and cities. Such election shall be held at the same places and in the same manner, and the returns thereof made by and filed with the same officers, as is required in case of election for county officers under the laws of said Territory. And if two-thirds of said votes cast at said election shall be in favor of the said contract, and such two-thirds shall be equal in numbers to a majority of the votes cast in said counties or cities at the then next preceding election for Delegate in the Congress of the United States, then the said county commissioners and city council, or any one of said boards, acting for its county or city, shall, complete the said agreement, and issue the bonds provided for by this act as fast as the said railroad is completed, in amounts bearing the same proportion to the whole amount of bonds to be issued in the county that the completed road in said county bears to the entire length of the proposed road in said county, and not otherwise; and which bonds shall bear interest not exceeding 10 per cent. per annum; and the principal thereof shall not exceed 7 per cent. of the value of the taxable property of the county or city issuing the same, as legally assessed for territorial taxation, and not in any event to exceed $250,000 in any one county, or $100,000 in either of said cities, notwithstanding the sums may be less than 7 per cent. of such taxable valuation; and any such bonds in excess of 7 per cent. of the territorial taxable valuation of the property of said counties and cities, or in excess of $250,000 in any one of said counties, and $100,000 in any one city as aforesaid, in any event, shall be absolutely void, and all persons interested are required to take notice thereof: Provided, That the said railroad company, or its assigns, shall execute and deliver to the said counties and cities, or such of them as may aid in construction of said road, a good and sufficient bond, to be approved by the county commissioners and city councils, binding themselves, their successors, and assigns, to operate and maintain the said road for the term of twenty-five years, in an amount equal to the aid furnished said road by said counties and cities respectively.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, that bill, if I have caught its purport aright, proposes to authorize in a special case what I think the Committee on Railroads concluded ought not to be permitted in any case in the Territories. It authorizes, if I have been correct in my apprehension of the bill as the Clerk has been reading it, the county commissioners and the authorities of towns and cities in the Territory of Washington to issue bonds of the counties and of the municipal corporations for the purpose of aiding in the construction of this railroad. That is a principle against which amendments have been introduced in very many of the constitutions of the older States, expressly prohibiting the aid of counties and municipal corporations from being granted in this form for the construction of railroads. Especially is it considered objectionable where a large portion of the community vote against such aid or such subsidy, upon the ground that it is taxing them for improvements against their consent.

I call the attention of the Senate to the bill and to the fact that the same subject was to some extent considered in the Committee on Railroads, and was incorporated in the general bill which passed the Senate during the last session. The principle itself is one upon which there is very considerable difference; and unless there be something in the special circumstances of this case which can be explained by the chairman of the Committee on Territories to justify it, the bill ought not to be passed without full and ample consideration.

Mr. BOREMAN. Mr. President the matters stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania were all submitted to the Committee on Territories and duly considered. The situation of Washington Territory, and particularly that portion of it which is intended to be penetrated by this railroad, is very peculiar, its necessities are very great, and the committee deemed it proper and advisable to report in favor of the passage of this bill.

The road is to run from Budd's Inlet on Puget Sound, crossing the mountains, over two hundred miles to Walla Walla, passing through three counties with a population of twenty-odd thousand, who have, except those near the sound, no outlet whatever. A portion of this route for the first thirty or forty or probably fifty miles has fine coal and other minerals which would be of great advantage if they were accessible. The interior of the country beyond the mountains, in Walla Walla County and that region of country, is very fertile, and produces largely of grain and all the cereals and stock, as may be seen by reading the elaborate report which was made by the committee; but they cannot get their produce to market without very heavy expense. It costs more to get a bushel of wheat or any other commodity of that sort to market in that region of country than it is worth, or nearly as much as it is worth. Indeed, it will not bear transportation. It is some distance from the Columbia River.

These people ask that they may be permitted to build this railroad by taxation upon themselves. The Legislative Assembly, as the committee is advised, have indorsed this application. The Delegate who is here representing their interests has pressed the matter, and says that in doing so he represents almost the unanimous sentiment of these people. And now the question is one simply of policy on the one side, against the expression of the wishes of these people on the other. I do not think the question of policy in this particular case should prevail against the unanimous wish of those who desire this act. It will certainly be of advantage. The taxation, it will be seen, is limited in each county and each city, not only in amount, but it is limited to a certain percentage of the taxable value of their property as ascertained for territorial taxes. Further more, it is provided that the question shall be submitted to the voters of each county and city after full notice is given, that the vote in favor of the appropriation and of the terms of the contract shall be two-thirds of the actual vote cast, which two-thirds shall be a majority of the vote which was cast at the preceding election for Delegate for the Territory. I do not think that a bill could be guarded more carefully than this one in its provisions.

I will say further, that a bill of precisely the terms of this one was passed by Congress at the last session for a short road in this Territory through the county of Thurston, about fifteen miles. That bill provided that the county of Thurston might tax itself to the amount of $100,000. I am assured by the Delegate that they have gone on under that act and made a contract and have assessed on themselves $75,000, and the road is in process of completion, and the people are greatly pleased with it. In that one instance it has proved a success without any objection.

We here have the full expression of the wishes of this people and of their Legislative Assembly, and I cannot see any objection to it. I do not know that I myself should be in favor of a general law allowing subsidies, but I cannot see any reason for objecting to this particular bill, guarded as it is, introduced at the solicitation and request of these people. As I have said, they are cut off from all communication with the outside world except by the ordinary roads across the mountains, and we are denying to them access to the outside world if we do not allow them the privileges herein granted.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think one of the evils that this country is laboring under now is that railroads have been pushed forward beyond the requirements of the country, and I do not think that they need stimulating by Congress. If the mines and the wealth of this country call for a railroad, private capital will build it. The truth is that in all the States where this system has been adopted the people are groaning under the burden of these railroad bonds and assessments. I think it would be a bad example for the Congress to set to the States to authorize the local taxation of municipalities and counties for the purpose of constructing railroads.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I should like to ask my honorable friend who has charge of this bill how much each of these counties is authorized to loan its credit for?

Mr. BOREMAN. It is provided in the bill that it shall not exceed $200,000 for any one county, nor shall it exceed 7 per cent. of the taxable value of the property of the county as assessed for territorial taxation, and that any excess over that shall be absolutely void, of which all persons are required to take notice by the terms of the act.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Has the Senator the valuation of any of these counties?

Mr. BOREMAN. Yes; here is a printed report made by the committee of the facts as furnished by the Delegate from the Territory, and his statement I take to be true.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. What appears to be the valuation of any one of these counties?

Mr. BOREMAN. The three counties, according to the most recent statistics, have property to the value of $9,700,000, or an average of over three millions of assessable property to each county.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I quite agree with the Senator from New Jersey that a policy of this kind is very pernicious. I doubt extremely whether the Congress of the United States should authorize these new communities to mortgage their property in advance of population for such a purpose. I can hardly conceive of anything more pernicious than such a policy.

Mr. WRIGHT. I would be very glad to ask the chairman of the committee who has this bill in charge one or two questions as bearing, I think, upon this bill. I do not know that he has stated the aggregate population of these three counties or the population of each county.

Mr. BOREMAN. I stated the aggregate population, as represented to the committee by what they believe to be reliable authority, exceeded twenty thousand.

Mr. WRIGHT. Now, I should be very glad to know what is the assessed value of the property in these three counties?

Mr. BOREMAN. I have just stated that the three counties possess property of the assessable value, according to the most recent statistics, of $9,700,000, or an average of over three millions of assessable property to each county.

Mr. WRIGHT. How many cities are there in the three counties which would be affected?

Mr. BOREMAN. Two, I believe.

Mr. WRIGHT. Two; and it is proposed by this bill to allow these three counties to vote bonds to the amount of $950,000—$750,000 for the counties, or $250,000 to each county and $100,000 to each city.

Mr. BOREMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WRIGHT. Nine hundred and fifty thousand dollars debt is to be imposed on a population of twenty thousand?

Mr. BOREMAN. That is the maximum. The cities of Seattle and Walla Walla are the termini of the road.

Mr. WRIGHT. Suppose the population is twenty thousand and the assessable property about nine or ten millions, it is proposed that these people may issue bonds and be taxed for the payment of these bonds to the amount of a million of money, or very nearly a million of money, and with interest on that $950,000 at 10 per cent.

Mr. BOREMAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will state that the bill provides on its face that the subscription shall not exceed 7 per cent. of the taxable valuation of the property at the last preceding assessment for territorial purposes, notwithstanding this may not reach the maximum sum prescribed, and everybody interested shall take notice.

Mr. WRIGHT. It is true they may issue bonds to the amount of 7 per cent. on their taxable property, and if $250,000 will not exceed that 7 per cent. each county can go to $250,000; and thus it occurs, as I understand, that in a population—assuming it to be twenty thousand where you perhaps have about four thousand voters and taxpayers—they are allowed under this bill to provide for the issuing of bonds to the amount of a million of money. I do not think that this Senate could do anything that would be more unjust, that would tend more to impair the prosperity of these three counties, and place them back as compared with other counties in that Territory or in the State of Oregon, or in any place along the Pacific Coast, than to pass this bill.

For myself, all of my experience and all of my observation shows that wherever this has been attempted, whether in State or Territory, the people have uniformly regretted it; and these people, now so anxious for a railroad, in less than five years, if the railroad were given to them and they issue these bonds, would resist the collection of the bonds with the same earnestness and the same zeal and the same persistency that they can possibly now ask for leave to issue the bonds. They might get the railroad in the mean time, but they have this debt, which would be infinitely worse to them than the benefit of all the possible advantages from the railroad. For myself, I do not believe that a majority or any number of persons in any county in this Union for a purpose such as this has the power or can be given the power to tax the minority to build such roads. I therefore would vote against this proposition on principle, and I would vote against it because I believe sincerely that it would be the most unfortunate thing for these people that they could have.

Mr. KELLY. Mr. President, this Territory, like all other Territories, has no representative in the Senate, and therefore its people rely on their Delegate to present their case in this body as well as at the other end of the Capitol. The Delegate from the Territory of Washington has appealed to Senators here to aid and assist in the construction of this road by the passage of this bill. I may say that I have presented numerous petitions from the inhabitants of these three counties asking for the construction of this road, and they say (which is very true) that they have despaired of obtaining any assistance from the United States; that Congress will not appropriate any money for this purpose; that those residing at Walla Walla are isolated, disconnected with all the sea-board; that they have no communication except by the ordinary roads; and therefore they say that they are willing to suffer taxation, that their property may be taxed not to exceed 7 per cent. of the assessed value for the purpose of enhancing the value of it. They know that it is comparatively worthless without some railway. They know, too, that they can only get such a road by their own exertions, by their own money, by their own energy.

At the last session of Congress, as has been stated, the inhabitants of Thurston County asked that they might vote under a bill similar to this to assess taxes upon their own property for the construction of a short railroad. Congress passed that act. The citizens of that county have gone on to construct a road to connect with the Northern Pacific Road that extends from the Columbia River to Puget Sound, and they are pleased with the privilege given to them for the purpose of connecting themselves with this railway. They believe it will enhance their property greatly, and I have no doubt it will; and I have no doubt that if these people have this privilege extended to them, their property will increase greatly in value and their population will double in a short time. Unless they can get some assistance of this kind, as a matter of course the population will not increase, and the wealth may even diminish instead of being increased.

It is for these reasons that the people ask this privilege, if it may be so called; and inasmuch as they do not expect assistance from the United States, it is simply a privilege that we accord to them to tax themselves. If two-thirds of the voters of each of these counties are willing to impose this burden upon themselves, I think they ought to be allowed to do it. As a general principle, I must confess that I am not in favor of the policy of municipal subscriptions to railroad companies, but in this instance, as the people have repeatedly asked for this, and are willing that this burden should be imposed on them, I think they should have the privilege, and especially, as I said before, when they can have no hope of assistance from Congress or the outside world. They are trying to help themselves; they are trying to build their own roads; and I think we ought to allow them to do it.

Mr. BOGY. I cannot see any objection to the bill. The necessity of it grows out of the fact that the organic law of Washington is different from the organic law of any other Territory. The power of local legislation has always been conferred upon the Legislatures of the Territories except in this case of Washington. There the organic law restrains and prevents the Legislature from doing that which is asked to be done by this bill. The question presented to us is simply whether we will authorize the local government of Washington, either in the territorial Legislature or in these counties, to do that which they themselves think is for their own interest. That is the whole amount of it. As to the importance of this railroad there can be no doubt. Whether the bonds be good or not good is not a question for us to decide. The only question presented to the Senate is simply one of local government. Now, I think the people of Washington Territory are the best judges of that matter. They can decide the question for themselves; and if the organic law of that Territory was like the organic law of every other Territory which has ever been created, the necessity of coming here would not exist; but as they are restrained by that organic law, this permission must be obtained from the Congress of the United States. The bill, I think, is well guarded, well protected, and refers the question to them and to them alone, and it is a matter of which they are competent to decide, much more so than we possibly can be. I hope the bill will pass.

The report of the committee says:

They ask nothing from the Government except to be placed upon an equal footing with the other Territories of the United States. The sixth section of the organic act of Washington Territory is different from that of any other Territory, and has been construed as prohibiting the territorial Legislature from authorizing the counties to aid in the construction of railroads.

This bill asks for no subsidy from the Federal Government, either of lands, bonds, or money, but simply for the privilege that the counties therein named may issue bonds to aid in construction of a greatly needed improvement in their own midst.

It seems to me that the bill ought to pass, and let the people decide that question for themselves.

Mr. MITCHELL. I only desire to say a word before the amendment is voted upon. I exceedingly regret that any Senator on this floor should feel constrained from any sense of duty to interpose objection to this bill. It simply enables these political communities in Washington Territory, three counties and two cities, to do that which every other political community of like character in every other Territory of the United States has a right to do in the absence of any legislation. In all the other Territories of the United States to-day, any county in its corporate capacity, any city in its corporate capacity, has the right to legislate in this way; but in the organic law of Washington Territory these political communities are prohibited from doing it. At the last session of Congress a bill was passed similar in all respects to the bill now pending. It was an act to authorize the county commissioners of Thurston County, in Washington Territory, to issue bonds for the purpose of constructing a railroad from Budd's Inlet, Puget Sound, to intersect the Northern Pacific Railroad at or near Tenino.

It has been objected by the honorable Senator from Iowa that the tax which may be imposed under the provisions of this bill by a vote of two-thirds of the legal voters in these counties or two-thirds of the legal voters in these cities would be one that would be enormous considering the population and the capital there. Now, let me call the attention of the honorable Senator from Iowa to one fact, of which perhaps he is not aware. There appears to be an impression here that there are but very few people in Washington Territory (which is the fact to a certain extent) and that there are very few productions there. Let me assure the Senator from Iowa that in the one county of Walla Walla, named in this bill, there is a surplus of wheat raised to the amount of one million bushels—one million surplus in this one county. It is one of the greatest wheat-growing counties in the United States to-day.

What does it cost to transport a bushel of that wheat from the county of Walla Walla to San Francisco compared with the cost of transporting a bushel of wheat from Chicago, for instance, to Liverpool by way of New York? Almost if not quite double the amount. It costs to-day eighty-five cents per bushel to transport a bushel of wheat from Walla Walla County, in Washington Territory, to San Francisco. There, as I have said, they have raised during the last year a surplus of one million bushels of wheat. You have across at Seattle, one of the termini of this road, one of the finest harbors in the world. From that point it would cost but a mere trifle, as we all know, in a sailing-ship, to transport a bushel of wheat to San Francisco. Wheat to-day is selling at Walla Walla at forty cents a bushel, while at the other end of this proposed road, at the harbor of Seattle, on Puget Sound, it is selling at, I think, $1.50 a bushel. This may be said of all the counties through which this road runs, simply with reference to this one article of consumption and of shipment, wheat; but the road will run through the finest coal-fields and the finest timber lands in the whole country.

What does the bill propose to do? It is not asking anything from the United States Government; it is not asking any subsidy; it is not asking any money; it is simply asking that the people of these counties and of these cities may be permitted, not by a majority vote but by a two-thirds vote, to do what? To aid in the construction of this narrow-gauge railroad from Walla Walla to Puget Sound to the extent of issuing their bonds to an amount not exceeding 7 per cent. of their taxable property, to an amount not exceeding $250,000 for each county and $100,000 for each city. That is all there is of it. As I said, I do exceedingly regret that any Senator here feels compelled from any sense of duty to interpose any objection to this bill, and I hope it will not be pressed. I hope these political communities that are without railroad communication, when they ask nothing but a mere permission to do for themselves under the instruction of a two-thirds vote of their own people what they are not permitted to do now, will be allowed to do this. I do not wish to detain the Senate, but I hope the amendment proposed by the committee will be adopted and the bill passed.

Mr. PRATT. Before the Senator from Oregon takes his seat, I should be glad for my own information and to guide my vote to ask him two or three questions. In the first place, does this bill make any provision whatever that the counties and municipalities who aid this railroad company to the extent of perhaps a million dollars under this bill shall ever be reimbursed in any mode by becoming stockholders in the company or otherwise?

Mr. MITCHELL. I think not, and I think a provision of that kind would be improper and wrong.

Mr. PRATT. There is another provision in the bill on which I desire information, and that is this—

Mr. BOREMAN. If the Senator will allow me, I will say that the company is required to give bond and security that the road shall be completed and run for twenty-five years.

Mr. PRATT. I was just about making an inquiry upon that very point. I understand that these bonds are to be authorized by a vote of two-thirds; they are to be delivered then absolutely to the company, and those who are compelled to pay taxes to meet the interest and principal of these bonds have for their security that the road will be built and will be maintained for the period of twenty-five years simply the bond of this company.

Mr. MITCHELL. I beg pardon. These bonds are only to be issued as the road is built and only to be issued in amounts in ratable proportion to the whole length of road as a portion is completed. Is not that the fact?

Mr. BOREMAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. PRATT. Then what kind of security is provided for in this bill that the road will be maintained and operated?

Mr. BOREMAN. If the Senator will look at the last section he will see that it is provided that the company shall give a bond and security that the road will be operated for twenty-five years, in a penalty equal to the amount of the subscription of each county.

Mr. PRATT. One question more and I am done—

Mr. MITCHELL. I will read on that point for the benefit of the Senator from Indiana:

That the said railroad company, or its assigns, shall execute and deliver to the said counties and cities, or such of them as may aid in construction of said road, a good and sufficient bond, to be approved by the county commissioners and city councils, binding themselves, their successors, and assigns, to operate and maintain the said road for the term of twenty-five years, in an amount equal to the aid furnished said road by said counties and cities, respectively.

Now remember that they have the additional security that the bonds shall only be issued as the road is built.

Mr. PRATT. Now one point more, and that is this: Suppose that the third in the cities who refuse to vote this aid own two-thirds of the property in the cities, then I understand the principle is that the two-thirds vote shall authorize the issue of these bonds notwithstanding the voters may not be property-holders and may not be able to contribute the tax to pay interest or principal. Am I right in that?

Mr. MITCHELL. Unquestionably a two-thirds vote here is intended to bind the whole. There is no question about that.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I called attention to this bill not because of any hostility to the bill itself or to the region which it is proposed to improve, but upon the broad general principle which I stated. Now, we are asked to depart from that general principle upon the ground that there is a prohibition in Washington Territory against granting this aid. I will turn to that prohibition and show by it that the settled opinion of Congress was that even the Territory itself ought not to be permitted to do this thing. I read from section 1924 of the Revised Statutes:

In addition to the restriction upon the legislative power of the Territories contained in the preceding chapter, the Legislative Assembly of Washington shall have no power to incorporate a bank or any institution with banking powers, or to borrow money in the name of the Territory, or to pledge the faith of the people of the same for any loan whatever, directly or indirectly.

In addition to that, the act of 1867, now section 1889 of the Revised Statutes, expressly prohibits the Territories from granting any special charter of incorporation to any other than manufacturing or industrial corporations, so that they cannot even incorporate this railroad company without special authority from Congress. We are asked, then, in this act to depart from the general principle laid down in the organic law of Washington Territory and in the general law applicable to all the Territories.

Our experience in Pennsylvania, where immense subscriptions were made, was of such a character that it resulted in a prohibition in the fundamental law of the State prohibiting municipalities from subscribing stock in corporations of this kind; and I made the objection upon the broad general principle which is brought out by the illustration of the Senator from Indiana, that those who own no portion of the taxable property in a State or Territory may impose this taxation upon those who do against their consent.

Mr. BOREMAN. Mr. President, in answer to what has been stated by the Senator from Pennsylvania I will say that we come here because the organic act of the Territory of Washington does not allow these subscriptions. We are here asking Congress to give that permission because of that fact. What he has read from the Revised Statutes is simply a transcription from the original organic act. But since the revision of the statutes I would remind Senators that the Congress of the United States, a few days before the adjournment of the last session, granted to one county of this Territory a permission precisely like this. It will be found on page 48 of the acts of the last session, authorizing the county of Thurston to make a subscription to the amount of $200,000 for a precisely similar purpose.

This railroad company that is named in the bill now under consideration was incorporated before this revision of the statutes, under a law of the Territory in which the road is proposed to be made; it was an existing corporation, and of course it was not destroyed by the revision of the statutes; and yet they cannot get this aid without the permission of Congress.

I suppose if this bill had some money in it it might be a much easier matter to get it through Congress; but here are people who are away from all the conveniences of civilization, almost cut off from transportation, not able to get their products to market, but yet located in a rich country; and they propose for themselves to construct an internal improvement; and they are not to be allowed to do it! It is not setting a precedent. That precedent has already been set in the face of the Revised Statutes. This is a special case; it depends upon special merit; and we put it here before the Senate and ask them to vote for it because of its exceptional character. The committee have almost unanimously, I believe with but one exception, thought that the bill ought to pass, and I trust the Senate will pass it and allow these people to have a railroad.

Mr. MITCHELL. One word in regard to a statement of the Senator from Pennsylvania. He says that the settled policy of the country is attempted to be shaken by this legislation. If that were so, I think it was to some extent unsettled at the last session, because a precisely similar act was passed then. The Senator read from section 1889 of the Revised Statutes of the United States for the purpose of showing that Congress provided that no such aid should be granted in any of the Territories by the political communities.

Mr. SCOTT. Or companies incorporated by them.

Mr. MITCHELL. The section the Senator read does not go to that extent. The section is this:

The Legislative Assemblies of the several Territories shall not grant private charters or special privileges, but they may, by general incorporation acts, permit persons to associate themselves together as bodies corporate for mining, manufacturing, and other industrial pursuits, or the construction or operation of railroads, wagon-roads, irrigating ditches, and the colonization and improvement of lands in connection therewith, or for colleges, seminaries, churches, libraries, or any benevolent, charitable, or scientific association.

I still state, as I stated when I first addressed the Senate, that the counties and the corporate cities of any Territory outside of Washington Territory have the right to-day under the laws of the United States to do the very thing that it is proposed these counties and cities may do under the provisions of this act; and the section read by the honorable Senator from Pennsylvania does not touch this question at all. That simply relates to the power of the territorial Legislature. I shall not detain the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I feel compelled to oppose this bill primarily because it is opposed to the organic law of the Territory; but I oppose it also for the further reason that, in my judgment, it is entirely hostile to the best interests of the people who live in that Territory. I am somewhat familiar with this system of loaning municipal credit to railroad corporations; I know the results of the system; and I can say that to-day the great burden under which the majority of the Western States are laboring, the great difficulties that they are compelled to contend with, result from the hasty and injudicious loaning of municipal credit by counties and towns for the construction of railroads. Throughout a majority of the Western States this system has been resorted to for the past fifteen or twenty years, and to-day I may say that at least nine-tenths of the corporations that have incurred this indebtedness are either in default in the payment of interest or are attempting to repudiate both principal and interest. When railroads become necessary they will be constructed; and I am entirely opposed to the principle involved in this bill, and I shall resist it in the interest, as I believe, of the people themselves.

I desire, however, to call the attention of the Senate to one other fact in connection with this pending measure. While the bonds are authorized and the rate of interest is fixed, there is no provision whatever made for the levy of a tax for the purpose of paying the bonds or of meeting the interest. I will also call the attention of the Senate to another very extraordinary provision, which is that in the second section, upon page 6, commencing in line 35, which reads as follows:

And any such bonds in excess of 7 per cent. of the territorial taxable valuation of the property of said counties and cities, or in excess of $250,000 in any one of said counties, and $100,000 in any one city as aforesaid, in any event—

Mark the language—shall be absolutely void, and all persons interested are required to take notice thereof.

How any lawyer could have consented to the insertion of a provision like that in a bill providing for the issue of bonds for the construction of railroads is past my comprehension. I trust that the bill will not pass, or if it is to pass that it will not pass with a provision like that in its terms.

Mr. BOGY. I am astonished at the debate which has taken place on this bill. It may be the opinion of Senators that it may be very improper or unwise for these counties to issue these bonds; but I view the question as one of principle, one of local self-government; and I say it is better to let these people judge of these facts for themselves. We have gone back to the old question of squatter sovereignty which was discussed in this body so many years ago with so much ability. I say the Territories have the right of legislation for themselves, and they are better qualified to legislate for themselves than we possibly can be. They are American citizens, as well informed as we are, and the only reason why they have not the entire power of legislation is because they are not sufficiently numerous. It is not that they are not intelligent; it is because they have not sufficient population to justify the formation of a State; but in point of intelligence they are as competent as the citizens of the States are. The question is one of local self-government. It is the old question of squatter sovereignty again; the same principle.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Territories.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of this measure.

Mr. BOREMAN. Let the amendment be adopted first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Territories.

The question being put, it was declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. BOREMAN. I ask for a division. This is a substitute, an amendment of the committee. Nobody ought to object to it.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 14, noes 19; no quorum voting.

Mr. BOREMAN. I call for the yeas and nays, and I wish to make a remark.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BOREMAN. I do not see why there is opposition to this amendment. The original bill contains all the provisions of the amendment and a great deal more. This is a substitute cutting off a good deal that the committee thought was objectionable in the original proposition. The count just made would seem to indicate that the Senate prefer the most objectionable provisions of the original bill against the substitute of the committee. It has been usual, I believe, where the question was upon the merits, to allow the substitute of the committee to be adopted and then to take a test vote upon the final passage of the bill or upon its engrossment. I do not object to that; but the committee do not desire the passage of the original bill. It contains a land grant, and the committee do not indorse that proposition. The committee do not wish to give the land of the Government for the construction of this or any other railroad. We left out that section and some other objectionable provisions, modifying it so as to make it more acceptable. The committee would like to have this substitute for the original bill adopted, and then we can have a test vote upon the final passage of the substitute.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The question being taken by yeas and nays, resulted—yeas 29, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Bayard, Boggy, Boreman, Cooper, Cragin, Davis, Dennis, Flanagan, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hamilton of Maryland, Hitchcock, Johnston, Kelly, Merrimon, Mitchell, Morton, Patterson, Pease, Ramsey, Robertson, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Stockton, Wadleigh, West, and Windom—29.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Boutwell, Cameron, Conkling, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Hager, Hamilton of Texas, Howe, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Pratt, Sargent, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stewart, Washburn, and Wright—25.

ABSENT—Messrs. Brownlow, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Conover, Dorsey, Ferry of Connecticut, Hamlin, Harvey, Ingalls, Jones, Lewis, Logan, McCreery, Norwood, Ransom, Thurman, and Tipton—18.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour allotted to the Committee on Territories having expired, the Chair will call up the unfinished business, which is the bill for the better government of the District of Columbia.

Mr. MITCHELL and Mr. BOREMAN. Let us vote upon the bill.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. If we can take a vote without any further debate, I shall have no objection.

Mr. INGALLS. I move, in line 16, section 2, on page 5 of the bill, to strike out the words "said votes cast at said election" and insert the words "the legal voters of said counties and cities;" so as to read:

And if two-thirds of the legal voters of said counties and cities shall be in favor of the said contract," &c.

This section provides the method in which the question shall be submitted to the people for their decision—

Mr. BOREMAN. If the Senator from Kansas will allow me, the committee will accept that amendment.

Mr. MITCHELL. That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I call for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 16, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Boggy, Boreman, Cameron, Cragin, Dennis, Flanagan, Goldthwaite, Hitchcock, Kelly, Mitchell, Morton, Patterson, Pease, Ramsey, Tipton, and Windom—16.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Boutwell, Conkling, Davis, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Michigan, Frelinghuysen, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Hamilton of Texas, Howe, Ingalls, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Oglesby, Pratt, Robertson, Sargent, Schurz, Scott, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Stewart, Stockton, Washburn, and Wright—32.

ABSENT—Messrs. Alcorn, Brownlow, Carpenter, Chandler, Clayton, Conover, Cooper, Dorsey, Ferry of Connecticut, Gilbert, Gordon, Hamlin, Harvey, Johnston, Jones, Lewis, Logan, Norwood, Ransom, Saulsbury, Stevenson, Thurman, Wadleigh, and West—24.

So the bill was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. No. 4529) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

HOMESTEAD ENTRIES ON RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. SPRAGUE. I ask for the printing of the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the bill (H. R. No. 1760) to secure homesteads to actual settlers on the public domain, and I ask Senators from the land States to give to the report and the matter proposed to be printed their consideration, with a view that when the bill is called up they will see from the remarks touching each section the whole drift and character of the measure. And I wish to observe now that at a convenient time, and that near, I shall ask the favor of the Senate to consider that bill.

The motion to print was agreed to.

ANGELICA HAMMOND.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. No. 1799) granting a pension to Angelica Hammond, which by some mistake was indefinitely postponed, when the committee unanimously reported in favor of its passage. I ask unanimous consent that the vote be reconsidered and the bill passed.

There being no objection, the vote indefinitely postponing the bill (H. R. No. 1799) granting a pension to Angelica Hammond was reconsidered, and the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides for placing on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Angelica Hammond, widow of William Z. Hammond, late a private in Company E, First Maryland Cavalry Volunteers.

Mr. PRATT. I inquire of the Senator from Iowa if there is a written report?

Mr. ALLISON. There was a written report, but by a mistake the bill was entered as indefinitely postponed.

Mr. INGALLS. Is there a printed report with the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) There is. Does the Senator call for the reading of the report?

Mr. INGALLS. No, sir.

The bill was reported to the Senate, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. MCPHERSON, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolution; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

The bill (H. R. No. 4681) in relation to a cemetery at York, Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. No. 3782) for the relief of Sewall B. Corbett; and

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 135) appointing managers of the national home for disabled volunteer soldiers.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution for the printing of ten thousand extra copies of the report of the Surgeon-General of the Army and the supervising surgeon of the marine-hospital service upon the cholera epidemic of 1873.

GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will now call up the unfinished business of yesterday, on which the Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] is entitled to the floor.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. No. 963) for the better government of the District of Columbia, the pending question being on the amendment of Mr. MORTON to strike out in section 3, commencing in line 3, the following words:

To be severally appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to be known as the board of commissioners of the District of Columbia; and the members first to be appointed shall be nominated and confirmed, respectively, to and for the terms following in the order of their appointment, namely:

And in lieu thereof to insert:

To be elected by the qualified voters of said District.

So as to make the section read:

There shall be at the head of said Department a board of commissioners, to consist of three members, to be elected by the qualified voters of said district, &c.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. President, the amendment pending is that of the Senator from Indiana, which asserts the principle that it is both constitutional and expedient to give to the people of this District the election of their local officers. Much that I shall say will be in support of this proposition, more especially of the power to thus legislate. I do not profess to understand the bill as reported by the select committee, in all its details. It has, I freely admit, some good features; and yet its main provisions, because of its bed-rock principle, I cannot but regard as essentially vicious. I had the honor to submit some days since an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the entire bill of the committee. That substitute has been printed and placed upon the tables of Senators. I am not here to maintain that it is in all respects what we should have, nor to insist that it does not need or may not require modification. That it may be understood, however, if I can have the attention of the Senate, as I do not propose to trouble the Senate on this subject hereafter, without having it read, I propose very briefly to refer to the provisions of this substitute, before coming to the question that I propose to discuss. And I feel the greater freedom in doing this and reciting the provisions of this amendment, because I am assured that we all feel the necessity of some legislation on this subject at this time. I am sure the members of the committee who reported the original bill desire, in a spirit of fairness and candor, to arrive at a just conclusion on this subject. I am sure I do not wish anything more or anything less. All I ask is that we shall not decide too hastily, nor yet violate principle or take a backward step.

As I have already indicated, I propose in the first place to present, as briefly as may be, the provisions of the amendment that I have submitted to the Senate.

The first section of the amendment consolidates the District into one municipality and provides for uniform laws as far as practicable for the whole District. At present there are four sets of local law operative in the District. There are the laws and ordinances of the former corporations of Washington, of Georgetown, and of the levy court, and the laws of the late Legislative Assembly. In addition to these are the old laws of Maryland, the common law, and the enactments of Congress.

The proposed change in this first section carries out the purpose of the act of 1871 to establish one body of the people instead of three separate bodies in the District. The desirability of bringing the whole of the small territorial area of the District under a uniform system of administration, and of extending the advantages of municipal convenience to the inhabitants residing beyond the original city boundary, cannot, it seems to me, be very well doubted.

Section 2 continues the present corporate character of the District, but limits its corporate powers exclusively to those of an ordinary municipality, to be exercised only in accordance with the laws of the United States governing the same. The relation thus recognized as existing between Congress and the District is parallel, so far as municipal affairs are concerned, to the relation between cities and towns in organized States and their respective State Legislatures. The body of superior and constitutional power leaves to the local community the management of its local affairs, and the superior authority gives to such community for that purpose a corporate existence. In this there is nothing complicated, and little or nothing of the complex machinery of the original bill.

The third section provides for the conduct of such local and municipal affairs in the usual American form of a mayor and council. It also provides expressly that such conduct shall be under the supervision and subject to the general legislative powers of Congress. The supreme authority of Congress to interfere at any time, in its own pleasure, and for any purpose, is distinctly maintained. Congress parts with no portion of its power, but simply permits the inhabitants of the District to assess, collect, and disburse their own money in their own way subject to certain restrictions (contained in subsequent sections) for the prevention of abuses by individuals, which experience under a form of government in which the people practically did not participate has demonstrated to be necessary.

Here, Mr. President, I beg to notice that it has been urged elsewhere, and on this floor also, that the District has already suffered from the evils of popular government. This allegation is, however, denied for the reason that, as to the late government the evils complained of resulted from its arbitrary form and excessive executive power which completely dominated the popular will, and not at all from the nominal elective feature it contained; and as to the former municipal corporation it may be said that the charges of misgovernment were groundless in fact, and that they sprang largely if not solely from an opposition to the enfranchisement act of Congress and had for their purpose the overthrow of popular government in order to defeat the operation of that act.

Mr. President, it was said here yesterday that we have in this District a floating population; that they ought not to have power to elect their own officers and manage their own affairs. What is there in this objection? The logic of it is nothing less than that these people are incapable of or unfit for self-government. I affirm and maintain that this is a proposition which would destroy self-government throughout the United States, since the District is inhabited by persons coming from all the States and who must be presumed to fairly represent the average character and intelligence of the people of the several States. Little more if any than one-third of the permanently resident population of the District is native to the soil, while of those born elsewhere many are the picked men of their respective localities, brought here through the public service, and they constitute upon the whole a body of citizens fully equal in character, intelligence, and good citizenship to those found elsewhere; for it may well be doubted whether elsewhere the conditions exist for congregating at one place so large an element of exceptionally good citizens as the public service has concentrated at Washington. I think I can justly claim, therefore, that if with a population certainly on a par with that of any other city of the same number, with the exceptionally valuable element mentioned as a conservative and law-abiding influence, and under the immediate eye of Congress, subject at all times to its watchful care and its correctional and remedial powers, the people of the District cannot be trusted to govern themselves in their municipal matters, then self-government in this country might almost be said to be a failure. But I shall refer to this matter hereafter.

This section also provides for the election of the mayor and council annually. It gives a fairly large representation and frequent stated returns to the people. It may be doubted whether the tendency in some quarters to diminish representation and extend the tenures of office is in accord with the genius of our republican form of government. Whether it might not be well to increase the representation in the council and provide for minority representation, I shall not now stop to inquire, for as I have said I am not wedded to the details of the substitute, being quite willing to concede much in these regards, the principle aimed at being preserved.

The next section of this substitute, section 4, defines the qualifications of voters, to be citizens of the United States and residents one year in the District and thirty days in the ward or sub-district—the usual qualification of residence heretofore required, as I understand, under previous laws in this District.

Section 5 limits the power of the mayor to purely that of an executive officer. The past experience in some of the States, if not in this District, of extended power to control money, appointments, legislation, and elections in the executive department, admonishes a return to the simpler and wiser republican system.

Sections 6 to 21 comprise the details of organization of the council and embrace those restrictions upon methods of action adopted by Congress in reference to Territorial Legislatures, making such restrictions and limitations applicable to this municipal government.

Section 22 continues the laws now in force until changed in the proper manner.

The next section prohibits the council or any other authority in this District from increasing the indebtedness of the District; also, from borrowing money or issuing bonds or other evidences of indebtedness by any board or commission without express authority of Congress.

This prohibition is absolute. It leaves no loop-hole of construction, nor possibility of evasion by concealment or denial of amount. It prohibits any issue of evidence of debt of any class or nature—any borrowing of money or increase of indebtedness for any purpose whatever.

The three next sections, 23, 24, and 25, limit the powers of the council in respect to granting franchises, appointing justices and notaries, imposing unjust taxes, and making unlawful payments, allowances, or gratuities. They also place the right of suffrage and privileges of a citizen of the United States beyond the control of the council.

Section 27 provides for the support of the poor, but prevents the appropriation of money to private charities.

Section 28 provides authority for the establishment of a uniform system of public schools. This is one of the subjects nearest to the interests of the people and in which all have concern. The people should have the control of the public schools if even the semblance of self-government is to be preserved.

Sections 29 and 30 provide for the control by the council of the matter of District officers. The number, duties, and compensation of minor municipal officers cannot well be fixed by Congress. The council, with the tax-payers to constantly watch and guard, is not likely to make too many officers nor to pay them exorbitant salaries. Numerous officers and large salaries are an incident of a government independent of the people, and not so of a government responsible to the people.

In the next place, section 31 gives the people, through the council, the power to call their public officers to account.

In the previous government the executive and administrative officers of the District were not responsible to the people; and through that irresponsibility the District has been plunged into its present embarrassments. So independent of the people was the late government, that it is charged that they not only spurned accountability in any form to the people, but they invariably refused any information called for by the Legislative Assembly.

Section 32 provides for the publication of all municipal proceedings in a compact form to be accessible to the public. It is believed that such provision would result in the greatest public benefit in preventing abuses in administration. The cost of such publication is limited to the present expense of publishing the tax lists, which is believed to be more than ample for the purpose. In the form proposed the expense would be far less, the convenience much greater, and the amount saved would cover the cost of supplying to the public the other information comprehended by this section to be always placed within their reach. And see on this subject section 51, in relation to the official register.

Section 33 provides that the board of health shall not possess arbitrary powers to incur expense, make contracts involving large payments of public money, impose penalties, or prescribe oppressive regulations. Their power should be limited by law, and they should not be invested with nor permitted to exercise the law-making power. Their proper functions are advisory, and the council and not the board should make the ordinances to carry their recommendations into effect. And this will be accomplished, as I claim, under this section.

Sections 35, 36, and 37 give the council power to make regulations for ordinary municipal purposes; also the proper superintendence over public corporations, and makes the financial officers of the District responsible for disbursements and expenditures.

Sections 38 and 39 regard the disbursement of the public moneys. The United States Treasury is made the place of deposit, as a needed measure of safety after the consequences already experienced in the District of permitting executive officers and private bankers to manipulate the public funds.

Section 40 gives the people opportunity, through the council and the attorney of the District, to appear in court and there hold to legal accountability officers who otherwise might be beyond their reach.

The next is section 41. The act of 1871 provided for the appointment of justices of the peace and notaries public by the District government. This section vests such appointments in the supreme court of the District.

Section 42 provides for assessment upon the valuation of real property, as the only equitable method of taxing such property. An extremely unjust method at present prevails of assessing the heaviest taxes by the front foot, a method which exempts valuable property from its proportionate share of taxation and imposes onerous and often ruinous burdens upon small owners; since a lot worth $100, as I understand, would be taxed as much as a lot worth $1,000. Hundreds of small property-holders, as I am advised, have already been driven from their homes through this iniquitous plan of taxing the poor for the benefit of the rich.

Section 42 also provides for a reduced rate of assessment for agricultural lands, which seems just, since farming property is not generally as productive as city property proper.

Section 43 repeals the exemptions hitherto made upon church property and property held for private schools and charitable purposes.

The people at large, it is claimed, should not be compelled to support church organizations, nor should the public money be appropriated to the encouragement of private schools nor to the maintenance of sectarian establishments, whether such method of propaganda be styled "educational" or "charitable."

Public schools and public charities should be maintained by the public for the public, and the system vital to free institutions of public education should not be impaired by extending public aid to private institutions having special and not public designs.

Section 44 limits the rate of taxation to 1½ per cent., and proposes that Congress appropriate a like amount upon its property "occupied exclusively for purposes of the General Government," in lieu of all other appropriations for general purposes. It is believed to be better that a fixed or proportional amount be annually appropriated than that the District should be constantly begging of Congress upon all sorts of pretenses.

Sections 45 and 46 require that personal property shall bear its equal proportion of the city burdens, and no good reason is seen why it should not be taxed. Incomes, legacies, and corporate wealth can better bear taxation than the poor man's home, and should not be exempt.

Section 47 provides that taxes are to be paid in money, which is needed, and not in certificates of the board of public works, which are said to be found everywhere and in the greatest abundance.

Sections 48, 49, and 50 provide for uniformity in the method of making tax sales. There are, I am told, now three distinct ways prescribed by laws of Congress, besides some District laws which are in conflict with acts of Congress.

Section 52 is as to the conveyance of real estate. By existing law conveyances in fee are valid as to all persons from date of execution, if recorded within six months thereafter. The matter was deemed of sufficient importance to warrant the incorporation of this section for the purpose of correcting such dangerous provisions, thus making the constructive notice date only from the time of delivering the conveyance to the recorder for record.

Sections 53 and 54 place improvements under the professional direction of a board of civil engineers, giving those officers no power to make contracts or to disburse money.

The effect of this plan would be that the professional character of the board and the confinement of its duties strictly to professional supervision would constitute a check upon the making of improper contracts and the execution of inferior work. The separation of the duties of this board from the opportunity to make such duties a matter of speculation is deemed of the very greatest importance.

It is further provided that there shall be no new work undertaken until a specific plan has been approved by Congress. This provision leaves the whole subject in the hands of Congress for future action.

And now to sum up. The general idea of the substitute is this: to preserve the example of free government at the capital of the Republic; to secure to citizens of the United States residing in the District the advantages of the conduct of their own local affairs; to give to executive and administrative officers the least amount of power and to impose upon them the fullest responsibility; to make all officers directly accountable to the people; to guard public expenditure, enforce economy, prevent injustice, and to limit all opportunities of making the public service tributary to private emolument. Or, to state the issues raised in another form, I may say that the distinctive characteristics of the two bills are three in number. The one provides for the selection of the principal officers by the President; the other, by the free suffrages of the people whose local laws they are to make and enforce. The one lodges the power delegated by Congress in the hands of a few with large salaries; the other, in the hands of a large number with small salaries. The one provides for a government with a vast amount of complicated political machinery for a people many of them totally ignorant of its principles and details; the other is made up of a few provisions well known or readily understood by all, as they are to be found in the organic acts of nearly all the chartered governments in the country. The one is bureaucratic; the other democratic, in the governmental, not the political sense of that term.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, in harmony with the line of argument that the Senator has adopted, I wish to read one sentence from the Federalist. The forty-third article of the Federalist, by Mr. Madison, in speaking of the clause of the Constitution which gives the exclusive government of this territory to the Federal Government, says there would be no objection to it—

As the inhabitants will find sufficient inducements of interest to become willing parties to the cession; as they will have had their voice in the election of the government, which is to exercise authority over them; as a municipal legislature for local purposes, derived from their own suffrages, will of course be allowed them.

Mr. WRIGHT. I thank the Senator from New Jersey for the citation, but I have the same in a subsequent portion of my remarks. I shall presently refer to it.

And now, having explained the substitute which I had the honor to present, and contrasted, in as few words as possible, its details and principles with that coming from the committee, I should perhaps content myself with submitting the two propositions without further remark to the judgment or action of the Senate. Some things, however, have been said in this discussion, and on other topics bearing thereon during the present session, which have a significance and importance beyond any possible vote upon these propositions, to which I propose to allude, with the indulgence of the Senate, before I take my seat.

In a very elaborate speech, prepared evidently with great care, my esteemed friend, the Senator from North Carolina, when this subject heretofore engaged the attention of the Senate, maintained, as will be remembered, that to authorize the people of this District to elect any of their officers would be outside of and beyond the powers of Congress under the Constitution. Indeed, he stated propositions which, as it seems to me, have a bearing far more important, far more dangerous than this, and that I may not do him injustice I quote.

After stating that the Federal Government is one not of original, but of powers conferred with express limitations and for limited purposes, propositions which it is no part of my purpose nor needful to my argument to discuss or examine, he continued:

In my judgment Congress has no power to authorize the people of this District to elect these officers, or indeed any officers. I say this for the reason that upon looking into the Constitution, from which all the powers of Congress are derived, there is no provision which confers upon Congress power to confer suffrage upon anybody. No citizen of the United States by virtue of such citizenship has any right whatever to suffrage. I go further, and say that there is no provision of the Constitution, there is no power reasonably inferable from it, which authorizes Congress to confer suffrage upon a single human being. The truth is, Mr. President—

And I call special attention to this language—

That the Government of the United States was not framed, was not organized, was not carried into practical effect for the purpose of conferring suffrage upon anybody for any purpose. Whenever the subject of suffrage is touched upon in the Constitution, it is touched upon as a right that belongs to a citizen of the United States as the citizen of a State. It refers to him as a voting citizen of the State in which he lives.

As an original power, I undertake to say that Congress has no authority to confer suffrage, even in the Territories, upon the people of the Territories as citizens of the United States.

They (Congress) may provide that the city of Washington shall be governed by a mayor, or regents, or other officers which Congress may be pleased to designate and provide for; but they (the Congress) cannot provide that the people of the District of Columbia shall elect those officers; and why? Because the right of suffrage is not known to the Government of the United States; because the Constitution provides that in the appointment of all officers of the United States, of every grade and condition, they shall be appointed by the President, except in the cases which I have repeatedly pointed out.

He further proceeds to argue that Congress may create an office, that of mayor, or regent, or commissioner, any office it may see fit for the District; but cannot elect that officer, nor empower the people to elect him.

Stripping these propositions of all verbiage and reducing them to their logical elements, they mean that the people of this District cannot be given the ballot; for no power can confer it but Congress. Congress, as the Senator says, cannot, therefore it cannot be given in any form or for any purpose.

Mr. President, if these propositions and this argument to the extent stated be sound, then I confess that I have read the Constitution to but little purpose, and the fathers of the Republic and the wisest and best men of the succeeding years have been woefully ignorant of its provisions, unmindful of their sacred obligations, and have been stumbling along in thick darkness without a light to their feet or a glimpse of that radiance now shed upon the Constitution by my distinguished and esteemed friend from North Carolina, aided and ably seconded by my equally esteemed friend from Nevada, who on yesterday came so gallantly to his support.

Referring now to the Senator from North Carolina, and entertaining as I do the most profound respect for his opinions and judgment, and especially upon legal and constitutional questions, I beg to refer him for a moment, before reaching an examination of the Constitution itself, to what has been enacted in a few instances under its provisions. And it is remarkably strange, I may be allowed to say in advance, with this history and these instances before us, dating from the very existence of the Government—acts by Congress after Congress, approved by Executives of every conceivable political opinion almost—I say it is most remarkable that just now we are to be told that the people cannot elect their municipal officers in this District, but that it rests with the President alone to appoint.

But to the legislative history, or at least some part of it, for there is much more than I shall undertake to recite.

In May, 1802, Congress passed the first act incorporating the city of Washington. The mayor was to be appointed by the President, but the council, consisting of twelve members, was to be elected by the people, the mayor having power to appoint all the officers under the corporation and the council all their own officers and to remove them at pleasure.

Mr. STEWART. What is the date of that act?

Mr. WRIGHT. Eighteen hundred and two.

Mr. STEWART. What previous to that?

Mr. WRIGHT. I say that is the first on the subject.

Mr. STEWART. The first for the government of this District?

Mr. WRIGHT. Touching the subject of incorporation.

Mr. STEWART. Oh!

Mr. WRIGHT. In 1804, February 24, it was provided that this council should consist of two chambers to be elected by the people. March 3, 1805, Congress gave to the free white male citizens of Georgetown power to elect by ballot a board of aldermen and a common council, and to these two bodies was given the power to elect a mayor. February 25, 1804, Congress declared who should exercise the right of suffrage in the town of Alexandria, and how the electors should select their representatives in the common council. I only remark, in passing, to my friends from North Carolina and Nevada who insist upon their strict construction of the Constitution, that all these acts were approved by Mr. Jefferson, who, they will pardon me for suggesting, is presumed to have known something of the meaning of that instrument, and the powers of Congress under it.

Mr. MERRIMON. I ask my friend if any question was ever raised of this sort before?

Mr. WRIGHT. I will notice that after a while. I can hardly suppose that it was reserved to my distinguished friend from North Carolina for the first time to raise that after three-quarters of a century.

Mr. MERRIMON. The circumstances never required the raising of it before.

Mr. WRIGHT. Never required it before! That would be remarkably strange.

But further. In 1820, May 15, Congress provided that the mayor of Washington, instead of being selected by the council, should be elected by the people, and the qualification of electors was declared and specifically pointed out. This act was approved by Mr. Monroe, who I am bound to presume, if they will pardon me again, was not entirely ignorant of the powers of Congress.

Again, in July 15, 1843, the people were empowered in Alexandria to elect their mayor. In 1848, May 17, they were given power to elect a board of assessors in each ward, as also a register, collector, and surveyor for the city; and the fifth section of the act defines who shall be a legal voter. One of these acts was approved by Mr. Tyler, and the other by Mr. Polk.

May 20, 1862, Congress provided a "test-oath" to be administered to all those who should be challenged at the municipal elections in Washington and Georgetown.

January 1, 1864, provision was made for receiving the votes, upon terms, of those who had not registered in the city of Washington.

May 16, 1866, it was declared that persons naturalized within the dates therein given should not vote.

January 8, 1867, we find an act regulating the elective franchise, providing for registration, prescribing penalties for improperly registering voters, &c.

March 29, 1869, power was given to the judges of the different courts of the District to appoint commissioners of elections.

I need scarcely refer to the very recent act of February 21, 1871, "providing a government for the District of Columbia," making the House of Delegates elective, as also all township officers, prescribing the qualifications of voters, vesting the Legislative Assembly with full powers, and giving the District a Delegate in Congress to be chosen by the people.

And, in view of what was said by the Senator in that part of his speech in which he denies that Congress can confer upon the people of the District the right to elect a Legislative Assembly, and further that Congress cannot delegate to the people of the District the right to legislate for themselves—I say, in the face of the claim he thus makes, I cite one instance somewhat I confess in conflict with his democratic views, found in the act of March 4, 1855. By this act Congress provided for a codification of the laws of the District, and for the ratification or rejection thereof by a vote of the electors in the manner therein provided. This act was approved by Mr. Pierce, and, as if this name and approval were not sufficient to stagger my friend's democratic faith in his position, I simply add that Mr. Buchanan, on the 24th of December, 1857, issued his proclamation for taking the vote on the adoption of this codification, naming the judges of election, prescribing the places of voting, and all the details.

And a like line of legislation is found in most if not all the acts organizing our Territories, wherein Congress defines the qualification of voters, declares by whom the right of suffrage shall be exercised; after the first election giving to the territorial assemblies the right to fix their qualifications, as also to declare what class of persons are eligible to office. This will be found notably true in the celebrated Kansas-Nebraska act. The right to thus legislate I believe has never been questioned. I will not now stop to compare the clause giving power to Congress over the Territories with that relating to the District. The argument, however, I may say in passing, which denies the power of legislation, which I am now considering, to the one would probably, and indeed we know from the Senator's position and views, would certainly, do so to the other.

And now, Mr. President, if anything can be established by the uniform current of legislative action, then these acts, and others on all fours with these might be cited, show conclusively that the Senator must be mistaken in his construction of the Constitution, and that its provisions are not violated when we give to the people of this District the power to select their own officers. It has been done, as I have said, under almost every President, by almost every Congress, by those of almost every shade of political opinion. In some instances the President was given power to appoint part of the municipal officers; in others all were to be selected by the people; in some by all the voters of the cities, in others by districts or wards; in some the judges or commissioners of election were to be appointed by the judges of the courts, not by the President; in others they were to be selected by the common council. In the well-remembered and recent act of 1871, a Legislative Assembly was created, a part to be elected by the people. By the same act a Delegate to Congress was provided for, to be elected in the same way. And let me ask right here, was or is it competent to give such Delegate to the District; and, if so, will any one say that he should be appointed by the Executive? Certainly that would be uniting the duties of the legislative and executive departments of the Government in a manner never contemplated even by the Senator himself, and most clearly in conflict with the whole letter and spirit of the Constitution. The District must either be denied the right to such Delegate or the right of the people to elect him must upon every conceivable principle be conceded. But without dwelling on this part of the argument I shall assume that if anything can be settled by legislative construction, then this has been by the Congress of the United States.

But how does the question stand upon principle, and looking to the Constitution itself, uninfluenced by legislative action? I humbly submit that those who argue against this power (and there are, as we have seen, others than the Senator from North Carolina) make the mistake of treating this District as one of the States as to congressional legislation, when the truth is that in this District there is no division of powers as between the general and the State governments. Here Congress has the entire control for every purpose of government. This was decided as early as the case of Kendall vs. United States, 12 Peters, 524, and no decision, as far as I know, has ever been made conflicting in the least with this doctrine, which I thus state generally without stopping to set forth the reasoning by which it was supported.

And indeed, instead of finding anything in conflict with this doctrine, you will find that in perfect consonance with it is the case of Cohen vs. Virginia, 6 Wheaton, 424, where it is said that the power of Congress to exercise exclusive jurisdiction over the District is not local, but is conferred on that body as the Legislature of the Union. So, too, in Hepburn vs. Ellzey, 2 Cranch, 445, it is said that neither the District of Columbia nor a Territory is a State within the meaning of the Constitution. And in further support of this I quote from the Federalist, No. 43, where, in discussing the supposed danger of thus giving to Congress exclusive legislative power over the District, the author argues that "as they (the citizens of the District) will have their voice in the election of the government which is to exercise authority over them; or as a municipal legislature will of course be allowed them," the objection to the supreme control of Congress over the District will be obviated. It would seem as if that ought to settle the question beyond controversy.

And this must be so from the very language of the Constitution itself, which declares:

The Congress shall have power to exercise exclusive legislative control in all cases whatsoever over such district * * * as may * * * become the seat of the Government of the United States, * * * and make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers—

Of which this power of exclusive legislation is one—and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof.

Now, we talk often, as the Senator from North Carolina does, of the limited powers of the Federal Government, that it only has conferred powers, and by so doing, quite as frequently forget or lose sight of the extent and nature of a power which is distinctly and beyond dispute given to the Government. When a power is given, there being no restriction or limitation upon it, then it is as complete, absolute, and beyond the power of question in its exercise by any other tribunal as if our frame-work of government was the most unlimited, or a despotism instead of a constitutional democratic government. What I mean is this: That when power is given to Congress to do a thing, there being no limitations or restrictions, then Congress is the sole judge of how it shall be done. The agencies to be employed and the boundaries of legislative action are to be found almost, and I believe I may say entirely, in the discretion or judgment of Congress, and not in the opinion of some other tribunal as to whether the power has been wisely or unwisely, justly or unjustly exercised. It may exercise powers granted or incidental to those granted. But the power conceded, with nothing to limit its exercise, then the field for its action is no more restrained than that of the Legislature of a State, which possesses all powers not denied or withheld. Having the power, it may exercise it in this method to-day, in another to-morrow, by this agency this week, by another next, selecting its officials to carry it out in one way this year, in another the year after. The cardinal and first inquiry of course is, does the Constitution give this power without limitation? If it does, then the manner of exercising it, I repeat, is with Congress. And not a little of the false logic in all discussions as to the power of the Federal Government arises, in my judgment, from a misconception of this very plain principle or rule of construction. Thus we are apt to say that because the Government is one of limited or conferred powers, though a power is clearly and unmistakably granted, and that too without limitation, there can still be nothing done under it except what is clearly embodied in the language used in conferring the power. This, I submit, would, to an extent never contemplated, tie the hands of the law-making power, and would carry the doctrine of the limited nature of our Federal system to a sequence at war with the best interests of the people and the most desirable and efficient action of the Government in all its co-ordinate departments.

Now, what is the power of Congress in the matter under consideration? We have seen that it is to exercise exclusive legislative control in all cases whatsoever over this District, and to make all laws necessary and proper to carry this power into execution. Having exclusive legislative control, there can of course be no division of that power. That which is exclusive in one body cannot be exercised concurrently by nor divided with another. Congress cannot exercise this power in person; that is to say, it cannot in person collect the taxes, improve the streets, superintend the health of the people, erect public buildings, and discharge all the other and varied functions appertaining to a municipal organization such as is contemplated in this District. Then how are these duties to be exercised? I answer, by just such agencies or such officers selected in such manner as Congress, in the exercise of the power of exclusive legislation, may elect. Of all these matters Congress is made the exclusive judge. To it is given supreme authority. The legislative is the supreme power, having which, as in this instance without restriction as I claim, there is included in it the power and the duty of providing the means to carry it into execution.

But this is met with the proposition that the power is not conferred without limitation; for to the President, it is said, is given the power to appoint all officers which may be established by law whose appointments are not otherwise provided for in the Constitution. The language is that the President "shall have power * * * to make treaties, * * * and he shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors * * * and all other officers of the United States, whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law." It is, however, further provided that "Congress may * * * vest the appointment of such inferior officers, as they think proper, in the President alone, in the courts of law, or in the heads of Departments." And in view of these provisions it is asked, does this clause, giving exclusive legislative control to Congress over the District, "override, absorb, and swallow up all the balance of the Constitution?" Or again, it is asked, is it not to be construed with other parts of that instrument, and subject to the limitations therein contained? And from these inquiries follows the conclusion, according to the argument, that Congress can provide officers to discharge duties in the District, but that it cannot authorize the people to elect such officers in the face of the provision which confers upon the Executive power to appoint the same.

Of course no one controverts the doctrine that the Constitution is to be construed as a whole, and that no one provision is to receive a construction without looking to all the others. In the language of the Senator from North Carolina, "No one clause is to absorb, override, and swallow up" the others. And yet all must be made to stand and have operative force, if possible. No one shall be construed to impair the full force and meaning of another or others if a meaning can be given to all by which all may stand and have force and effect. Now you find field and scope for the operation of the second clause of the second section (that relating to appointments) by applying (not necessarily, of course, confining) it to officers of the United States, such as are connected with the general machinery of the Government, almost infinite in number and varied in their importance and responsibility. In doing this you do not in the least conflict with its meaning or take from the power vested in the Executive. But the clause itself contemplates that there are officers whose appointments are otherwise provided for, and these officers are other than those which Congress may authorize the President alone or the courts or heads of Departments to appoint. For the language, recognizing another method of appointment, could not have referred to those to be made by courts or heads of Departments. The two are placed in such juxtaposition as to render it certain that the framers of the instrument, wise and careful as they were in all things, each day's experience but serving to show that they even "built better than they knew," I say renders it certain that they contemplated that other methods were provided by the Constitution for the appointment or filling certain offices which the law might establish. The words "whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for" were quite unmeaning, showing a tautology not found elsewhere in that instrument, if the word "therein" refers to the next clause, and not to the instrument as a whole. And hence we find, in entire consistency with the due operation of the "appointing clause," that Congress is given the power of exclusive legislation over that district or small territory to be selected as the seat of Government—exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever, with full power to make all laws necessary and proper to carry into execution such powers. In doing this Congress may, I grant, give to the Executive the power to appoint the officers provided for such district. So it may give the appointment to the courts, if so disposed to any body of men, fill them by the act creating them or by further or other legislation, or provide for their election by the people. To provide a method of filling these offices is as much and as legitimately legislation as it is to fix their salaries, their tenures of office, the qualification of the appointees, or how they may be impeached or removed. And the power, being exclusive, is as much beyond the control of a power other than theirs as to the selection as it is as to what officers are necessary to the municipal machinery.

And this view is in such perfect accord with the whole frame-work and genius of our Government, that it seems strange that any other construction should be deemed possible. Thus the people of the United States ordained and established this Constitution. It was the work of the people, not of the States, and for the purposes recited in the preamble. And, too, the power not delegated to the United States, nor prohibited to the States, was reserved to the States or the people; and all persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to its jurisdiction are citizens of the United States and of the State where they reside, and the right of citizens of the United States to vote is not to be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude.

These and other provisions serve to show the spirit animating those framing the amendments as well as the original instrument, and the rules and spirit which should govern us in giving them a construction. And hence, if doubt arises as to its meaning by the one construction giving power to the people, the original source of all power, by the other taking power from them and lodging it in a single individual—in all such cases the path of safety and the spirit which breathes throughout the instrument are best consulted by letting the people speak and act for themselves. If the people cannot be trusted, if to them cannot be accorded the privilege of electing their own officers, the power to do so being denied by invoking a technical rule of construction, then abandon all claim that this is their Government. Others may do as they deem best, but for my humble self, if doubt obtains, I shall leave power in its source; for thus, as I regard, I am more likely to carry out the design and spirit of the Constitution; thus am I more likely to build upon the foundations laid and upon the fundamental ideas enunciated and defended by the fathers of the Republic. Of course, if doubt does not obtain and my way is clear, as in this case, I would most freely and cheerfully give to the people the franchise rather than deny it.

We have heard much, Mr. President, within the last few years especially, of the danger of a central Government—of power escaping from the people and being absorbed by the executive head. These fears, I confess, I have not and do not share. And to me it is not a little strange that our friends on the other side, upon a question at least admitting of fair argument against their construction, should so persistently deny to the people—to a people for the most part intelligent and well able to judge of their own wants—the right to select their own officers. I would do no one injustice, nor for one moment misconstrue his motives. I give to the able Senator from North Carolina the full benefit and all the advantage of his disclaimer that the colored vote in this District in no manner nor to any extent influences his view of the Constitution. And yet I think I know something of the strength of human prejudices. I certainly know how incompetent we all are to judge of or weigh their existence or strength when judging of ourselves. In such matters we are very, very unsafe judges. And I cannot resist the expression of a fear that the withholding of the ballot from those lately in slavery, coupled with the strong feeling, honestly entertained it may be, that they are incompetent to its exercise, may too much influence the opinion that the power to select their municipal officers is lodged elsewhere.

Nor, I confess, can I avoid the conclusion that if the ballot was given now as formerly in the District only to the free white male inhabitants of the requisite age, our friends would hesitate long, would be exceedingly reluctant to withhold from the one hundred and forty thousand people here residing the poor and yet invaluable privilege of selecting the officers who should administer their local affairs; and especially so when, if the argument that they must be appointed is sound, then it applies to all, the very lowest and humblest as well as the highest and most important; and that part of the original bill which makes a part of the school board elective clearly violates the Constitution; for if only the President under the Constitution can appoint, then he must appoint all, even constables, path-masters, and fence-viewers. The power, if in him, is exclusive. It applies to all. If it may be derided, there is an end of the argument.

Mr. President, there is, I feel bound to say, more in this doctrine loudly and boldly proclaimed that the "Government of the United States was not formed, was not organized, was not carried into practical effect for the purpose of conferring suffrage upon anybody for any purpose" than its mere bearing on the subject now under consideration would seem to imply. If with all the guarantees of the Constitution, with all the safeguards for human rights, if with all our boasted efforts to secure all rights to all men, we accept this doctrine as a platform for legislation and political action, not in its mere technical language, but, what is of far greater moment, its spirit and possible purpose, then let us vote emancipation a failure and universal suffrage an uncompensating delusion.

Mr. President, we are gradually but certainly coming face to face with the gravest issues, more so even than those preceding or immediately following the war. For one I would not be blind to them nor ignore them in my action. They are before us, and no man is true to himself or duty who fails to see them.

That we are approaching these grave issues I beg to remind the Senate; in addition to the extraordinary doctrines which I have endeavored to combat, that the very able Senator from Kentucky, [Mr. STEVENSON,] a Senator who is ever frank and candid, and as able as he is frank and candid, who always weighs well what he says, and whose high position and unquestioned integrity entitle his utterances in this Chamber to the most profound respect, and indeed invest them with the deepest oracular significance—I say I beg to remind you that almost immediately following the speech of the Senator from North Carolina, the Senator from Kentucky told us, in appealing to the Senator from Maryland [Mr. HAMILTON] to withdraw his amendments to the pending currency bill, that in his opinion the legal-tender act was clearly unconstitutional; that to repeal it, however, would be rash and premature. He continued:

So, too, in regard to the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments. I do not believe they were constitutionally adopted, but the country has acquiesced in them, and I am against disturbing them. I stand by them in good faith until they have been fairly tested and fully tried.

Then what? Yea, I repeat, then what? Suppose the time shall come when in the opinion of that Senator they have been "fairly tested and fully tried," and they shall not answer public expectation or the end proposed; if they were never constitutionally adopted, what then? What then becomes of the guarantees therein thrown around the privileges and immunities of the citizen? What of the basis of representation; of the penalties denounced against those violating their oaths in taking up arms against the Government; of the sacred character of the public debt? How stands the debt in aid of the rebellion? What of the right of suffrage, which under these amendments is not to be abridged on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude? What becomes of the duty of Congress to enforce these amendments by appropriate legislation? The enforcement of these articles and the great principles by them embodied in the Constitution, if the Senator's position is sound, rests of course not upon the commands of the instrument, not upon the binding obligation of these provisions as a part of "the supreme law of the land," but upon the judgment of each one and of political parties and organizations whether after a "fair test and full trial" they should command his or their respect and support. For if not constitutionally adopted they are to be obeyed or disregarded according to each man's judgment or conscience or the dictation of political leaders and parties. Yea, more, if not thus adopted they are as if not therein written, as if not therein found, and are to be disregarded as so many "glittering generalities" made to tickle the ear and our patriotism, and without obligation upon any one. And who shall say when the "test and trial" have been sufficiently made in the opinion of those who may by possibility constitute a majority in these halls and control the Government? Who, I ask, shall assure us of the sacredness of our national debt, or what assumption may not be made of the debts growing out of the loss of slaves or in aid of the rebellion, or who can say what infringement may not be made upon the privileges and immunities of citizens, or how soon the elective franchise shall be denied because of race, color, or previous condition of servitude? The Senator stands by them in good faith until thus tried and tested. I accept his statement made in that good faith and sincerity which ever characterize his pledges.

But coming as this language does from one standing so high in these halls and before the country, his expressed purposes have to me a most momentous and startling significance. It is one thing to stand by a law because it is so written and found upon the statute-book; it is quite another to stand by and enforce it because you believe it to be right. It is one thing to grudgingly and coldly, and because you cannot for the time, from policy, well do otherwise, observe the constitution which you believe never to have been validly adopted, simply because the country has acquiesced in it, and hence you are opposed to its disturbance; it is quite another to defend it because you believe in its spirit and are ready to maintain that it was adopted in the method provided in the Constitution itself. And there being no suggestion by the Senator that these amendments are to be changed in the methods pointed out in the Constitution, who shall tell how long before it shall be deemed that there has been a fair test and full trial of their operation; how long before it shall be determined that the people no longer acquiesce in them; how long before, without attempting their change by constitutional means, there shall be a denial of their binding force upon this body, upon Congress, upon the country? If these provisions rest for their observance and enforcement upon such contingencies, instead of being accepted and enforced in good faith as valid parts of our great charter, tell me where is the security, what the value of the safeguards which they were intended to throw around the citizen and the Treasury? To these inquiries we are rapidly coming, and this the country had as well understand. Ah, Mr. President, I remember with what earnestness and with what apparent pleasure my friend, the same distinguished Senator, at the same time said that the bill under consideration (the finance bill) afforded "the first public acknowledgment by the republican party that they realize the fact foreshadowed by the recent elections, that the scepter is rapidly passing from Judah, and that the days of their domination and misrule are rapidly coming to an end." Allow me to say, Mr. President, that I accepted that bill and our united action thereon rather as evidence that we apprehended the dangers threatening the Republic, only to be arrested by the wisest legislation and the most united action of the party in power.

Long enough, too long perhaps, have our councils been divided upon the currency and other subjects demanding legislation. Possibly these divisions may have contributed not a little to create distrust in the public mind of our ability to administer the affairs of the Government and to give to the opposition what is in my opinion the merest partial temporary triumph. But whether this union, this deliberate and thorough concert of action, be attributed to alarm created by the recent elections, or whether to a purpose to administer the Government in our own way, holding us, as the people will, for such administration whatever may be done by the opposition; or to the high and ever defensible duty of laboring to save the country from threatened danger; let our motives be judged as they may, and charges or suggestions come from what source they may, still let us move on unmindful of aught save the high and grave responsibilities resting upon a party which has done so much to be proud of in the past and so little to cause alarm for the future.

In view of the doctrines enunciated by those opposed to us; in view of the need of a closer union and more earnest sympathy on the part of those who have done more for the country and been truer to principle than any other party ever administering its affairs; in view of the readiness of the people, as I believe, to sustain us if we are true to our pledges and ourselves; in view of the events pressing upon and demanding our attention—I say, in view of all these things, let us not hesitate nor fail in the use of means essential to accomplish results so much to be desired.

Everywhere the cry is, by those unfriendly to our rule, that the Government is to be and must be turned over to other hands. And this prediction may be verified, if we are cowards and unfaithful to our high trust. If left to indicate the one thing most needed, I should express it in the one word, courage. Courage to stand by what is right and condemn what is wrong. Courage to rid ourselves of bad men and bad officers wherever found or whatever their influence. Courage to reduce expenses to the lowest possible limit at all consistent with the public service. Courage to reject instantly and without division all subsidies, all schemes of rings or lobbyists, by whomsoever moved or however plausible. Courage to discountenance and condemn all efforts to set on foot investigations without probable cause, instigated from political motives, involving large expenditures of money, and only calculated to inflame still more a morbid public sentiment. Courage to carry out and enforce in good faith and high purpose all the guarantees of the Constitution securing in letter and spirit "all rights to all men." Courage to plant ourselves upon the doctrine that Congress has the power to give to the people cheaper transportation, and prevent that combination which is the end of competition among carrier corporations and companies. Courage to declare and provide for the protection of the life, liberty, and property, against misrule, deeds of violence, and bloodshed, of every citizen of the land, if to do so requires the whole military and the entire treasure of the nation. Courage to set our faces against all corruption and to maintain the law at all hazards. Courage to see to it that the States of the South, and everywhere, shall have now and at all times governments republican in form and in reality, whoever may be disappointed, however much rascality and fraud may be exposed or brought to judgment, or however severely the lawless and Union-hating rebel may be made to feel the power of the Government. Courage not to destroy a State, but to crush out any and all defiance of the spirit of our free institutions wherever found. Courage to use force not merely to irritate but sufficient to punish those who band together to defy the constituted authorities. Courage to know that there never can be any safe compromise with bloodshed, lawlessness, treason. Courage to acknowledge our mistakes as a party whenever they occur, and to honestly enter upon the work of correcting them. Courage to love the Union as a whole—to accept the Constitution, in all its parts, as a charter of national life, not of death. Courage to resist all reactionary movements—remembering that now, as ever before, the contest is between progressiveness and conservatism, aggression and reaction, and that the party of true faith and reform will ever keep abreast with the demands of the times and an advancing Christian civilization.

True, honest, high moral courage, hope, confidence, with the fruits following these, are what the people demand and expect at our hands. And I say, therefore, away at once and forever with a timid, weak-kneed, shivering policy and course, which only lead the people to distrust our ability and to give temporary hope and courage to the opposition. True courage the people admire and will stand by in parties as in individuals. Not otherwise can we maintain our ground and achieve a triumph demanded by the best interests, if not indeed for the very life of the country. With true courage we can and will. And then we shall hear no more of the doctrine that the Government was not made for the purpose of conferring suffrage upon any person for any purpose. Then we shall not be left to trust obedience to the Constitution or any part of it to the test or trial of the acquiescence or non-acquiescence of the people or political parties in its provisions and mandates. Then it shall not be said that we unite as a party from simple fear of political defeat, but it will be seen that united, throwing aside and rejecting all dead issues, divorcing ourselves as far as possible from all bad men, we have brought peace everywhere to the nation, respect for the laws, obedience to the Constitution, prosperity to the people, and given renewed hope to the friends of free government everywhere.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, it is not true that the contemporaneous construction of the clause of the Constitution setting apart a capital was in favor of the local self-government spoken of to-day. In 1790 the first act which was passed provided for governing the capital by a commission; and it was governed by a commission of three for twelve years until 1802; and then I suppose by common neglect this anomalous state of things grew up. When the Constitution was freshly before Congress, when they undertook to legislate, they legislated properly undoubtedly. The judiciary act of 1789, we all know, is considered as of equal sanctity almost with the Constitution itself, because it was passed immediately after its adoption; and so of this act of 1790; but the subsequent acts in regard to the District of Columbia have no great authority or obligation as precedents. At the time the first act was passed Congress was in full view of the Constitution, and then provided for a commission. It is true Mr. Madison threw out a loose remark in the Federalist in arguing in favor of the Constitution, which has been read, the remark of an advocate without much consideration, although it comes from very high authority. Still it was not followed when Congress came to act upon the subject that they had lost sight of the provision of the Constitution. That went on for twelve years, and for the rest of the time (not for seventy-five years, because the first act brought us down to 1802) they have had a very irregular government, not an effective government. For a long time this city had a mayor and common council. Twelve years ago, if you had looked at this city, you would have seen the government of the mayor and common council which they had at that time. It was really literally the worst place in the United States. There never was a city in such a condition, where so many people were congregated together. There was no under-ground sewerage; there was no proper police. There was never a city in such a bad condition in the world as this city was until it was undertaken to be improved by the board of public works. There never was a city so badly governed, so badly provided for as to the health and comfort of the inhabitants. It was a national disgrace as it then was. It had been neglected by Congress, and the taxes had been misapplied by a floating population. The citizens of the District were not really responsible even before the colored people had the right to vote. This evil did not begin with the suffrage of the colored people. It dates much further back than that. Before there was any such voting the class of population that controlled it were of that transient character that they multiplied offices; there was no responsibility as there is among citizens who govern a community in which they are interested. It was a floating population unfit to govern the capital prior to negro suffrage, and since suffrage has been extended it has not helped the matter at all, but perhaps has rather aggravated the evil. Its controlling power is still a floating population.

I have noticed the phases it assumed when it was under a form of government similar to that proposed by the Senator from Iowa, [Mr. WRIGHT.] Now, to show how little thought the Senator from Iowa has bestowed on his bill compared with the amount of labor he has bestowed on his speech, I want to read one or two sections of his bill and see what a subterfuge it is, what a thing it is. It may be all very well to make this District a football for political speeches, to make it a thing to throw into debate on all occasions, and let the people here suffer and be robbed for the want of proper, legitimate legislation; but let us look at some of the leading provisions of the Senator's bill. Take section 30, which is one of the leading provisions of it.

SEC. 30. That the council may provide for the election by the District at large of the necessary officers charged with the performance of general duties, and for the election by sub-districts of officers charged with the performance of local duties—

This council may provide for the election of as many officers as they please—and all officers not made elective by the people, and not otherwise provided for by Congress, shall be annually chosen by the municipal assembly; but the appointment of clerks and subordinates may be vested in the chief officers of the respective departments wherein such duties are to be performed, subject to such approval as the council may direct; and the several classes of officers chosen by the people shall be voted for on separate ballots.

The law under which we had more officers than the locusts of Egypt, who ate up the substance of this community, did not begin to give them the authority that there is here. It would nearly bankrupt the nation to get a census of the number of officers they would create in six months under that section. What a spectacle that is for this people! What an outrage it is that this system should be advocated, and advocated by men who will not take the trouble to define the officers and give us a list of them, give us a list of the men who are to eat up the substance of this people, but will commit that power to an irresponsible, transient, local Legislature that get together, supposed to be elected by the people, when the people really have nothing to do with it, but elected by those who chance to be in the capital at the time. Do you think that the people of this District, the real citizens of this District, if their voices could have been heard in the selection of their representatives, would ever have chosen such a Legislature as there was here last December a year? Do you think it would have been possible for any city of the Union to have elected a council who could break up or take away the chairs and looking-glasses and dusters and furniture of the establishment when they were dissolved? Do you believe if there had been the slightest responsibility anywhere, it would have been possible to get together such a gang as that, with no more shame? Do you believe such a thing would have occurred if those who assembled there had been citizens, and had to meet face to face their constituents? Do you believe they would have stolen the chairs?

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I wish to ask the Senator from Nevada who did elect the Legislature?

Mr. STEWART. Nobody knows. Those who happened to be here the day the election occurred, I suppose. They do not stay here twenty-four hours; they come here and inflict the pain, they come here and make the grab, and in that case they did not have even the decency to elect men who had enough self-respect to leave the chairs in the hall which they had occupied.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Texas. I will ask the Senator another question. It is a very grave charge to say that people who live abroad were permitted to come here and elect the Legislature. It is startling. It is a direct imputation upon the authorities who controlled the election here. I ask the Senator from Nevada if he does not think the board of public works had more to do with the election of the Legislature than the people who live outside of this District.

Mr. STEWART. No, I do not think anything of the kind at all. I think most of the votes that elected them were those of persons living outside of the District. I do not want any more machinery whereby such things can be possible. I say the people that live in this District have a right to be protected against those who chance to come along. But under the amendment of the Senator from Iowa what would be the result? Immediately preceding the election men would come in and congregate here, and you would have here such a host of men who have no interest in the District that the citizens themselves would hold up their hands in despair. Why, sir, I saw here previous to an election at one time over a thousand men engaged in cutting the grass with knives out of the gutter in the outside parts of the city. I went through the city half a day and could hardly count them.

I say that when you allow the power to be in the hands of a majority of transient population that come here, and then make Congress or the people foot the bills, you are shirking a plain duty. The bill of the Senator from Iowa has no safeguards. Here is another clause in it to which I want to call the Senator's attention. Look at section 22:

That the council shall provide for the regular weekly publication, in an official register or otherwise and in detailed and intelligible form, of all the receipts and expenditures of the District and of any board or officers now or hereafter connected therewith; of all contracts involving an expenditure of District funds or incurring any liabilities to the District or to the inhabitants thereof; of the proceedings of the council—

Which will include its debates, I suppose—and of all proceedings of District administration of public interest or concern; and of all official advertisements, orders, and transactions of the District.

These shall all be published once a week. What will that amount to? Five or six hundred thousand dollars a year probably. It is true the Senator has a clause limiting the amount, but see how it is limited—

But the expense attendant upon the publication of an official register shall not exceed the sum now annually paid for advertising the delinquent tax lists in the city of Washington.

What does that amount to, and how is it to be ascertained? Property will be advertised and readvertised every year and nobody will buy it as long as a floating population impose taxes and command appropriations by Congress; as long as there is no responsibility anywhere, no limitation upon suffrage, and no means of ascertaining who can vote. So long as that system lasts I think the amount required to pay the annual expense of advertising the delinquent tax list will be quite large. Take any section of the Senator's bill; I only take these as sample bricks of the whole thing, to show that it has not been examined or perfected in any respect.

It is stated here that the citizens of the District of Columbia have equal rights with any other citizens. Have they? Citizens of the States have the right to determine who shall vote, what kind of residence shall be required. They have a right to pass a registry law to determine the qualifications of voters, and only those who are real citizens vote. They have that power. This proposed bill takes that all away from the people of the District, and non-residents may drive in here by the thousand and vote. There is no safeguard under that bill and no power to legislate for safeguards. The only power conferred on this Legislative Assembly, if you will look it through, is to extend offices, create expenditures, multiply the troubles. There is in it no such thing as a registry law; there is no limitation in it. After the very ably digested bill we have from our select committee, this comes in this shape. We are asked to throw away the committee's bill and take that of the Senator from Iowa as necessary, for what purpose? Upon this depend the constitutional amendments. Upon the amendment of the Senator from Iowa, according to his argument what depends? I suppose he meant something by his argument; and what depends on it? We must adopt his amendment, and ruin and bankrupt this District further, and rob the nation further, to pay the expense incurred by an irresponsible body of men to be created; or what? Or the fifteenth constitutional amendment will be disregarded and the negroes will be deprived of suffrage; the finances of the nation will be disturbed; Congress will lack courage to do its duty! They must do this, or everything is wrong. His speech illustrates the way this District has been governed. Here we have had a political speech piled up on this poor District, when it is asking for government and law. Nothing illustrates the mode of treating this District more forcibly than the amount of debate and the kind of debate that is drawn in on this bill.

What in the world has the constitutional amendment in regard to negro suffrage to do with this bill? Do you want to illustrate negro suffrage here? Is that your purpose? Then let us have a different illustration from what such a bill as the Senator's would give. Do not make the negroes responsible for all the floating population that can be gathered here. Do not make the negroes responsible for the bad government that will grow up out of such legislation as this would be. Do not make the negroes responsible for your bad laws. Do not make negro suffrage responsible for the robbery that necessarily would occur of the people of this District under such a bill as the Senator's. If you want to have negro suffrage respected, let it be regulated by law as white suffrage is; do not invite negroes and whites who do not live here to come into this District and vote away the money of Congress and load the people with burdens. It seems to me that such a bill would be a stab at negro suffrage and at universal suffrage. What must follow from this is what has followed from similar legislation.

We have had misrule; we have had oppression; we have had bad government enough in this District, and the reason was that there was no responsible source of power. The reason was that there was no responsible body of voters here to govern the District of Columbia. The reason was that the laws were conflicting, uncertain, and impossible of execution, so that the scene was that of "confusion worse confounded." The Senator's proposition is another piece of legislation in the same line, only more so, of all that which has gone before; and it is argued that, in order to save negro suffrage, in order to save the finances of the country, in order to revive the courage of the republican party, we must give the District of Columbia another kick and plunge them in deeper, throw them into fits further, and then the great republican party will come out and the Constitution will be vindicated and the rights of man everywhere protected! I protest that the rights of man are in harmony with good government in this District. I protest that a sound financial policy for the country is in perfect accord with good government in this District. I protest and affirm that the Constitution of the United States is in harmony also with good government in this District. I declare that it is impossible to have good government by means of a floating population responsible to nobody and restricted by no law. I point to the past; it has been a failure, and we know that in the future it will be the same. I hope that we shall confine ourselves to the question of good government here, and that we will exercise the power all acknowledge we have to appoint a commission to govern this District as the fathers did in the first place. Let us go back to the first twelve years of government in this city under those who breathed their inspiration immediately from the founders of the Republic. Do not try to experiment again. Everything else has been tried. You have tried loose legislation; you have tried conflicting forms of government; you have tried placing the power in irresponsible hands. Place it where the first Congress under the Constitution placed it. Place it where it was placed in 1790, and which was tried for twelve years. That certainly was in harmony with the Constitution; and if it is in harmony with the Constitution to have honest rule, to have decent rule in this District, let us have it now. I apprehend that nobody will contend that that first act was unconstitutional. If that was not unconstitutional, the bill now proposed by the Senator from Maine is not unconstitutional; for it is on the same basis, involving the same exercise of power.

It is clearly constitutional then. Any man of sense knows that it will give us better government. Any man of judgment knows that to have good government here cannot injure the cause of suffrage anywhere. It cannot injure the cause of suffrage to pass the same kind of an act that was passed in 1790 by the fathers of the Republic. The people here are citizens and they are citizens of the Republic, and they are entitled to be protected by laws made by some responsible body of men. They are entitled to be protected against a lawless invasion of the transitory population who are brought here necessarily by the capital of the nation. Whether that population be white or black, it matters not; it was just as bad under the white population as it is under the black. The whole theory of allowing self-government here is inconsistent with the nature of things, inconsistent with the Constitution, inconsistent with the first act of Congress on the subject. Let us go back to that act. Let us have law.

This subject involves simply the question of good government and honesty here. Let us commence here to have good government and honesty, and I think it will help us as much to have good government and honesty here as anywhere. Let us have courage to do right now. Let us not be so cowardly that we dare not deal with this subject but turn it over to somebody that is irresponsible. Let us not be so cowardly that we dare not take up a well-digested bill and pass it, but must resort to some makeshift because we are afraid to say to the people of all the world, "In the city of Washington we will have good government as provided by the Constitution, and we will pass an act modeled entirely after the first act passed by Congress on the subject." It seems to me that to have courage to do right is a good thing, but to have the courage to do wrong is a very mean thing.

Mr. MERRIMON. Mr. President, if it is the disposition of the Senate to take the vote on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MORTON] now, I am content to yield for that purpose; but otherwise, if the discussion is to be protracted, it is due to myself to make some remarks in reply to the honorable Senator from Iowa, [Mr. WRIGHT.]

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I greatly hope we may get the vote at the present time.

Mr. STEWART. Cannot the Senator from North Carolina make his remarks on some other bill?

Mr. MERRIMON. My remarks will have reference to the constitutional question which this bill presents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. INGALLS in the chair.) The Senator from North Carolina is entitled to the floor.

Mr. MERRIMON. As I hear no suggestion that there is a disposition to take the vote now, I will proceed.

Mr. President, if I know my own heart, my desire in this behalf is to aid in passing a law that will most benefit the people of the District of Columbia, without reference to race or color. I trust that I am incapable of a desire to do anybody or any class of people an injustice. In the discussion of this subject on a former occasion I was moved, because of what was said by others, to scrutinize the power of Congress to confer suffrage upon the people in this District. It was contended, not only by the chairman of the committee but by many other Senators, that for a long time past the District of Columbia had been under terrible misrule, that immense debts had been created and frauds perpetrated to the great detriment of the people and the nation. These evils were said to be attributable to popular suffrage and to a floating population that came into the city to vote and passed out of it in a very short time after coming here. I could well see that such an evil might exist here, and that at once suggested to me the importance of the inquiry that I attempted to make, I confess, at the time rather hurriedly, but further examination has only confirmed me in the opinions which I then expressed.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. WRIGHT] has taken very decided issue with me. It is a remarkable fact, however, that in the course of the long and interesting and well-considered speech which he has delivered he cited not one single provision of the Constitution which sustains his position, nor did he cite any legal authority for any such purpose. Now, sir, I propound with all respect to him, this question: Can he point me to any clause in the Constitution of the United States which delegates to Congress or any national authority the right to confer suffrage upon a single human being? I challenge my honorable friend to point to that clause.

Mr. WRIGHT. I feel very certain that either the Senator was not in his seat or I was very unsuccessful in making myself understood, if he did not hear me point to several provisions of the Constitution from which I claimed the power, and not only so but I cited three authorities from the decisions of the Supreme Court as to the nature of the powers of the Government under the Constitution as affecting this District and also the opinion of one of the authors of the Federalist upon that subject. So instead of the Senator being authorized to say that I cited no single authority, I did cite authorities on that subject and I did refer to the provisions of the Constitution.

Mr. MERRIMON. I apprehend that when those authorities are examined and criticised—and I listened to the Senator's speech with great pleasure and interest—it will turn out that he cited authorities from which he drew inferences and he attempted to arrive at a power in Congress by inference and not by any provision in the Constitution express or implied.

Now, sir, any one who will turn to the Constitution of the United States will find that it makes reference to the subject of suffrage in only three places: First, there is a provision touching suffrage in the election of members of the House of Representatives of the United States; second, there is a provision touching suffrage in the election of President of the United States; third, the fifteenth amendment provides that no State shall deny to any person the right of suffrage on any one of three accounts, namely, race, color, or previous condition of servitude. If the honorable Senator can point me to any other clause in the Constitution on the subject of suffrage at all, or any clause which by reasonable implication refers to suffrage, I would be obliged to him or any one else to do it.

The National Government, as I said on a former occasion, was not framed for the purpose of regulating suffrage at all. Suffrage pertains to the people of the United States as citizens of the several States. The people of the United States are not a consolidated mass in any sense. The Constitution of the United States does not provide that the people of the United States in any instance as a consolidated mass shall take action. While they are one people and have one nationality, they operate and co-operate for all purposes through the several States as States. Even in the election of a President the people of the several States act in their capacity as States and not as citizens of the United States.

The Constitution confers upon Congress power touching the District of Columbia in these words:

To exercise exclusive legislation—

These are very material and very significant words—in all cases whatsoever over such District, &c.

These are the operative words; these are the words which conferred the power. "Exclusive legislation" is the language, and the word "exclusive," we all understand, had reference to excluding the right of the State of Maryland and the State of Virginia to legislate touching the territory ceded to the United States for a seat of government. Then the point turns on the word "legislation." Congress shall have power to legislate for the District of Columbia; that is the constitutional meaning; that is the legal sense of the clause. To legislate how? To legislate for the District of Columbia just as Congress legislates for the Territories, for the Government generally, or as it exercises its powers of legislation touching any matter whereof it has jurisdiction. The plain meaning is that Congress is to legislate for the District of Columbia just as it does for any other purpose. The power conferred is not exceptional and specially different from the power to legislate for other purposes.

Is there any consideration, is there any reason why that word "legislation" in that clause should bear a different meaning from what it bears in any other clause of the Constitution? I can see no reason for it, nor has any been pointed out; and I undertake to say that none can be shown. If, then, there is no power conferred by this clause to legislate that is not conferred by any other clause of the Constitution in the matter of legislation, how is it that Congress can so legislate touching the District of Columbia as that it can appoint an officer or authorize the people to elect one when Congress has not a similar power touching any other subject. I should like to know. Congress cannot ordinarily provide an office and fill it, nor can it provide that the people anywhere may elect such officer, for a reason I will presently state. Why, then, can it appoint an officer for this District or authorize the people of the District to elect? Where is the authority for it? I would like for the Senator or any one to point it out.

But further than that, there was a law at one time which provided that certain justices of the peace should be appointed for the District of Columbia by the President. The President appointed a justice of the peace. A controversy sprang up and went into the courts touching that appointment, and it went to the Supreme Court of the United States. The case is that of Marbury vs. Madison, reported in 1 Cranch. In that case the Supreme Court held that a justice of the peace in the District of Columbia was an officer of the United States. The officers of this District are officers of the United States; the judges are, and a mayor of this city would be.

Another decision of the Supreme Court throws light upon the subject. In the case of Cohens vs. Virginia, reported in 6 Wheaton, the point was raised that an act passed by Congress touching the District of Columbia was a local act in its character. The Supreme Court held otherwise. They held not only in that case, but they have held in other cases that every act passed by the Congress of the United States is a national law to all intents and purposes; it is a law of the United States, and not simply local.

Now, sir, if the legislation of Congress touching the District of Columbia is part and parcel of the statutes of the United States, if these acts are laws of the United States, and if these statutes provide for the appointment of officers, I ask any Senator to tell me why they are not controlled by the clause of the Constitution which I will now read:

He [the President] shall have power, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to make treaties, provided two-thirds of the Senators present concur; and he shall nominate, and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, shall appoint ambassadors, other public ministers and consuls, judges of the Supreme Court, and all other officers of the United States whose appointments are not herein otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law.

The Supreme Court has decided that an officer of the District of Columbia is an officer of the United States. If he is an officer of the United States, then I contend that the result is inevitable that under the clause of the Constitution which I have just read that officer cannot be appointed by any power save only the President.

The effort has been made to derive the power in Congress to confer suffrage by inference. We are told—and that is the strength really of the argument on the other side—that Congress has for seventy-five years legislated on this subject and the people of this District have had the right conferred upon them to vote for certain of their officers. And the Senator from Indiana the other day propounded to me the question where does Congress get power to confer suffrage on the people in the Territories? Because this has been done, therefore they say Congress has this power. I say that this is a non sequitur. It does not follow at all. An unconstitutional precedent is no precedent at all. It can have no effect whatever. It only has weight as an argument, and it goes into the scale; and that is the only effect it can have. This may have been so, because the question was never raised before; the power was presumed, it was not questioned, and in this way unlawful powers are often exercised until they are questioned. I admit that in this discussion I labor under this disadvantage, that for seventy-five years this power has been exercised more or less. I admit that Mr. Madison said in the Federalist what has been read; but touching what was said in the Federalist, it was but a hasty remark, it was but a remark, it was a brief remark. There was no argument in support of the bare suggestion nor any authority cited. He did not enter into the question at all. He simply threw out the suggestion. He was making a popular argument to induce the people to adopt the Constitution. So that goes for very little. It has not even the weight of his great name and judgment to be thrown into the scale in this debate. It was but a casual suggestion that did not amount to an opinion.

But, sir, touching the Territories, I admit that Congress has from the beginning of the Government conferred upon the people of the Territories the right to vote for certain officers, and members of the Legislature; but Congress did not derive any power from the Constitution directly by any words contained in it to confer the right of suffrage upon the people of the Territories. Congress has governed the Territories outside the Constitution from the beginning. The right to confer suffrage upon the people of the Territories is derived not from the Constitution but from the ordinance of 1787. Anterior to the adoption of the present Constitution, the ordinance of 1787 regulating the government of the territory northwest of the Ohio was adopted—adopted as a league, as a treaty, as a contract, as a covenant, between the several States; and therein it was stipulated in express terms that the people of that territory should have the right to vote for certain officers, but it was also stipulated that certain other officers Congress should have the power to appoint; that is, the Congress of the Confederation. When the present Constitution was adopted there was legislation adapting the provisions of that ordinance to the Constitution, and from that day to this, all officers which that ordinance stipulated should be appointed by Congress have been appointed by the President, as for example the governor, judges, and other high and important officers of the Territory. The people have the right conferred upon them to elect their members of the Legislature, and that is the only right of suffrage conferred. In support of what I say I now wish to call attention to the ordinance of 1787. That ordinance provides touching the Territory northwest of the Ohio as follows:

Be it ordained by the authority aforesaid, That there shall be appointed from time to time, by Congress, a governor, whose commission shall continue in force for the term of three years, unless sooner revoked by Congress; he shall reside in the district, and have a freehold estate therein, in one thousand acres of land, while in the exercise of his office.

Thus it was provided in terms that Congress should appoint the governor, and another clause provides for the like appointment of other officers, judges, and others.

That ordinance further provides touching suffrage in these words:

So soon as there shall be five thousand free male inhabitants, of full age, in the district, upon giving proof thereof to the governor, they shall receive authority, with time and place, to elect representatives from their counties or townships to represent them in the General Assembly: Provided, That for every five hundred free male inhabitants there shall be one representative, and so on progressively with the number of free male inhabitants shall the right of representation increase, until the number of representatives shall amount to twenty-five; after which the number and proportion of representatives shall be regulated by the Legislature.

I read that clause to show that by that ordinance it was expressly stipulated and provided that the people of that Territory should have the right to vote. It was further provided:

It is hereby ordained and declared by the authority aforesaid, That the following articles shall be considered as articles of compact between the original States, and the people and States in the said Territory, and forever remain unalterable, unless by common consent, &c.

Going on to make many provisions touching the rights of the people in the Territory.

By the deed of cession from the State of North Carolina to the United States, it was expressly stipulated, and that stipulation was executed by an act of Congress afterward, that the territory southwest of the river Ohio should have the benefit of this ordinance; and it was further stipulated in the cession of the Mississippi Territory by Georgia that the people of that Territory should have like benefit of this ordinance. When the subject of the Territories first came up in Congress the question that I am now discussing was raised as to the power of Congress to confer suffrage on the people in the Territories, and it was debated at great length. I propose to refer briefly to the action then taken, to show how Congress then regarded the authority for the right. I read now from the Abridgment of Debates of Congress by Benton at page 530. The debate grew out of the admission of a Delegate from the territory south of the Ohio. The proceeding had been based on a report in these words:

The House proceeded to consider the report of the committee on the letter from James White inclosing the credentials of his appointment as a representative of the Territory of the United States south of the river Ohio; to which the Committee of the Whole House reported no amendment. Whereupon, the said report being again read at the Clerk's table, was, on the question put thereupon, agreed to by the House as follows:

This is material as showing not only the view but the judgment of Congress touching that matter at that time, which was in 1794. The resolve was:

That by the ordinance for the government of the territory of the United States northwest of the river Ohio, section 9, it is provided "that so soon as there shall be five thousand free male inhabitants of full age in the district, upon giving proof thereof to the governor, they shall receive authority to elect representatives to represent them in a General Assembly;" and by the twelfth section of the ordinance, "as soon as a Legislature shall be formed in the district, the council and house, assembled in one room, shall have authority, by joint ballot, to elect a Delegate to Congress, who shall have a seat in Congress with the right of debating but not of voting, during this temporary government." Full effect is given to this ordinance by act of Congress August 7, 1789.

That, by the deed of cession of the territory south of the river Ohio, to the United States, in the fourth article, it is also provided "that the inhabitants of the said territory shall enjoy all the privileges, benefits, and advantages set forth in the ordinance of the late Congress for the government of the western territory; that is to say, Congress shall assume the government of the said territory, which they shall execute in a manner similar to that which they support in the territory west of the Ohio, and shall never bar or deprive them of any privilege which the people in the territory west of the Ohio enjoy."

Now, I wish to refer further to the exposition of this matter by the late Senator Benton, and it seems to me that it ought to have a very great weight; for of all the public men who have honored this country I know of none who had more general information concerning the history, politics, and legislation of the country than himself. On Friday, November 18, 1803,—

On motion of Mr. Poindexter, the House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on the bill concerning territorial governments.

Then a long debate occurred in which the question now under debate was discussed at great length, and the power of Congress to confer the right of suffrage was discussed, and it was held that such right did exist; not by virtue of the Constitution, but by virtue of the ordinance of 1789, to which I have referred. I beg now to read the note of Colonel Benton, appended to the report of the debate. It is interesting as giving a brief history of the power of Congress over the Territories and the source from which that power is derived. It appears that it is not derived from any constitutional provision, but from the ordinance to which I have alluded.

This ordinance of the Congress of the Confederation, which became the basis of all the territorial governments, was sanctioned by the Congress of the Union at its first session, with certain provisions added to it in order to give it full effect under the Constitution. The following are the terms of this enactment:

"Whereas, that the ordinance of the United States in Congress assembled for the government of the Territory northwest of the river Ohio may continue to have full affect, it is requisite that certain provisions should be made so as to adapt the same to the present Constitution of the United States: Therefore,

"Be it enacted, &c., That in all cases in which, by the said ordinance, any information is to be given or communication made by the governor of the said Territory to the United States in Congress assembled or to any of their officers, it shall be the duty of the said governor to give such information and to make such communication to the President of the United States; and the President shall nominate, and by and with the consent of the Senate shall appoint, all officers which by the said ordinance were to have been appointed by the United States in Congress assembled, and all officers so appointed shall be commissioned by him; and in all cases where the United States in Congress assembled might by the said ordinance revoke any commission or remove from any office, the President is hereby declared to have the same power of revocation and removal.

"SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That in case of the death, removal, resignation, or necessary absence of the governor of the said Territory, the secretary thereof shall be, and he is hereby, authorized and required to execute all the powers and perform all the duties of the governor during the vacancy occasioned by the removal, resignation, or necessary absence of said governor."

Now follow his comments; and I beg Senators who are confident in their opinion contrary to that which I have expressed to listen:

This act of Congress, passed to give full effect to this ordinance by adapting it to the new Federal Constitution, was among the earliest acts of the Federal Congress, being No. 8 in the list of acts passed at the first session of the First Congress, and classed with the acts necessary to the working of the new Government. As such it was modified, and as such preserved and applied to successive Territories, as governments for them were given. That ordinance is, in fact, the basis of all the territorial governments, and is extended to each of them by name, with such modifications as each one required, and its benefits secured in their deeds of territorial cession by Georgia and North Carolina. Thus, the fifth clause in the first article of the Georgia deed of cession, dated April 24, 1802, stipulates, "that the Territory thus ceded shall form a State, and be admitted as such into the Union as soon as it shall contain sixty thousand free inhabitants, or at an earlier period if Congress shall think it expedient, on the same conditions and restrictions, with the same privileges, and in the same manner, as is provided in the ordinance of Congress of the 13th day of July, 1787, for the government of the Western Territory of the United States; which ordinance shall, in all its parts, extend to the Mississippi Territory contained in the present act of cession, that article only excepted which forbids slavery." The deed of cession from North Carolina, for the territory since forming the State of Tennessee, and dated December —, 1789, is equally express in claiming the benefits of this ordinance; so that, made before the constitution, it has been equally sanctioned by Congress and by States since. Virginia sanctioned it immediately after its enactment and before the commencement of the present Federal Government, to wit, on the 30th day of December, 1788. The ordinance, being thus anterior to the Constitution, was not formed under it, but under the authority of owners—sovereign owners—exercising the right of taking care of their own property, subject only to the conditions and limitations which accompanied its acquisition.

Now I call special attention to the following remark, as containing peculiar and striking significance:

And thus the Territories have been constantly governed independently of the Constitution and incompatibly with it, and by a statute made before it, and merely extended as a pre-existing law to each Territory as it came into existence.

Then, in commenting upon this same ordinance, a lawyer of great distinction—Judge Tucker, of Virginia—made these remarks:

Congress, under the former Confederation, passed an ordinance July 13, 1787, for the government of the Territory of the United States northwest of the Ohio, which contained, among other things, six articles, which were to be considered as articles of compact between the original States and the people and States of said Territory, and to remain unalterable, except by common consent. These articles appear to have been confirmed by the sixth article of the Constitution, which declares that all debts contracted and engagements entered into before the adoption of the Constitution shall be as valid against the United States under the Constitution as under the Confederation.

So that this eminent judge regarded that ordinance as the basis or ground of power to govern the Territories.

That provision of the Constitution which ratifies that ordinance and makes it binding on the United States, and which has secured to this day the right of the people in that Territory to suffrage, is in these words.

ARTICLE VI.

All debts contracted and engagements entered into before the adoption of this Constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this Constitution as under the Confederation.

So that the Senator from Iowa can claim very little weight from the hasty opinion which fell from Mr. Madison under circumstances which I have pointed out; nor can the Senator from Indiana draw any support in favor of this power in Congress from the fact that heretofore Congress has exercised the power to confer suffrage upon the people in the Territories.

Now, sir, I put this question, and I ask any Senator to answer it who can consistently with the views held by the Senators from Iowa and Indiana: The Supreme Court has decided that a justice of the peace in the District of Columbia is an officer of the United States. The Supreme Court has decided that an act of Congress for the benefit of the District of Columbia and regulating it in any respect is not a local law, but is a law of the United States. It is proposed now to pass a law providing for certain commissioners or regents, or for a mayor or some other officer or officers to govern the city. According to the judicial exposition of the Constitution of the United States that mayor or those regents or those commissioners will, if provided for, be officers of the United States. If they are officers of the United States, and I take it that cannot be denied, then I ask anybody to show me any authority in Congress to confer on the people of the District of Columbia the right to elect them, and I ask him to show me any clause of the Constitution which abridges the power of the President to appoint those officers as well as any others. The Constitution provides that the President, after enumerating certain officers, shall appoint "all other officers of the United States."

I have spoken hastily, but I think I have made the point I intended to make.

Mr. President, I have nothing further to say, and in conclusion I respectfully challenge my friend from Iowa or anybody else to show the contrary.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Now I trust we shall have a vote on this proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER, (Mr. ANTHONY in the chair.) The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Indiana, [Mr. MORTON.]

Mr. MORTON. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and being taken, resulted—yeas 28, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Alcorn, Boreman, Boutwell, Clayton, Conkling, Edmunds, Fenton, Ferry of Michigan, Flanagan, Frelinghuysen, Hamilton of Texas, Hamlin, Harvey, Hitchcock, Howe, Mitchell, Morton, Oglesby, Patterson, Pease, Ramsey, Robertson, Sherman, Spencer, Sprague, Washburn, West, and Wright—28.

NAYS—Messrs. Allison, Bayard, Cooper, Davis, Dennis, Gilbert, Goldthwaite, Gordon, Hager, Hamilton of Maryland, Ingalls, Kelly, McCreery, Merrimon, Morrill of Maine, Morrill of Vermont, Pratt, Ransom, Sargent, Saulsbury, Schurz, Scott, Stevenson, Stewart, Stockton, Thurman, Tipton, and Wadleigh—23.

So the motion was not agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT. I gave notice yesterday of an amendment that I should offer which was read at the Clerk's desk, and I now offer that amendment.

Mr. MORTON. I hope the Senator will not offer that until I offer another amendment on this same subject.

Mr. SARGENT. This relates to the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from California will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. The proposed amendment is on page 126 to insert the following as section 67:

That there shall be elected, by written or printed ballot, in said District, by the duly registered and qualified voters thereof, on the first Tuesday following the first Monday of June, in the year 1875, and on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November, in the year 1876, and on every such Tuesday in November in each alternate year thereafter, one person, to be a Delegate, to represent said District in Congress for the term of two years from the first day of the then next December. Each legal voter may cast for said Delegate one ballot, on which there shall be but one name once written or printed, and the person having the largest number of ballots shall be, and be declared, elected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What good is that amendment going to do? I should like to have the Senator from California explain it. This Delegate is not to do anything about governing the District, as far as I can see.

Mr. SARGENT. I cannot hear the Senator on account of the confusion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please resume their seats. Business will be suspended until it shall be the pleasure of the Senate to be in order. It is impossible for Senators to make themselves heard in the present condition of the Hall. [After a pause.] The Senator from Vermont will proceed.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am not at all surprised at the little disorder at this present moment. It is true in all parties and certainly in the democratic one, that where a victory has been obtained there should be a little rejoicing, and therefore I am not in the least disappointed at finding that there is a little confusion just now; but I rose to ask the Senator from California what specific advantage this delegate business would be in respect of the government of this District. It is a new invention, which came in with the Government that we overturned last year and that went upon the territorial theory. This bill goes upon the municipal or commission theory; as it stands, the commission theory really. Now, to undertake to govern this city by a commission, in the selection of which the people of it have no choice at all, and then turn them off with a tail to this kite which says they may have a Delegate in Congress, it appears to me, is rather an ineffectual and unsatisfactory affair. It may be that the Senator from California can suggest some useful and necessary purpose which is to be attained by authorizing the people of the District to elect a Delegate to sit in the House of Representatives when all the government that they are to have is to be a government of a certain number of men selected by the President of the United States. If there is any good reason for this, I should be glad to have it stated. Is it a compliment, or is it an essential and valuable fact?

Mr. SARGENT. There are three reasons that influenced me in offering this amendment. First in order, if not in importance, is that the people of the District by petitions have asked for it very generally. The bills which they have favored by their petitions have contained this clause, and those who petition for the bill which was offered by the Senator from Maine from the special committee ask that this provision may be incorporated in it.

The second reason why I offered it was that I thought it was of value to the people of the District to have an opportunity to make known their wants to one of the Houses of Congress. There is no precedent whatever by which they could make known those wants upon the floor of this body. In the House of Representatives it is not unusual—in fact it is entirely usual to allow bodies of people who are not States or parts of States to have this kind of representation; consequently we have the precedent established and followed for a great many years. There are in this District at present more people than in any organized Territory of the United States, which has not been admitted to the fellowship of States. It would seem that so large a body of people should have the opportunity to make known their wants to Congress in the same way that we provide by the precedents to which I refer for the people of the Territories.

I would like further to remark that in my judgment the delegate system has worked well for this District; that is to say, I think there have been improvements in many of the laws of the District brought about by the arguments of the Delegate on the floor of the other House. I do not refer to the frame of government, I do not refer to the functions of the board of public works, or any particular board; but I refer to the criminal jurisprudence and legislation of that nature. Certainly he has been useful in that particular—useful partially, undoubtedly, because he is an able gentleman, but also useful from the fact that he had access to the ears of Congress to make known the wants of his District.

The third reason why I offered this amendment was that I thought we should recognize in some form the suffrage of the people of this District. I thought we ought not to abandon the experiment of suffrage entirely in this District. It seemed to me that it was entirely constitutional for us to have it in this form. Some doubts have been raised as to the constitutionality of a municipal government here; but I think no one can say that we have not a right to allow the people of the District to petition Congress and to say that the person they delegate to present their petition shall have the privilege of the floor of the House of Representatives. That certainly is constitutional, and that is what is provided by this amendment.

Now, if Senators who propose that the form of government here shall be strictly municipal and entirely elective by the people of the District because that cannot be conceded say nothing else shall be allowed, I certainly cannot agree with them in that proposition, although I assent to their entire right so to vote and so to think. But it seems to me that in the absence of the greater provision, this lesser one is in the same direction, and therefore it commends itself to my judgment.

I did not rise to elaborate upon these matters, but simply to state the reasons which are called for; because I fear that discussion may take away the opportunity for legislation for the District of Columbia which I deem very necessary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should be very sorry to have discussion take away the opportunity to pass good laws, but I have sometimes been taught to suppose that discussion was a pretty good way to prevent the passage of bad ones as well as to promote the passage of good ones.

The Senator says that this relieves the bill of constitutional doubts which existed respecting the amendment offered by the Senator from Indiana. Do I understand the Senator from California to say that he has any constitutional doubts?

Mr. SARGENT. No, I do not say that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think it would take a good deal of pressure to persuade him to have a constitutional doubt upon a uniform construction of the Constitution for a period of seventy-five years or more upon a topic of that kind. Nothing but a very highly cultivated intellect indeed, very largely stored with judicial lore, I think could bring itself up to the point of having any particular constitutional doubts on the subject of allowing a municipality in a territory over which Congress has exclusive legislation to select its local officers. Every one of the States I believe possesses sovereign legislative power, just as sovereign over their territory as that of Congress over this District; and yet it has always been supposed (though I presume it will begin to be doubted now) that the Legislatures of the various States could incorporate cities and could permit to them municipal government by agents selected by the people.

But I do not need to discuss that question. What I think will be the practical effect of this amendment will be a heavy and useless expense to the people of this District, by registration and voting expenses and the excitements of a contest, without any practical benefit or advantage whatever; and the effect it will have among the intelligent people of the country, I think, will be that Congress, in a city where it exercises sway, has determined that it will not allow the people to have any voice in the active administration of their affairs, and in order to persuade people who do not look a great ways around the country that it has not interfered with suffrage on the ground that the people of this District are incapable of exercising it, gives them this form, this flourish of a trumpet. We do this in order to convince people that we stand by the ideas of personal liberty, of personal self-government in every place where we can, by saying that the people shall not in any respect whatever have a voice in their government, but their right of suffrage shall be guaranteed by their being allowed to vote for a man in the moon. That is about it. The right of suffrage is a dear, a sacred right. We all agree to that, of all parties. The fifteenth amendment says so, and of course that demonstrates it, unless doubts should be raised about its constitutionality, which may be, I suppose. It being a sacred right, its sacredness is made effectual by saying that the men who possess it shall not exercise it for any effectual purpose whatever. They may vote for an ornamental person who can do nothing but can say everything in one end of the Capitol; but when it comes to voting for the assessors of taxes, for superintendents of streets, or any other things that a free people vote for in every other part of the country, it will not do.

Mr. President, if I were in some other chamber than this, I should say that that device—and I do not use the term "device" in any offensive sense, but in its appropriate and proper sense—is rather thin. I know my honorable friend from California does not intend it as a device. He has defined exactly what his position is, that he wishes to save the principle; and the contrivance to which he resorts to save the principle is one that I think will manifest itself to the people of the United States as being a back-handed way of saying that the people of this District are unfit to be trusted with the management of any part of their municipal affairs, but yet their right of suffrage is so sacred that they must exercise it by voting for a piece of moonshine. I do not believe this the right thing to do, Mr. President; and when you come to the analogy of the Territories I submit to my friend that there is no just analogy at all. Territories are inchoate States; they are organized with a view that they shall become, as they ripen, States. They are intrusted with self-government; they have relations, which relate to the administration of their laws and the affirmation or rejection of them, with the Congress of the United States; so that they are component parts of the political family, although not States. Therefore there is a fitness that they should be represented by the voice of their people in the Congress of the United States and be brought into such relations. But if you were to deprive one of these Territories of every faculty of self-government and say it should be governed by a military commission, and then should have a Delegate in Congress, you would have a case perhaps in point. But we have never said that. Here we are to say now that this city, intrusted with no faculty of self-government at all, shall nevertheless put itself to the expense of electing a Delegate to Congress, in order that on the floor of Congress he may speak to the members touching legislation. We all know practically that anybody, if he is the humblest citizen who walks the streets, who feels an interest in any legislation that affects him or his people or his neighborhood, can get at any one of us and every member of the House of Representatives; and such persons do appeal to us day in and day out, night in and night out, early and late, as in a free country it should be. There is no divinity that hedges our persons from the approach of our fellow-citizens who have any business or matters pending before us. Certainly there is no divinity that hedges mine, I know very surely, and I think every Senator can say the same for himself. So the idea that this is necessary in order that the people of the District may be free to communicate to one of the Houses of Congress what they wish respecting the administration of their local affairs, and not through this commission that we are to have, it seems to me, falls to the ground.

My friend's third want is the real one, I think, and that is that while we deny the substance of suffrage we are to keep up the form in order to save the principle. It seems to me that it sacrifices the principle instead of saving it.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. That this proposition is no part of the bill as it came from the committee is obvious from the fact that it is an amendment proposed in the Senate. But I am nevertheless inclined to support it, notwithstanding the criticisms of my honorable friend from Vermont. I can do it without any sacrifice of opinion which I have expressed on the bill, because this Delegate will not be an officer in any constitutional sense.

I shall support it for another reason; because the people of this District, in lieu of choosing its executive officers, have asked for this very numerous by their petitions which I hold in my hands, embracing the names of a great number of citizens. They ask it in lieu of the election of commissioners, and say they are content with that, and desire the government as it would stand with this Delegate; and for that reason chiefly, indeed wholly, I am disposed to vote for the amendment. It does not impinge in any sense the efficiency of this bill; it does not interfere with it at all; and although it may be in some sense what my honorable friend from Vermont declares it to be—and I am inclined to think it is—still it is in a sense a compromise with the people here who ask it, and ask it in lieu of the election of officers whose appointment I deem to be important.

Now, Mr. President, I am not going to be led into the debate upon the principles of this bill, but I will make a single remark with reference to what has fallen from the Senator from Vermont about the question of suffrage, upon which so much has been said in these days one way or another. It has been said that we are violating the principle of suffrage, and an appeal has been made to the fifteenth constitutional amendment, as if that had rendered it in some sense sacred, and as if we were in danger of flying in the face of the constitutional amendment on suffrage. Does that declare any such thing. Has anybody ever read the constitutional amendment in that sense? It is simply a negation in the Constitution of the United States that the right of suffrage in the States shall not be denied. That is all it is. It does not touch this question, or come within gunshot of it. It has nothing to do with it. What we are doing here does not impinge or violate in any sense whatever the constitutional amendment to which reference has been made. It has no relation to it, and that has no application to this question in any sense whatever.

I think I am as sensitive as most men about the rights of local self-government. In no instance in my history have I ever given a vote or consented to a proposition which infringed it in any sense, nor would I be guilty of it here. But on a question of good government for this District, I do not allow myself to hesitate about what I will do for fear somebody will mistake us in supposing that what I do not believe is possible to take place is likely to take place in this instance. Nor am I to be frightened from my sense of propriety on this subject because it is said we are likely to be misunderstood in the country. I do not believe any such thing. Are we in a condition to be over sensitive about the exercise of this power, let me ask Senators? What is the government here to-day? Representative? If we are in danger of crucifying suffrage, what has been done already by this Congress? Did we not in a most arbitrary sense overthrow the District government absolutely and unqualifiedly, and put this people under the control of three commissioners without the guards and limitations that are provided in this bill? Is not that the spectacle here to-day? Did any Senator suppose last year when that bill was enacted that we were violating the constitutional amendment in regard to suffrage or any principle of suffrage in this District? Was it hinted at by anybody? Did not democrats and republicans join in passing that measure? Now, I fancy it is hardly worth while to be squeamish or sensitive after having done that.

Mr. President, I am as indifferent personally as any man can be here or elsewhere as to the fate of this bill. Charged with a duty with other gentlemen, I attempted to perform it as well as I could. Whether the bill is voted up or voted down, I have no interest or concern other than every other Senator is bound to have.

Mr. SARGENT. I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. THURMAN. I will not detain the Senate more than five minutes.

One year ago this Senate, by an almost unanimous vote—I think there were but two or three votes against the bill, and I am not sure that there were that many—abolished the office of Delegate from the District of Columbia in the Congress of the United States saving the term of the present Delegate. No one then insisted upon preserving that office. It seemed to be universally agreed that there was no use for it; and the reasons which influenced us then continue to influence me now.

I concur with the Senator from Vermont that there is no analogy, at least no proper analogy, between the case of a Territory and the case of the District of Columbia. We need a Delegate from a Territory. The Territories are far distant from Washington; one of them is more than fifteen hundred miles from Washington in an air line; and the way we travel the most of them are more than a thousand miles from the seat of Government. We need a Delegate for that reason; and again we need it because of the vast extent of the area of the Territories. Some of them are much larger than the largest State of the Union, excepting Texas always; and it is absolutely necessary that they have some agent here who can represent their wishes and advocate their interests. But the District of Columbia is a small territory, with about seventy square miles, in which the members of Congress reside during the session of the Legislature, and they live in every part of the city, I might say in every part of the District. Their daily intercourse is with the people of the District; and no people in the world have ever been brought in as close contact with their law-makers as are the people of the District of Columbia with their law-makers, the Congress of the United States. There is no State in the Union in which the people are brought so closely into contact with those who make the laws for them as are the people of the District of Columbia with their legislators, the Congress of the United States. There is not a thought they have, there is not a wish they indulge, that cannot be communicated and is not communicated to scores and scores, I might say hundreds of members of Congress in every week. Of all people they are the last who need somebody on the floor of the hall of legislation; for they are here. It is not simply with them the right of petition which the people of the States and the far-distant Territories exercise in the ordinary and formal mode of a written document laid before us; but their petitions come up like our daily prayers; they come up to us all. They come up to us at our homes, they come up to us on the street, they come at social entertainments, they come in the lobbies of Congress, they come into these Halls themselves where their honored citizens are frequently admitted. There is no necessity therefore for a Delegate of this District.

Besides what have we? Each House has its District Committee, its committee specially charged with an investigation of the wants of the District. Instead of having one Delegate you have here seven members of this body charged with attending to the wants and necessities and interests of the people of this District; and so in the other House. They got along extremely well for seventy-odd years without any Delegate. I think it was the universal opinion only one year ago that there was no necessity for preserving that office. I therefore shall vote against the amendment.

Mr. MORTON. Mr. President, I was willing for one to accord a Delegate to this District, but I am not willing to take a Delegate as a substitute for suffrage in the government of this District. The Delegate is only an adviser to consult members; he has no power whatever; and I am not willing to take such a substitute for the real power of governing this District.

Mr. President, we have had an interesting spectacle here this afternoon which ought not to be allowed to pass without some notice. We have had a solid democratic vote here cast against the proposition to elect these commissioners. Our democratic friends have voted solidly to strike down suffrage in this District. They undoubtedly regard it as a good democratic measure. They are glad to begin the work right here, to have the example and the precedent established in this District of striking down suffrage, a precedent that may be found useful elsewhere and at a period not long hence. And as an evidence of the spirit which inspires our democratic friends, as indicated in a former speech of the Senator from Delaware to which I referred yesterday, the distinguished Senator from Ohio is not willing to recognize suffrage even by voting for a Delegate. The Senator from California offers an amendment to elect a Delegate. The particular object of that is to recognize suffrage, although it is a mere empty form and conveys no power. But when it comes to recognizing suffrage even in that mere formal way, the Senator from Ohio, the leader of his party, objects. In other words, suffrage is to be stricken down and there shall be no recognition of it in any form.

Mr. President, if it is to be done in substance, let it be done in form and in shadow. I shall vote against this proposition as it stands now.

Mr. HAMILTON, of Maryland. Mr. President, I shall vote for the proposition to give a Delegate to this District not because I was originally in favor of it, for I did not see the indispensable necessity of it; but it may be very convenient for the people of this District to have a Delegate in our absence, in view of the multiplied duties we have to perform, to attend to the wants of the people of this District and their concerns. We are met on the public streets, it is true, by the people of the District and talked to about their interests; but what they say goes into one ear and out of the next. We meet them in the halls here and listen to their complaints, and that is the end of the thing, for we have our own matters to attend to for our constituents and the great national concerns. In listening to the appeals of the people of this District, I see many ways where a Delegate may be proper and expedient. He can devise and frame bills when we are not here.

It is not my purpose to detain the Senate, because I want a vote on this bill; but I go for this proposition though I voted last year for the abolition of the Delegate. I did not see the indispensable necessity of such an office, and I wanted to save wherever I could. I voted for the abolition of the office last year and I do not care about it now; but I desire to meet, if I can, upon common ground. There is a desire of some of the friends of this bill that there should be a Delegate. What does it amount to? It amounts to $5,000 a year in cost, and I think the bill is worth more than that. Looking at it in its worst aspect, it costing but $5,000 a year to keep him here, I deem this bill in its important consequences to the people of this District as infinitely preferable to the saving of that $5,000. In other words, we pay cheaply for the proposition, and he may afford some convenience to his people and attend to their special interests.

Then, willing to meet on common ground, willing to give and take, as we must do in matters of importance like this, I shall vote for the amendment. It is a matter of grave importance to the people of this District to have this bill pass. It is discreditable to us that we undertake to legislate for the South, and the whole country, and yet cannot legislate for the District of Columbia to-day or during the whole session for the last five years. We must meet on common ground and have a definite policy of government, and this bill proposes to give it. There are some features of the bill that I do not like any more than other gentlemen on this floor, but we must take it altogether or not take it at all. By the leading, general principles of the bill, this District will be benefited; and to secure its passage, as I am willing to give and take, I shall vote for the amendment of the Senator from California.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, my chief reason for voting for this bill at last, and I will do it, I hope, to-night, is because there is no other recourse. It is absolutely indispensable that before we adjourn there should be some government for this District, some provision for levying taxes, maintaining a police, and continuing the ordinary functions of a municipal government. This bill is the only opportunity to have such an organization. It is manifest, therefore, that it is the duty of Congress before we adjourn to pass in some form on this subject, and I think the Senate should act to-night or the chance may be gone. We can do no better than to take a bill that has been carefully prepared by a committee of Congress, that has been before us, and that every member of Congress and every citizen in the District has had an opportunity to read, to study, and to see how far it protects his interest. I have conversed with several people who live in this District and they are generally content with the provisions of this bill. I do not like it; I do not like the idea of conferring the whole power of this District upon three regents and upon persons appointed by them. Therefore I voted for the proposition of the Senator from Indiana, but it was lost. We ought not for that reason to embarrass or oppose this bill by numerous amendments likely to lead to debate, or to defeat the bill. Some government for this District is indispensable to the people here, and this is the only proposition now of a practical form to secure a government which will give to some proper authority the power to levy taxes, maintain a police, and to do those indispensable things which are necessary for preserving order and society in this District.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We have maintained a police during the past year without this bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I have this to say in reply to my friend from Vermont: If the existing law had machinery sufficient so that the present commissioners could go on and levy taxes regularly, according to law, I should rather be disposed to let the present state of affairs go on; but I am informed, and the Senator from Vermont knows it very well, that under the law as it now stands these commissioners could not levy taxes, could not maintain the necessary police, without considerable legislation and in a new form. This is the only opportunity we shall probably have to give to the people of the District a local government, and although I do not believe it is wise in our system of government to confer all the powers in a municipal government upon persons appointed by executive authority, yet I prefer to vote for this bill rather than defeat all measures on the subject. At the next session of Congress I have no doubt whatever if Congress has time, and can take up this single subject, it will take away from the President of the United States the power of appointing these commissioners and trust their election to the people who are to be affected by their authority.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is certainly a very strong argument against passing this bill now. If we believe with the Senator from Ohio that this bill is wrong in this respect and that we expect the very next Congress to reverse our action, it will be much better for us not to do it. He is impelled to do that, he says, because the present rulers of this District have no power themselves to levy taxes. We knew that last year when we appointed them, and we levied the taxes. Congress certainly has power to levy taxes, and a bill of twenty lines can provide for levying either 1 per cent. or 2 per cent. or 3 per cent., whatever the committee having the matter in charge may think is just and necessary taxation. Then all you have got to do is to tell these commissioners to collect it. There is not any difficulty about that. And if this scheme is not right as a permanent scheme, we ought to wait until we can get one that is right. We tried the experiment of going off at a tangent only three or four years ago on the territorial government, and we found that that would not work; that it plunged the District into disaster and debt. Therefore we dissolved it and provided a temporary means of carrying on the government of the District until Congress could have ample time to wind up the affairs of the old corporation and carefully consider what step next ought to be taken. Now the Senator says this is not the step that ought to be taken. I think so too. And yet he says we had better pass it, set up this new machine, having just got rid of a bad one, and trust to next year to take it all to pieces and put it together again. I do not think that is the best way to legislate.

I sincerely believe myself, independent of all questions of suffrage, which are important, very important, that the best thing we can do for the people of this District now, the property-holders here, and for peace and good order and economy, is to just pass the simple and brief legislation necessary to continue the existing order of things until the next session of Congress, which is a long one, can have time to consider the suffrage and all the other questions respecting the best mode of governing this city. There is no difficulty about it if we wish to do it; but if we are satisfied that the scheme here presented is the true one, and that it ought to be permanent just as it stands, then of course we must take that.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I desire to say one word in reply to what has fallen from the Senator from Ohio, [Mr. SHERMAN,] that this bill constituted a government in itself absolute and arbitrary in the hands of three regents. That is all we have now, but that is not what this bill provides at all. This bill provides for an executive government, limited and confined to certain executive duties, with power to make such rules and regulations as are necessary to make it efficient, the legislative authority remaining with us all the time. That is all there is about it. The bill is open to amendment, of course.

Mr. MORTON. I beg leave to suggest to my friend from Maine—
Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Let me get through now, and then my honorable friend can make his suggestion.

Mr. MORTON. But just right on that point I wish to make a suggestion.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Very well; go on on that point.
Mr. MORTON. This bill, if I understand it, confers upon these three commissioners the power to make a vast number of ordinances upon a great many subjects. They are not called laws; they are called ordinances; but they are laws to this District.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. Precisely; and so my honorable friend has confessed through the whole of this debate how little he knows about what there is in this bill. He began yesterday, he began early before the holidays and has maintained that up to this time; and he has not read this bill nor one-tenth part of it. The statement he makes now shows that he knows nothing of what he is talking about. These commissioners have power to make certain rules and regulations for their conduct; that is all. It would be refreshing if somebody would talk about this bill who knew something about it, [laughter;] it would be comforting, indeed.

Now I want to pay my respects to my honorable friend from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] whom I love so dearly. Nobody loves to hear a man talk better than I do him. He has tried to alarm us on this side, and more particularly on that, by a supposition that the democrats really are going to do something horrible about this; that they really have a settled purpose now at heart to spring a trap upon us, and the moment this bill is passed to proclaim that we have crucified suffrage in our own home! That is what he means. The democrats are supposed to be hostile to suffrage everywhere; and they mean to commit us to it, every one of them, by voting for this bill! Yet with a most remarkable consistency my honorable friend from Vermont says, "Let us turn this over to the democrats of the next House of Representatives; they will fix it up; do not let us do anything now but turn it over to the good days that are coming in the House of Representatives of the next year." [Laughter.] Whoever puts this lamb to nursing in that House of Representatives next year has more faith in the good things that are coming than I have; and that is the attitude my honorable friend takes. Here is a bill that has no partisan politics in it, and by no possibility can you make it partisan, and if the democrats vote for this bill with any partisan purposes in regard to this District, they will put their foot in it, I give them notice. This bill is tied up so that when good men are in office you cannot get those good men out for six years, and if by any possibility or mistake of the people, or misapprehension, or sleepiness, or drowsiness, they allow the democrats to come into power in 1876, before this tenure expires, of course we shall have them out, and in the mean time this government will remain neutral, out of politics, a government securing to this people an economical administration of affairs, with no jobs possible. To be sure, those who stand at the corners and want to run the machine will not have any opportunity to do it; but so far as good government is concerned, so far as economy is concerned, and so far as placing this capital upon a common ground where, independent of party, we shall have good government, this bill accomplishes it. I beseech the friends of good government in this District to stand by this bill for that purpose, and pray them not to trust the question of suffrage, by a postponement of this measure, to the tender mercies of the House of Representatives of next year.

Mr. CRAGIN. Mr. President, I did not suppose I should be induced to say a word on this bill, and I rise now only to say a word; I shall be brief. The Senator from Vermont, as I understand, places the organized Territories of the United States much higher than he does the District of Columbia so far as their rights and their future prospects are concerned. There are two familiar provisions of the Constitution which every member of the Senate remembers, but I would like to read a passage from each of them, and then call attention to the situation of the Territories in this country. First:

The Congress shall have power * * * to exercise exclusive legislation in all cases whatsoever over such District.

That applies to the District of Columbia. Again:

The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

Under that last clause, what has been done? Do the people of the Territories elect their own officers? Not at all. The President appoints the governor and the Senate confirms him. The President appoints the secretary of the Territory to be confirmed by the Senate. The President appoints the marshal of the Territory, to be confirmed by the Senate. The President appoints all the judges in each one of the Territories, to be confirmed by the Senate. It is true that the Territories have the right to elect the members of their Legislative Assembly, but Congress has the right to nullify every yact which they may pass. It is also true that they elect a Delegate to Congress. That is the extent of suffrage allowed in the Territories, and with this amendment adopted, applying it to this bill with the other provisions of the bill, the people of this District will have as much right of suffrage as the people of the Territories.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does not the Senator know that the people of the Territories elect a Legislature?

Mr. CRAGIN. I so said.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then will electing a Delegate here give the people of this District as much suffrage as the people of the Territories?

Mr. CRAGIN. But I said also that Congress had the power to nullify every act of a territorial Legislature. Congress has the exclusive legislative control over this District. It is the only body that can pass laws. Therefore the District of Columbia cannot properly, in my judgment, have a Legislature. I can see no possible objection to this measure.

Mr. MORTON. I was somewhat surprised by the remarks of my friend from Maine a few minutes ago. His broad and sweeping declarations were not I think in the main courteous, but I pass that by. He made the declaration, however, that these regents or commissioners were not invested with any power to make laws; that they had simply executive authority and no legislative authority. He said that all they could do was to make some regulations to govern themselves, if I understood him, but they had no power to legislate for this District. Now, I understand that this bill confers upon these three men all the power to legislate for this District that was conferred upon the territorial Legislature by the former act, more than was ever conferred upon the mayor and common council by any former act, and that it confers upon these three men the power to legislate in all respects for this District, except such as may be reserved especially to other officers or Departments of the Government.

Section 6 provides:

That all the authority hereby conferred or sanctioned belongs to said regents, and may be exercised by them in their discretion, in such measure and appropriate manner, and in such parts of said District, as the public welfare may require and as may be within the scope of this act, consistent with laws which it leaves in force, and with the Constitution of the United States; except that such parts of said authority as are herein expressly conferred upon some head of a Bureau, or other officer, herein mentioned, are to be, in like manner, exercised by said Bureau or other officers. And the entire authority aforesaid is intended to include all the authority falling within the scope, and consistent with the frame, of the government hereby created, now exercised by any other Department of the Government of the United States, or by any officer or body in said District, for the purpose of local government within and for the said District; but said authority will not include any authority belonging to any other Department or officer of the Government of the United States, in respect to the public offices or buildings of, or in charge of, any such Department or officer, or any authority belonging to such Department or officer, so far as the same does not relate to the mere local government of said District; nor will it include authority over or as to the public grounds adjacent to the buildings aforesaid, or any judicial authority, or authority in regard to juries, or to the practice or rules of courts, save to the extent that such authority is hereinafter specifically conferred upon some head of a Bureau, or other officer or court herein provided for; nor will the authority hereby conferred include that now belonging to the United States district attorney or marshal of said District, to the warden of the jail, to the register of wills, to the recorder of deeds, to postmasters, &c.

In other words, they are to have all the authority that is not covered by the limitation herein mentioned. The bill goes on to provide:

That the authority of making, publishing, amending, abrogating, and promulgating ordinances shall belong exclusively to said regents; and they may exercise the same in aid of the powers hereby conferred to check vice and immorality and to enforce obedience to this act, but always consistent herewith, as they shall deem best for the public welfare. Whenever any head of a Bureau shall in writing propose the form of an ordinance to be adopted, or propose that an existing ordinance be amended or abrogated, it shall be the duty of said regents to give such head of a Bureau a prompt public hearing in respect to such proposal, and to thereafter, without unreasonable delay, decide upon such proposal; and the vote of each of said regents present and authorized to act thereon shall be taken and be recorded by the secretary of said regents. And said regents shall have the like authority and duty in regard to regulations, (except as herein otherwise provided;) but before exercising the power of amending or abrogating any regulation herein authorized to be adopted by any head of a bureau, tribunal, or other officer, said regents shall give the Bureau, tribunal, or officer which adopted the same a fair opportunity of being heard in respect thereto before said regents, and the vote upon the same shall be taken and recorded in manner aforesaid as to ordinances. So far as the authority over regulations belongs to said regents, it shall be so exercised as to secure in the largest degree practicable the orderly and efficient discharge of official duty by all officers, (except judicial officers and officers who belong to some other Department of the General Government,) herein mentioned, whose functions are confined to the affairs of said District, in conformity to regulations open to the public and explicitly providing for the manner of the discharge of such duties. Said regents may in any ordinance declare what and how much shall be the penalty for violating any ordinance or ordinances referred to; and no penalty shall be fixed at more than $100; but a double penalty may be fixed for repeated and willful violations of the same ordinance. Whoever shall violate any legal ordinance made and promulgated hereunder shall be liable for the penalty so fixed for any violation thereof; and such penalty may be recovered in a civil suit in the name of said District, as said regents may authorize. But in any instance any said penalty may be regarded as in the nature of a fine, and the same may be enforced and collected as any other fine in the police court. An action claiming any penalty or penalties not exceeding $250 in the aggregate may be instituted in the municipal court herein provided for, and any such court shall have jurisdiction thereof; and any action for any penalties, either for violating one ordinance several times or for violating different ordinances, if for the recovery of more than $250, may in like manner be instituted before the supreme court of said District, &c.

I will not take the time to run over all these regulations, but they comprehend, provide for, and contemplate a vast body of municipal legislation, the power to abrogate municipal regulations now existing, adopted by former councils or adopted by the Territorial Legislature, to alter them or to make new ones. My friend from Maine has not read this bill. There is where the mistake is. I believe my friend has never been credited by the community with having drawn the bill. I heard it suggested that the man who wrote it read it, and nobody else. I am inclined to think my friend from Maine has not gone over this bill as carefully as he ought to have done.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I did not intend anything offensive to my honorable friend who sits near me—he is too near a neighbor for that—but I did intend to say what I did say, disclaiming all intent of discourtesy. I did not lose my temper about it yesterday when he alluded most offensively to my connection with this bill, and I am sorry he is incapable of retaining his this afternoon. I intended no offense to the Senator. I said what I have no doubt is true, what the honorable Senator in replying to me does not deny, that he has not read this bill and does not know what it contains; and when the honorable Senator intimates to the Senate here that I have not read it, he says what is gratuitous and what is not true. Whether he thinks that is offensive or not, charged with an important duty as I was, it would be shameful in me to present such a bill to the Senate not knowing what it is. If the Senator desires to learn what I know about it, he had better interrogate me, find out, if he can, what is in this bill, and then to that end catechise me and see what I know about it. I know as much on other points of this bill as that on which I criticize him; and I stand here to repeat what I said before, that there are no legislative powers in this bill, none at all; all the legislative power is in Congress. We have devolved upon this board the power to make such rules and regulations, acting always within the scope of this bill and the laws now in force and which Congress may hereafter enact, as will enable them to make their duties efficient. That is all; and that is exactly what the honorable Senator has read, and misapprehended its meaning entirely in reading it and in the conclusion to which he comes.

I repeat, I have no feeling on this subject with my honorable friend, or as to what the Senate shall do with this bill. I believe that it provides for a good government. With singular felicity the four persons who were delegated to draw up this bill were unanimous in its adoption and in recommending it. But it is not for me to stand here and commend it. I only ask for it the consideration of the Senate. It is for the Senate to decide when they come to consider it and know what it is; and if they say it is not worth while to pass it, that is for the Senate, not for me. I shall not be offended. I have no occasion to be offended, and should not be.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Several SENATORS. O, no.

Mr. MORRILL, of Maine. I hope not. Let us pass this bill.

The question being put, a division was called for; and the ayes were 23, noes 21.

So the motion was agreed to; and (at five o'clock and twenty-six minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 11, 1875.

The House met at twelve o'clock m. Prayer by Rev. S. B. BARNITZ, of Wheeling, West Virginia.

The Journal of yesterday was read and approved.

J. C. M'BIRNEY.

Mr. DUNNELL, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on Claims, with a recommendation that the same do pass, House bill No. 1023, for the relief of J. C. McBirney, of Georgia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. CALDWELL. I desire to make a statement with reference to an error which appears in the RECORD of February 10. In that RECORD is printed a speech by my colleague, Mr. WHITE, of Alabama, and in that speech there appear divers extracts from newspapers and from letters from individuals. Those extracts were not read at the Clerk's desk, though from the RECORD they purport to have been read by the Clerk. I call attention to that error in order that the House and the country may know that such extracts were not read, and such sentiments following them as are there printed were not uttered in this House, or they would have been answered then, by interrogatory, if in no other manner, by other members of the Alabama delegation.

ANDREW TEN BROECK.

Mr. BANNING, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back House bill No. 3997, for the relief of Andrew Ten Broeck, late consul of the United States at Munich; and moved that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the same, and that it be laid on the table.

The motion was agreed to; and the report accompanying the bill was ordered to be printed.

TAX ON TOBACCO.

Mr. BANNING also, by unanimous consent, submitted the following; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD:

To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives in Congress assembled:

We, the undersigned, manufacturers and dealers in tobacco, of Cincinnati, Ohio, would very respectfully but earnestly petition your honorable bodies to make no advance on the existing rate of tax upon tobacco, for the following among many other reasons which could be given:

First. Tobacco, on the average value of the entire amount which enters into consumption, is now more heavily taxed than any other article, either of domestic or foreign production.

Second. The great preponderance of this tax falls upon the laboring portion of the community, the consumers of cheap tobacco, who not only pay the tax but about 50 per cent. additional caused by the expense of packing in accordance with the requirements of law, and the interest upon the tax which is paid in advance.

Third. It must be apparent, from the repeated action of the House of Representatives to abolish all tax upon leaf-tobacco for consumption, that under the general reduction of wages which now exists, a large class of consumers severely feel the burden of this great tax upon an article of home production and which is indispensable to them.

Fourth. The revenue now obtained from tobacco far exceeds in amount that which was contemplated by Government during the highest days of taxation, when the currency and all business was greatly inflated; and when it is remembered that every reduction of this tax resulted in increased revenue, is it not fair to believe that in view of all these evils and difficulties, an advance of the tax now would fail to enrich the Treasury.

TEST OF LOYALTY FOR CLAIMANTS.

Mr. MOREY, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. No. 4682) to repeal joint resolution No. 27, approved March 2, 1867, prohibiting payment by officers of the Government to any person not known to have been opposed to the rebellion; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed.

EQUALIZATION OF BOUNTIES.

Mr. GUNCKEL. The print of House bill No. 334, to equalize bounties, has been exhausted. I ask that the bill be again printed. No objection was made, and it was so ordered.

NATIONAL HOME FOR DISABLED VOLUNTEERS.

Mr. COBURN. I ask unanimous consent to report from the Committee on Military Affairs, for consideration at this time, House joint resolution No. 135, appointing managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers. I think there can be no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. The joint resolution will be read, after which objections will be in order.

The joint resolution provides for the reappointment of the following-named persons as managers of the national home for disabled volunteer soldiers under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act to incorporate a national military and naval asylum for the relief of the totally disabled officers and men of the volunteer forces of the United States,' approved March 21, 1866:" John H. Martindale, of New York; Hugh L. Bond, of Maryland; and Erastus B. Walcott, of Wisconsin; whose terms expired on the 21st of April, 1874.

No objection was made, and the joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

TAX ON TEA AND COFFEE.

Mr. RANDALL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following; which was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on Ways and Means:

To the honorable the members of the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States:

The undersigned, importers of and dealers in tea and coffee, respectfully submit to your honorable bodies that the agitation of the question of the restoration of a duty on tea and coffee is very seriously interfering with the legitimate and natural trade of the country, and humbly pray that all further consideration of said question be indefinitely postponed.

These two articles of commerce have become actual necessities to the bone and sinew of our country, and in our opinion ought to be obtained by them at the lowest possible price, which a duty, if imposed, would largely augment, while it would add but little to the revenues of the country for many months owing to the large stocks now in store in, and heavy supplies afloat for, our principal ports; besides which, its reimposition would benefit no home industry, but simply aid the speculators, who have lately endeavored to control the market, and who now so urgently advocate the measure from self-interest and to save the heavy losses they must otherwise inevitably suffer.

The ability of the working classes to supply themselves with these actual necessities during the past year, owing to the greatly depressed condition of the various industries, (rendering large deductions in their wages imperative where work has been continued, to say nothing of the very many thrown out of employment altogether,) has been much curtailed, and the imposition of a duty thereon would but increase their burdens and add to the destitution and suffering now existing among them.

With a general revival of business, as hoped for this year, together with economy in Government expenditures, the revenues we believe would increase sufficiently to meet all the demands on the Treasury; but should it be deemed necessary to provide for a possible contingency otherwise, we would respectfully suggest that an increased tax on some articles of luxury that would be less distasteful and obnoxious to the masses be levied, to be repealed when the necessity therefor no longer exists.

Your memorialists, as in duty bound, will ever pray, &c.

PHILADELPHIA, February 9, 1875.

SEWALL B. CORBETT.

Mr. DUELL. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of House bill No. 3782, for the relief of Sewall B. Corbett, and that it be considered at this time. It was unanimously reported favorably by the Committee on War Claims.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which objections will be in order.

The bill authorizes the commissioners of claims to receive, examine, and consider the claim of Sewall B. Corbett for timber, including fences actually taken from his land during the rebellion, in Alexandria County, Virginia, and used by the Government military authorities in the erection of forts or for fuel; and to ascertain if he was loyal and adhered to the cause and Government of the United States during the rebellion; the commissioners to make report on said claim as of other claims to Congress.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I will reserve my right to object until some explanation is made of this bill.

Mr. DUELL. It is the unanimous report of the Committee on War Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not that bill now in Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York [Mr. DUELL] asks consent to have the committee discharged from its further consideration and the bill considered in the House at this time. That can be done only by unanimous consent.

Mr. DUELL. I will say to the gentleman that this is a unanimous report from the Committee on War Claims, and the only reason that action by Congress is necessary is the fact that the time has expired within which this man can present his claim to the commissioners of southern claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. The question is not whether this is a meritorious bill, but whether it should be taken up out of its order in preference to all other bills. Still I do not object.

Mr. DUELL. This is a claim of great merit.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. The gentleman says that the bill enables this man to present a claim which is at present barred by the statute. I would like to know the reason why a special act should be passed in favor of this man.

Mr. DUELL. Because of the great merit of the claim.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Why was it not presented in time?

Mr. DUELL. For the simple reason that this man was not advised of his rights. He resides at the North, in the State of New York. He owned these premises in the State of Virginia.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Then the bill simply removes the statutory bar.

Mr. DUELL. That is all.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. DUELL. I move to amend the bill by inserting after "timber" the words "and commissary stores."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. DUELL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

J. HOWE WATTS.

Mr. PACKARD. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Private Land Claims be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4422) for the relief of J. Howe Watts, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

There being no objection, the reference was changed accordingly.

J. W. M'CLURG.

Mr. MORRISON, by unanimous consent, presented a report from the Committee on War Claims to accompany the bill (H. R. No. 162) for the relief of J. W. McClurg and others, of Missouri; which was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar.

CHOLERA EPIDEMIC IN 1873.

Mr. DONNAN, from the Committee on Printing, reported back, with an amendment in the form of a substitute, a resolution for printing extra copies of the report of the Surgeon of the Army and the supervising surgeon of the marine-hospital service upon the cholera epidemic of 1873.

The SPEAKER. The substitute alone will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives, (the Senate concurring,) That there be printed ten thousand extra copies of the report of the Surgeon-General of the Army and the supervising surgeon of the marine-hospital service upon the cholera epidemic of 1873; five thousand copies of which shall be for the use of the House of Representatives; two thousand copies for the use of the Senate; two thousand copies for the use of the Surgeon-General of the Army; and one thousand copies for the use of the supervising surgeon of the marine-hospital service.

The substitute was agreed to; and the resolution, as thus amended, was adopted.

Mr. DONNAN moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

W. G. FORD.

Mr. COBURN. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from the further consideration of the petition of W. G. Ford, claiming compensation for fifty bales of cotton taken at Mobile; and that the same be referred to the Committee on Claims.

There being no objection, the reference was changed accordingly.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. TYNER. I move that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the post-office appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, (Mr. McCrary in the chair,) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4529) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is upon the amendment offered yesterday by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN,] which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert at the end of the second section these words:

Provided, That all seeds furnished by the Department of Agriculture, and all public documents sent through the mails by Senators and Representatives in Congress to their constituents, shall be carried free of postage; and the signature of the Senator or Representative shall be indorsed thereon, as evidence that the same is mailed by him, and shall be subscribed to a written or printed certificate that the same is a public document or a package of seeds furnished by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. COBURN. Mr. Chairman, when I offered this amendment last evening I stated that it was unnecessary to go into any extensive argument of the question, because it is one that has forced itself in one way or another upon the attention of every member of the House. This matter of free documents is a question in which the people are much more interested than we are. We are interested only to a small extent pecuniarily, while to the people the question involved is an intelligent understanding of the operations of the Government.

Members will see that the question here is not merely that of sending documents away, but that ultimately it must involve the question of printing these documents. After a while, if the expense of sending away these documents be not reduced, the result will be that the printing of public documents will in a great measure cease. I must say that I can imagine no greater calamity in public affairs than that the free printing of the reports of the operations of the Government should cease. The people, in order to act intelligently, must have the reports at first hand by the authority of the Government. The reports published in the newspapers are garbled and partial, tinged with political bias, and often with political and personal spite. Besides, the space of our newspapers is not sufficiently great to allow the publication of these reports in full; and the people never can have a thorough and competent knowledge of the operations of the Government unless these reports are given to them gratuitously. Why shall we print these reports gratuitously; why shall we attempt to furnish this knowledge, and at the very beginning stop its free dissemination throughout the United States? It strikes me as a piece of the worst conceivable management that we shall print documents gratuitously and then tax ourselves to send them out.

Why is this done? Is it a measure of economy? How much money comes into the Treasury of the United States practically from sending out the documents on hand? I have taken a little pains to inquire of the superintendent of the folding-room as to the amount of documents each member has. I find they are each entitled to seven hundred and forty-seven volumes in all, and for three hundred Members and Delegates the whole number would be 224,100, which at ten cents apiece would give $22,400 postage. Now, does that money go into the Treasury? Who gets it? Why the fact is that more than two-thirds of this money goes into the hands of express and railroad companies, who carry them as freight or by express. Then for this little pittance of $7,000 a year we are to stand in the way of the free circulation of these documents. I cannot imagine anything more nonsensical than that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this prepayment of postage on documents was started on the part of the Postmaster-General upon the idea of economy—of an immense saving. He said we would save millions by it. He counted up the entire number of officers in the United States who had the benefit of the franking privilege, over thirty thousand postmasters and many others, and by that means made a very handsome showing of saving, on paper. But now, in the practical operations of this matter, who is it that is cut off from the franking privilege or circulation of free mail matter? The Government pays over $2,000,000, and for what? To print stamps, the equivalent of the old frank. And all these postmasters and officers of the Departments have a right to put on an official stamp, and we here in Congress are the only men under the Government who stand fettered and tied and bound by this enactment. Cannot we trust ourselves? Is it possible that postmasters scattered throughout the country can have official stamps to send their mail matter free, and yet members of Congress are not to be trusted? Is it possible that officers in the Departments can be trusted from one end of the country to the other in the use of official stamps and we are not to be trusted? This is such an anomaly in legislation, such a piece of gross mismanagement, that in my judgment it ought to be corrected at once. The Government will lose nothing, but on the contrary, I believe, will gain largely in the diffusion of knowledge and accommodation on the part of the people. This whole matter of abolishing free documents was, as I have said in former debates, never intended when the franking privilege was abolished. The abuse of the franking privilege was one thing and free documents another. There is no shadow of the old abuse in this measure, and cannot be. The provision is well guarded, and frauds cannot well be perpetrated without almost certain detection.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FORT. I submit a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter the postage on any public document mailed by the President or head of any Executive Department, or Member of Congress or Delegate to the House of Representatives, or by any ex-Member of Congress or ex-Delegate, within nine months after the expiration of his term of service, shall be two cents for each volume; and the term "public document" is hereby defined to be any publication printed by the order of Congress or by either House thereof. And when the words "public document" shall be written or printed thereon, or on the wrapper thereof, and the signature of any such person entitled to so send the same by mail shall be written thereunder, it shall be deemed a sufficient certificate prima facie of the character thereof.

Field and garden seeds furnished by the Department of Agriculture shall be transmitted by mail, for the same postage charged on public documents upon the certificate of any of the persons named in the next preceding section.

Mr. FORT. Mr. Chairman, I do not propose to take up the time of the House in discussing this matter of the reduction of postage on public documents. It has been discussed in this Congress at a former session and more or less during the present session, and I have no doubt the mind of every member present is fully made up on the question.

I desire simply to explain why I prefer the amendment offered by myself to that of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN.] Whatever may be the desire of some gentlemen here to restore what might be termed a modified form of franking public documents, we know that we cannot carry it through this House. In my judgment it will fail to get much support. If it should pass this House it would most likely fail in the other branch of Congress. And by the time this bill could come back here, and before we could take it up and pass the measure in some modified form, the session will have passed away, and no benefit could result to the Government or the people. In my judgment we had better pay reasonable postage. Let us pay to the Government the actual cost of transporting this mail matter, and the Government ought to be satisfied with that. The Government ought not to desire to make money on transporting public documents sent to the people through their mails or to require members of Congress to pay more postage than the cost of transportation. The Government ought not to make a profit out of this class of mail matter, when, as has been said, no other officer under the Government pays any postage whatever. Members of Congress are the only officers under the Government who pay postage on official business. Free postage is provided for every other Government officer. I think it will certainly be satisfactory to the Post-Office Department and to those who represent it upon this floor, if members pay what will be the actual cost of transportation.

The Government can carry this matter at the rates provided in the amendment which I have offered. I have taken some pains to consult with that branch of the Post-Office Department which is in charge of carrying the mails, and am informed, if I do not misunderstand, that having to run trains as they do and having to support the post-offices as they do, they will lose no money in transporting these public documents at the rates designated in the amendment which I propose. That Department should and would in my judgment be satisfied with such rates of postage.

Even if some of us should desire to have these documents transported free, in my judgment we had better agree to pay reasonable postage, pay all it actually costs, and then no person could justly complain. If we provide for sending these documents free, we will hear what we have heard before: a howl going up in every direction that Congress has re-enacted the franking privilege, which certainly this House does not propose to do.

Mr. NEGLEY. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. FORT. Certainly. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania for a question.

Mr. NEGLEY. Does that howl come from any quarter except through the influence of the Post-Office Department?

Mr. FORT. It will come from some quarter.

Mr. BEGOLE. It does not come from the country.

Mr. FORT. The franking privilege has been repealed; through whatever influence that may have come about I am not able to state. I am glad it was repealed, and in my judgment we had better let it remain repealed until there is a demand on the part of the people for its restoration, which I do not presume they will soon make. My amendment does not restore that privilege in any sense or measure. It provides for paying to the Government all it costs them to do this service for us. It is claimed, and I presume truthfully, that the repeal of the franking privilege was demanded by the express companies of the country, and was really in their interest. I am informed it was by the influence of express companies alone, acting through and by the daily press of the country, and resulted in profit to express companies and no gain to the Government at all—not one cent saved to the Post-Office Department.

Mr. NEGLEY. I admit that.

Mr. FORT. By the repeal of the franking privilege, as it is called, thousands of dollars went into the hands of the express companies which ought not to have gone there. The Government pays the railroad companies just as much to-day and even more than it did before the repeal. Nobody has saved anything, and the express companies have made all the profit.

Mr. PARKER, of New Hampshire. Let me ask the gentleman a question. Is he in favor of the restoration of the franking privilege?

Mr. FORT. I must say that I am not. I would not favor the restoration of the franking privilege, nor take a step in that direction. I would simply have public documents sent as cheap as can be afforded, and I want to pay postage on letters and all private matter just as now all other persons do.

Mr. NEGLEY. Let me ask the gentleman another question. Are not these documents published free at the expense of the public Treasury; and if so, why not distribute them free? They are intended for the information of the people.

Mr. FORT. There is great force in my friend's argument. I agree with him that members might just as well be called upon to pay for the printing of these documents as to pay the postage when we distribute them to the people. Last session I paid out hundreds and hundreds of dollars. I sent out a great many documents and quantities of garden seeds, all I could possibly get to send. I do not know any reason why I should have been compelled to pay this postage any more than the Postmaster-General should have been required to pay postage on his official mail matter. I might just as well be called upon to purchase these seeds and pay for printing these documents as to be compelled to pay what I did pay for postage. But that is past. The franking privilege, a privilege intended for the people and not for the member, has been repealed, and I do not propose to restore it. But I ask the Government to render this service for us at as low a rate as they can do it, and not compel us to go to the express companies or pay out a large profit to the Government by way of postage.

Mr. SMITH, of Ohio. Let me ask the gentleman a question. How many of these Agricultural Reports are printed under the law as it now stands, and how many would be printed under the system proposed by the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. FORT. A great many ought to be printed.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FORT. I desire a minute more to answer my friend from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen will please resume their seats. In the prevailing confusion the reporters are unable to hear what is said. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. NEGLEY. The gentleman has been frequently interrupted, and I hope his time will be extended.

Mr. FORT. I do not often occupy the time of the House, and should like a few moments more.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not the fault of the Chair that the gentleman has been interrupted.

Mr. KELLOGG obtained the floor and yielded his time to Mr. FORT.

Mr. FORT. I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] for his courtesy. My friend from Ohio [Mr. SMITH] asks me what number of Agricultural Reports it is proposed to have printed, that they may be sent thus cheaply through the mails, in accordance with the amendment I have proposed. I cannot tell the gentleman. But I will say to him that if all the reports were printed which the people want and which they write to us for and demand, the number would be very large indeed. His salary would not pay the postage on the documents that the people think they want and that they apply for, under the exorbitant rates now charged.

I have found it absolutely impossible, sir, to supply the demands of the people residing in my district for these public documents. Now, sir, I do not propose to send these documents to them free, as some want to do, but why shall we not be allowed to send them as cheaply as they can reasonably be carried? I propose, Mr. Chairman, to supply the demand for these documents as far as it is possible to do it.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Millions of them?

Mr. FORT. Yes; millions, if necessary. The people are the source of all power in this Government, and if they demand to be informed officially of the transactions of the Government, in my judgment they ought to be so informed, let it cost more or less; but let me say that in my judgment I do not think the effect of this amendment will be to increase the publication of documents beyond what has been done. There may be many documents printed which are necessary and the printing of which is an extravagance; but we know the people want them; yes, constantly press their applications for them. I never yet had a public document which I had sent out by mail returned to me. When I have met the people one after another would inquire of me why I had not sent them an agricultural report, or the report of the Commissioner of Education, or report of Hayden's survey, or some garden seeds, and the fair ladies wanted to know why I have not sent them some flower-seeds.

Mr. TOWNSEND. I would ask the gentleman what would be the postage upon the agricultural report under this amendment and upon the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD?

Mr. FORT. Two cents per volume and one cent on the daily RECORD, and this will pay well. The Government under the post-office arrangement can haul a car-load of Agricultural Reports from the East to San Francisco for $1,000, upon which we have to pay ten cents on each volume now.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. Then do we not pay too much postage upon letters?

Mr. FORT. We pay more than it costs to simply haul the letters, of course. I have not said and I do not wish to be understood as saying that this would be a fair proportion on the cost of the expense of the Post-Office Department. But it is a fair price for carrying and handling this matter, as the Government has to run the trains and support the Department without them.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. How will the gentleman figure up the deficit in the Post-Office Department?

Mr. FORT. I know there is a deficit, but you were told that if you would only repeal the franking privilege the Post-Office Department would be self-sustaining. This experience has shown was fallacious and was probably said for effect. The saving, if any, has never been perceptible in the Post-Office Department accounts. I do not wish to be understood, however, as saying, I repeat, that this would be a fair proportion of the expense of the Post-Office establishment, but I do say that, the Government having to run postal trains as they do, the Post-Office Department had better have these documents to carry at the proposed price than not to carry them, and far better than to deprive the people of them.

Mr. SMALL. How will two cents a volume on these documents compare with the rate of postage now on newspapers?

Mr. FORT. Perhaps less on some and a little more on others. It will average about the same as newspapers are charged.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. On transient newspapers?

Mr. FORT. Yes; about the same as on daily papers. The postage upon public documents at two cents on a volume would average about forty dollars a ton. At the present rate of postage we pay for the transportation of the documents $1,000 a ton.

Mr. MERRIAM. What will be the postage on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD under this amendment?

Mr. FORT. As it is now—one cent a copy on the daily RECORD and two cents on a volume of bound RECORDS. Mr. Chairman, I am very much obliged to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KELLOGG] for his courtesy, and I will now resign the floor.

Mr. SPEER. Mr. Chairman, I would prefer to see the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] adopted, with a proviso something like this:

And this provision shall apply to the Members and Senators of the Forty-third Congress up to the 3d day of December, 1875.

I understood the existing law to be that all documents authorized to be printed by this Congress go to the members of this Congress if they are published before the next Congress meets. The amendment of the gentleman from Indiana only reaches the members of this Congress during the session of Congress. After Congress adjourns, if all our documents are not sent out, we shall have to pay postage on them, and therefore I think the gentleman's amendment should prevail with the amendment which I hold in my hand and which I have read. I now offer it.

Mr. COBURN. I am willing to accept that amendment.

Mr. SPEER. If the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana fails, then I shall vote for the substitute of the gentleman from Illinois, [Mr. FORT.] But why make the postage on books two cents?

Mr. FORT. To pay something to the Government.

Mr. SPEER. The amount so received will be trifling. The people have already paid for publishing these documents. That is an expense which falls upon them and which they bear without complaint. It is a spectacle of moral cowardice for Congress to stand up in the face of the nation and appropriate over a million of dollars for postage for the other Departments of the Government and then not have the courage to appropriate the money necessary to pay for postage on the distribution of documents published by authority of law and intended for the people.

Sir, if a crippled soldier writes to me about his pension and I go to the Pension-Office to see about it and write back to him I have to pay my own postage, but if that same soldier writes directly to the Pension-Office, you and I vote an appropriation to pay the postage of the Commissioner of Pensions. There is no consistency in this, no fairness in it, no common sense in it, and no reason for it. It is bald cowardice. I admit that I was one of the cowards who voted for the absolute and unconditional repeal of the franking privilege under the lash and spur, and it is the only vote I have ever given in this House of which I am ashamed.

Mr. NEGLEY. I was one of those who voted against the repeal of the franking privilege.

Mr. SPEER. An apparent public sentiment had been created by the efforts of the Postmaster-General which the statistics of the Post-Office Department since show to have been utterly unjustified by the facts. Under the force of that sentiment, under the lash of the metropolitan newspapers, Congress, without debate, or the opportunity for debate, passed the repeal of the franking privilege. That was unjust to the members of Congress and unjust to the people. Why publish these documents? Why purchase these seeds? Are the seeds to lie and rot in the Agricultural Department, or the documents to lie and rot in our cellars below here, or be sold by members of Congress as waste paper, and the income put in their pockets, rather than they shall be to the expense of paying postage on them? They are the people's documents, paid for by the money of the people. And the people ask that they shall be sent to them.

The cry that the free carriage of these documents through the mails will largely increase the expenses of the Government is hollow and false. Since the abolition of the franking privilege the cost of the mail service has steadily increased, and the present bill appropriates to the Post-Office Department about two millions more than the bill of last year. The mail contractors have not reduced their bids a dollar on account of the repeal, and the only practical result is to increase the business and profits of express companies.

If some measure like this should not pass, then these documents, piled up here by the ton, will remain until the end of the session, except a few of them which some members, feeling it to be their duty to their constituents, may send to them and pay the postage out of their own pockets. A large portion of them will remain here, or be sold to the paper-dealers of this city. I say that no country in the world ever saw such a spectacle as this; the Post-Office Department, the Treasury Department, the State Department, and all the Executive Departments having their postage paid for them by appropriations by Congress, and members of Congress getting down on their knees and shaking from head to foot before a manufactured public sentiment, afraid to send documents free to the people, which have been published with the money of the people.

The pending amendment is limited to public documents and seeds, and it is intended for the benefit of the farmers and mechanics and merchants of the country. It is not for the benefit of members, but for those who have sent us here. Its passage will not add a dollar to the public burdens, and I am satisfied, if it could be adopted without making a record, nine-tenths of the members of this House would vote for it. The courage to vote your convictions is a virtue which the people, in the end, will recognize and reward.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TYNER. Is not debate exhausted on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendment.

Mr. MILLS. I move to strike out the last word of the original proposition. The Postmaster-General, in his report to Congress in 1869, showed to the House of Representatives that there was a deficit in the receipts below the expenditures of the Post-Office Department. He had vexed his righteous soul from day to day from 1869 until 1873 to remove the causes that produced this deficiency. He states that the great cause was the franking privilege. He showed to Congress that there were 31,933 persons in the United States exercising the franking privilege and sending mail matter through the post-office free of postage which, if it paid the usual postage, would bring a revenue to the Government of $2,500,000.

On the 30th of June, 1873, the franking privilege was abolished at the persistent demand of the Postmaster-General. What has been the consequence of this sublime statesmanship? The deficiency in the receipts of the Department, which up to that time had been $2,500,000 has now increased to the sum of $9,900,000; that is what it is to-day, notwithstanding the fact that there were 31,933 persons who enjoyed the franking privilege. Efforts were made to restore it again, and it was restored to 31,500 persons; thus cutting down the fancied revenue of $2,500,000, which was to be received in consequence of this repeal, by the sum of $2,225,000. These are the facts now before you.

To-day, at an expense not of millions but of hundreds of thousands of dollars, we pay for the manufacture of these postage-stamps and the salaries of clerks whose business it is to paste them on letters and other expenses incidental to the operation. And, as my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] says, we stand before the world to-day the representatives of this people guilty of moral cowardice in keeping from them the light which they are entitled to receive from this grand center of the Government.

What has been the result of the repeal of the franking privilege so far as the increase of the revenue of the Post-Office Department is concerned? Some time ago I received a communication from the Postmaster of the House of Representatives, which I have mislaid, showing the immense amount of revenue to the Government which is received from members of this House. I asked him to give me a statement of all the postage-stamps of every kind sold by him to members of this House. It aggregated a little over $15,000. I suppose about one-half of the postage-stamps which we use are bought in the post-office of this House. If so, then the grand aggregate of the results of that sublime statesmanship which was forced upon this House amounts to about $30,000, all told.

Mr. ELDRIDGE. Will the gentleman tell us how much it cost the Government to circulate the petitions which the Postmaster-General sent about the country?

Mr. MILLS. I have not time in five minutes to go into that matter. Now, what is the result, what is the grand tragedy summed up in this? It is that a Government which is based upon the cardinal principle of the intelligence of the people deprives the people of one great source of that intelligence in order to save the pitiful sum of $30,000. All that information is kept here, not sent to the people; they are denied the benefit of all this information, and there is nothing left but the barren result which I have stated.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I rise to oppose the amendment. Both of the propositions now before the House are propositions to restore the franking privilege, because the proposition of the gentleman from Illinois on my right [Mr. FORT] provides for so small a postage on public documents that it is substantially the same thing as sending them free through the mails; and I know of no reason why one who will vote for that amendment should not also feel compelled to vote for the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN,] that garden seeds and all public documents shall be carried free through the mails.

As has already been said, this argument has been made over and over again. On the one hand it is claimed that the people are clamoring for these public documents, and it is too great a charge upon members of Congress to compel them to pay the postage upon them. My friend from Illinois says that he has paid already during this Congress, hundreds of dollars as postage on documents which he has sent to his constituents. Now, Mr. Chairman, I know no reason why the gentleman's constituents, if they want public documents, should not pay for them, and pay the postage upon them just as they do when they want school-books. These public documents cannot be any more valuable to them than school-books, or clothing, or newspapers; yet they pay for all these things; they do not ask the Government to furnish them gratuitously.

If we are to go into the business of supplying our constituents with everything they want, with everything they write to us for, why should we not make an appropriation to reimburse members for sums of five dollars or ten dollars which they sometimes contribute to pay a constituent's fare home? Why should we not come in here and ask Congress to appropriate money to enable us to give such assistance to constituents who ask for it? I have no doubt some gentlemen here would be very glad if somebody would furnish them with money to answer these calls. We know that members of Congress, by reason of their position, are subjected to a great variety of calls, some in the way of subscriptions, some in the way of election expenses, some in other ways; and why should not the Government step in, by reason of this expense which falls upon members in view of their official capacity, and furnish them with money to meet all these charges?

This is only another phase of that pestilent heresy which seems now to be gathering strength and force, I am sorry to say, all over the country—the notion that whatever anybody wants the Government to do, it becomes the duty of the Government to do; that whenever anybody asks the Government to give him something, it is the business of the Government to grant his request; that, in other words, it is the business of the Government to supply all the wants of our constituents. I have not looked upon the functions of Government as reaching to that extent.

But, sir, to go back to the reason given here for this proposed modification of the law. It is said we have the documents; we are printing them; and we might as well charge the Treasury with the postage as with the expense of printing them. I agree to that fully; and one of the principal reasons why I favored the abolition of the franking privilege was because I anticipated it would stop the printing of these documents. The people may just as well ask to have postage free, members of Congress may just as well ask that these documents be carried free, as to ask that they shall be printed for nothing. There is no reason whatever in either demand. These documents should not be supplied gratuitously. The people are able to pay for them if they desire them.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GARFIELD] reminds me that the Congressional Printer informed us only the other day that the Agricultural Report alone, which we had ordered to be printed, would cost $200,000. That is a great item of expense, and there is no more reason why the Government should furnish these Agricultural Reports gratuitously than there is why we should furnish every man in the country with an agricultural newspaper and send it to him free of expense.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. FORT. I would like to ask the gentleman from Vermont whether according to his doctrine we should not abolish the Agricultural Department?

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I am quite ready to support that proposition.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the last two words. Mr. Chairman, I wish to occupy but a few moments, for the House is in no humor to listen to even a five-minute speech. I am opposed to all these amendments, and I want to answer the charge of cowardice that has been made by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, [Mr. SPEER.]

We are abundantly supplied with money wherewith to pay the postage on all the documents printed for distribution during this whole Congress, and I will tell you where it comes from. When we were considering the repeal of the salary increase, and the question was before the House whether we should make that repeal effective from and after the date of the repealing act, or whether it should be retroactive, to go back to the 4th of March when we first became members of the House, the strongest reason given for making the repeal take effect from and after the date of the repealing act was that the increased rate of pay received by members from the 4th of March would be just about enough to pay the postage on the public documents they might desire to send to their constituents. Now, sir, why not follow in good faith the understanding upon which we voted at that time?

I admit what has been said here, that gentlemen representing agricultural constituencies have perpetual demands upon them for more books than they can supply. And, sir, I admit the ridiculous position in which members of Congress are placed, being as it were the only officers of the Government who cannot frank documents.

Mr. COBB, of Kansas. I wish to ask the gentlemen whether there is any record of that understanding about which he has spoken. For one I wish it distinctly understood that no such understanding was recognized by me. The law as I found it gave me that increase of pay until the repealing act was passed. I took that which was provided by law, and which was honestly my own.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. That is not the point I am raising. I say that members of this Congress, from the pay they have received, have plenty of money to pay the postage on the documents they send out. I say this is not the time to reinstate the franking privilege. The members of Congress elected last fall will take their seats next December; they will come fresh from the people after consultation with the people, and if they see fit to reinstate it let them do so, but I am opposed to it now.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BECK. Mr. Chairman, I rise to oppose the amendment. When the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. COBURN] moved his amendment a few moments ago, he announced that it was now costing $986,000 to furnish official stamps. If he had said it cost $986,000 to furnish official stamps for the Post-Office Department alone, he would have been right, because it does take just that sum to furnish official stamps for that single Department. The Postmaster-General, on page 4 of his report just submitted to us, estimates the receipts from official stamps and stamped envelopes supplied to the various Departments at $1,500,000 more; in all, for all the Departments, including the Post-Office Department, $2,400,000, as I understand it, every dollar of which has to be raised by taxation of the industries of the country in some form.

Mr. PLATT, of New York. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him to give him some other figures as to the cost of procuring these official stamps?

Mr. BECK. I have but a few minutes, and you can do that when I get through.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the fact is, and I wish it to be specially noted, that the whole cost, the whole appropriation ever made before the law repealing the franking privilege went into effect, was only $700,000 a year. That was the appropriation out of the Treasury for carrying all free mail matter. It was a permanent appropriation for that purpose, and is all it ever cost the country. Now, however, we are furnishing the Post-Office Department alone with $986,000 out of the Treasury to enable the officials to frank their mail matter, while the other Executive Departments cost us in addition nearly $1,500,000, which has, of course, to be raised by taxation, for the purpose of enabling them to buy these official stamps to frank through the mail whatever they may see fit to send. The then Postmaster-General told us two years ago, in his report of 1872, as follows:

By reference to a special report made to Congress on the 12th of January, 1871, it will appear that the actual cost of free matter, if charged with the regular rates of postage, was then $2,543,327.72 annually. During the late presidential canvass the quantity of such matter was largely increased, and I think it safe to say that the free matter carried during the past year, if taxed at ordinary rates, would have yielded a revenue of three and a half million dollars, a sum larger than the entire deficiency of the year.

That was the statement which went before the country, coupled with petitions published and circulated at a cost to the Government, as I understand, of over $500,000 to have them circulated in order to bring about the abolition of the franking privilege.

Mr. Chairman, I am happy to say to my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. SPEER] that I was not one of those who voted for the repeal of the franking privilege. I knew it was a fraud then; I have known it ever since, and I have voted against the restoration of the franking privilege because I wished to punish those gentlemen who were cowardly enough to vote to repeal it, and for no other reason. As I have said, the Postmaster-General circulated these petitions fraudulently, costing us at least $500,000 of public money; and as a consequence the Government is now compelled to pay $2,400,000 for official stamps when the whole cost before was only $700,000; and all this for no other purpose than anybody can see than to enrich express and railroad companies, which had contracts for four years in advance and received as much compensation after the franking privilege was abolished as before, though they did not do anything like as much service as formerly. That was the whole of it. Then, too, you will observe two years ago the ordinary revenues of the Post-Office Department only amounted to $22,000,000, while the ordinary revenues of the Department are now estimated at $29,148,156. Although the revenues of the Department have increased from twenty-two to twenty-nine millions, they ask for an appropriation for deficiency out of the Treasury of $7,815,878, and by direct appropriation out of the Treasury of $2,098,500; in all amounting to $39,062,534. It is true the country has grown somewhat and expenses have somewhat increased, but the expenditures have grown in larger proportion than the service. Why is this? It is because of such contracts as attention has been called to, of Peterson and others on the Mississippi River and in our Western Territories, where the late Postmaster-General not only recognized but encouraged straw-bids, and then gave his friends what he called special service at double, triple, and sometimes quadruple the amount of the bids, and put hundreds of thousands, and I might say millions, of dollars into the pockets of the friend, pets, and other favorites of the Department.

I fear, sir, if the present Postmaster-General carries out his honest purpose to cut out these abuses by the root his own official head will be cut off ere long, and some one will step into his place to do as his predecessor did in accepting straw-bids and afterward making fraudulent contracts and keeping in useless employes to absorb millions from the Treasury. I fear, I say, if the present Postmaster-General carries out his honest purpose some one else will be found to take his place before many months roll round who will restore and perpetuate the old corrupt system.

Mr. SWANN. Who was it did these things?

Mr. BECK. It was your Postmaster-General from Maryland, with whom you never had any partnership that I ever heard of. [Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TYNER. I wish to say the Ways and Means Committee was entitled to the floor to-day, but kindly got out of the way of the post-office appropriation bill upon the promise that at half past one I would get out of their road. I move, therefore, that the committee rise to close debate.

Mr. NIBLACK. We can close debate by unanimous consent.

Mr. TYNER. If so, I withdraw my motion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and debate is closed.

Mr. SPEER. I ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] to withdraw his amendment as a substitute for that of the gentleman from Indiana, so the committee may vote first on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana and then we can vote on the gentleman's substitute.

Mr. FORT. I have no objection to the committee taking a vote first on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. TYNER. I object to the gentleman withdrawing his amendment.

Mr. SPEER. Has not the gentleman from Illinois a right to withdraw his amendment, notwithstanding the objection of the gentleman from Indiana?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the gentleman has the right to withdraw it.

Mr. FORT. I will not withdraw it if there is objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FORT] for the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN.] The substitute will be again read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter the postage on any public document mailed by the President or head of any Executive Department, or member of Congress or Delegate to the House of Representatives, or by any ex-member of Congress or ex-Delegate, within nine months after the expiration of his term of service, shall be two cents for each volume, and the term public document is hereby defined to be any publication printed by order of Congress or by either House thereof. And when the words "public document" shall be written or printed thereon, or on the wrapper thereof, and the signature of any such person entitled to so send the same by mail shall be written thereunder, it shall be deemed a sufficient certificate prima facie of the character thereof.

Field and garden seeds furnished by the Department of Agriculture shall be transmitted by mail for one cent for each pound or fraction thereof upon the certificate of any of the persons named in the next preceding section.

Mr. SPEER. I ask that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN,] for which what has just been read is a substitute, may be again read.

The Clerk read Mr. COBURN's amendment, as follows:

Insert at the end of the second section these words:

Provided, That all seeds furnished by the Department of Agriculture, and all public documents sent through the mails by Senators and Representatives in Congress to their constituents, shall be carried free of postage; and the signature of the Senator or Representative shall be indorsed thereon, as evidence that the same is mailed by him, and shall be subscribed to a written or printed certificate that the same is a public document or a package of seeds furnished by the Department of Agriculture.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute of the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. FORT. I am appealed to by gentlemen all around the House to withdraw my substitute in order that a vote may be taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. I wish to do what will be agreeable to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman from Illinois withdrawing his substitute?

Mr. SHEATS. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection being made, the substitute cannot be withdrawn. The Chair has referred to the rule, and finds that it requires unanimous consent.

Mr. ROBBINS. I ask to have the substitute reported.

The CHAIRMAN. It has just been read.

Mr. PAGE. I do not think the committee understands the pending proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again direct the reading of the substitute, that the committee may understand it.

The substitute was again read.

Mr. NIBLACK. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to make a verbal amendment which I think ought to be made. I think his amendment ought to include public documents issued by any Department of the Government. The Departments print some documents which are just as valuable as any others. I suggest that after the word "document," in the first line of the substitute, there be inserted the words "published by order of either House of Congress or by any Department of the Government."

Mr. FORT. I accept that amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that amendment will not be made. The documents to which my colleague refers are generally published by the Departments in violation of the law.

Mr. NIBLACK. I have reference to public documents sent to us by the Departments to distribute. I think they ought to be sent out on the same terms as the documents printed by order of Congress.

Mr. HOLMAN. They are only casual documents, distributed to members as a matter of favoritism.

Mr. TYNER. I object to debate.

The question being taken on Mr. FORT's substitute as modified, there were ayes 42, noes not counted.

So the substitute was not agreed to.

Mr. FORT. If in order, I will call for the yeas and nays when the bill is reported to the House.

Mr. STORM. You cannot do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the adoption of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. COBURN.] Mr. FORT. I ask that the question may be taken by tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. TYNER and Mr. COBURN were appointed.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 97, noes 75.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUNDY and Mr. ALBRIGHT announced that they would call for the yeas and nays on this amendment when the bill was reported to the House.

Mr. TYNER. I now ask unanimous consent of the committee that the proposition that has just been passed upon by the committee shall be considered as coming in after section 4 of the bill instead of after section 2. It will come in there more properly than in the body of the bill among the appropriations.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in after the amendment just adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert these words:

That the certificate authorized to be made by section 13 of the act of June 23, 1874, entitled "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875," may be made by any ex-Member of Congress or ex-Delegate within nine months after the expiration of his term.

Mr. TYNER. That is all right.

Mr. BURCHARD called for a division.

The question being put on the amendment, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following section:

SEC. 3. That if the revenues of the Post-Office Department shall be insufficient to meet the appropriations made by this act, then the sum of $6,852,705, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to supply deficiencies in the revenue of the Post-Office Department for the year ending June 30, 1876.

Mr. RANDALL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in at the end of the third section. It is in the nature of a proviso.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of section 3 as follows:

No money appropriated by this act shall be paid for any official or newspaper post-office stamps which are not purchased by contract made with the lowest bidder after due advertisement.

Mr. TYNER. I raise the point of order upon that amendment that it is new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. It is a limitation. Allow me a word of explanation before the point of order is decided. There is a contract for the general post-office stamps made for four years at the rate of 14.99 cents per thousand. That contract was made after due advertisement. The last Postmaster-General, when it became necessary to print departmental stamps and also newspaper stamps, omitted all advertisements, thereby preventing competition, and has entered into a contract for the supplying of the plates necessary and for the printing of the stamps required. The Government having paid the bank-note companies for the engraving of those plates, they having the ownership, it is now a question whether they should not in the future advertise.

I believe, after mature reflection and examination, that the price of this work, if bids be advertised, will not be over twenty-five cents per thousand. I am advised that the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, if the law permitted it, could print them for twenty-one cents per thousand. Now, all that I ask is that this work shall be done after public advertisement for bids among the various bank-note companies, so that if it be possible to reduce the price we are now paying from eighty cents per thousand to about twenty-five cents, we can do it. It is my judgment that $45,000 can be saved to the Government by this means, without doing any injury to anybody. The work should be open to competition among all the bank-note companies, and a contract for it should be issued after advertisement and on competition.

Mr. MERRIAM. I want to ask the gentleman whether he thinks we ought to spend any money for the printing of departmental stamps?

Mr. RANDALL. That brings up a legal point in controversy. I believe that this contract, the original contract, by its terms included all stamps, and that these departmental and these newspaper stamps, according to that contract, should be supplied to the Government at 14.99 cents per thousand. But that question is not involved in this amendment.

Mr. MERRIAM. The question is whether we ought to spend any money at all for departmental stamps.

Mr. RANDALL. I am trying to settle this case as I find it, and trying to remedy what I think is not exactly right, and I believe that the Postmaster-General himself is in favor of this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Upon the point of order the Chair desires to ask a question. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] understand that the law now requires advertisement for the bids for doing this work?

Mr. RANDALL. I do understand that the law does require advertisements, and, if my recollection serves me, I once had inserted a provision making that requirement in an appropriation bill.

Mr. TYNER. The only response I have to make to that is that the law which abolished the franking privilege provided that the Postmaster-General should supply adhesive stamps to the Departments, and did not require him to advertise for proposals for furnishing those stamps.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, if the gentleman is correct, I wish to provide now that the work shall be done after advertisement and that the lowest bidder shall receive the contract.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment does change existing law, and therefore he sustains the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. This amendment simply proposes a limitation on the appropriations made in this bill and is not new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that the effect of the amendment would be to require advertisements for proposals and to give the contract to the lowest bidder. The Chair understands that that is not the law now.

Mr. RANDALL. A word of explanation. The law provides for the furnishing of these stamps. Does the Chair decide that because the law provides for these stamps the Government cannot give the contract for their manufacture after advertisement to the lowest bidder?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not decide that at all.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, what does the Chair decide?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides that the effect of the amendment would be to change the law which authorizes the Postmaster-General to furnish these stamps.

Mr. RANDALL. My amendment puts it in the nature of a limitation on the expenditures under this bill, and that is surely in order.

Mr. TYNER. In order to call the attention of the Chair to one section of the law to which the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania would apply, the law in regard to newspaper stamps which this amendment will affect, I desire to call attention to the fact that under the section of the postal laws which I read this amendment would affect newspaper stamps:

SEC. 6. That on and after the 1st day of January, 1875, upon the receipt of such newspapers and periodical publications at the office of mailing, they shall be weighed in bulk, and postage paid thereon by a special adhesive stamp, to be devised and furnished by the Postmaster-General, which shall be affixed to such matter, or to the sack containing the same, or upon a memorandum of such mailing, or otherwise, as the Postmaster-General may from time to time provide by regulation.

That does not require the Postmaster-General to advertise for proposals for such stamps.

Mr. HOLMAN. On looking at the amendment it will be seen that its language merely provides that the money appropriated by this act shall not be applied except on certain conditions, and that is clearly a limitation upon the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. That is only a circuitous way of reaching a change in the law. The Chair thinks it would have the effect of changing existing law, and therefore he rules the amendment out of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. If a limitation like this is not proper as an amendment to an appropriation bill then there is no way in which a limitation can be placed upon appropriations, and therefore I appeal from the decision of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that this is an amendment in the nature of new legislation. From this ruling the gentleman from Indiana takes an appeal, and the question is: Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the committee?

Mr. HOSKINS. I ask for tellers on that question.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. HOLMAN and Mr. TYNER were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 127, noes 22.

So the decision of the Chair was sustained as the judgment of the committee.

The Clerk read the fourth section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 4. That hereafter the Sixth Auditor shall keep the accounts in his office so as to show the expenditures of the Post-Office Department under each item of appropriation provided by law.

Mr. KELLOGG. I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of calling attention of the gentlemen having charge of this bill to the provisions in relation to the accounts of the Sixth Auditor's Office. It seems to me there ought to be some provision by which these accounts should be revised by the Comptroller or sub-comptroller, like all the other accounts of the Government. All the accounts of the other five Auditors are revised by the Comptroller's Department; but there is no revision whatever by any Comptroller of the accounts of the Post-Office Department. I wish to inquire if there is any difficulty in the way of providing that these accounts should be revised in the same manner as the accounts of the other Executive Departments are revised?

Mr. TYNER. I have not given the subject sufficient attention to be able to answer the gentleman intelligently.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think it ought to be done in some way. I supposed the gentleman was so familiar with it that he could give me some information upon it.

Mr. TYNER. I cannot do so.

Mr. KELLOGG. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. TYNER. I move that the committee now rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. McCrary reported that, pursuant to the order of the House, the Committee of the Whole had had under consideration the special order, being House bill No. 5429, making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. TYNER. I call the previous question upon the bill and pending amendments.

The previous question was seconded and the main question was ordered.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont. I desire a separate vote on the amendment in relation to the transmission of public documents through the mail.

Mr. TYNER. I promised the Committee on Ways and Means that I would get out of their way as soon as possible. Therefore, with the consent of the House, the previous question having been put, I will now yield to that committee.

The SPEAKER. That requires unanimous consent.

Mr. RANDALL. I object; let us dispose of this bill.

Mr. DAWES. One of the members of the Committee on Ways and Means is called home by a telegram to attend a funeral.

Mr. RANDALL. It will not take half an hour to dispose of this bill.

Mr. DAWES. Of course I should have interfered as soon as this bill was taken out of the committee, but for the arrangement made with the gentleman from Indiana, [Mr. TYNER.]

The SPEAKER. If the previous question had not been seconded, the motion of the gentleman from Massachusetts would be in order.

Mr. DAWES. I understand that.

Mr. TYNER. I hope no gentleman will object.

Mr. RANDALL. Let us get these appropriation bills out of the way, and have no excuse for an extra session.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I gave notice in committee that I should call for the yeas and nays on the amendment in regard to public documents.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a separate vote on each amendment.

Mr. TYNER. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the main question was ordered.

The motion to reconsider was not agreed to; there being upon a division ayes 42, noes not counted.

Mr. DAWES. Go on with the bill, then.

The SPEAKER. The amendments will now be reported.

Mr. HOLMAN. I would suggest that the amendments be read, and if no separate vote be asked at the time of reading, that they be considered as agreed to.

The SPEAKER. That will be done, and the amendments regarded as agreed to upon which no separate vote is asked.

The following amendment was read, and a separate vote asked upon it by Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont:

Provided, That all seeds furnished by the Department of Agriculture, and all public documents sent through the mails by Senators and Representatives in Congress to their constituents, shall be carried free of postage, and the signature of the Senator or Representative shall be indorsed thereon, as evidence that the same is mailed by him, and shall be subscribed to a written or printed certificate that the same is a public document or a package of seeds furnished by the Department of Agriculture. This proviso shall apply to the Members and Senators of the Forty-third Congress up to the 1st day of December, 1875.

Mr. ALBRIGHT. I call for the yeas and nays upon that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 92, nays 127, not voting 70; as follows:

YEAS—Messrs. Adams, Albert, Arthur, Ashe, Averill, Barber, Beck, Begole, Bell, Biery, Bowen, Bright, Brown, Buckner, Burchard, Benjamin F. So the amendment was not agreed to.

During the roll-call,

Mr. COMINGO said: My colleague, Mr. WELLS, is detained at home by sickness. I do not know how he would vote on this question if he were present.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. WILLARD, of Vermont, moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was demanded was read, as follows:

Insert the following:

That the certificate authorized to be made by section 13 of the act of June 23, 1874, entitled "An act making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875," may be made by any ex-Member of Congress or ex-Delegate within nine months after the expiration of his term.

Mr. GARFIELD. That amendment fell with the other.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE and Mr. KILLINGER. It was a separate amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. O, no; it was a part of the other amendment which failed.

The SPEAKER. This amendment is reported by the Clerk as having been adopted in Committee of the Whole as a separate amendment, after the other amendment had been agreed to.

Mr. TYNER. I did not understand that it was a separate amendment.

Mr. GARFIELD. The gentleman from Iowa, [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE,] in offering the amendment, stated that he desired to amend the amendment already adopted. It is true that this amendment was acted on afterward; but it was an addition to the words already inserted as an amendment by the Committee of the Whole. The RECORD will so show.

Mr. LOUGHRIDGE. I offered the amendment myself as a separate proposition after the other amendment had been adopted.

Mr. GARFIELD. Certainly, after the other amendment had been adopted, but to be incorporated as a part of the other amendment.

Mr. CESSNA. It will not take long to send this amendment the same road that the other went.

Mr. FORT. We can avoid all difficulty by voting on my amendment, which contains that clause.

Mr. PACKER. I suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. LOUGHRIDGE] that if this amendment is to be adopted it should refer to the proper act of Congress—the post-office appropriation act, not the sundry civil appropriation act.

Mr. CESSNA. I am obliged to make the point that the main question has been ordered and debate is out of order.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 37, noes 32; no quorum voting.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. LOUGHRIDGE and Mr. GARFIELD were appointed.

The House divided; and the tellers reported ayes 35, noes not counted.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill, as amended, was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TYNER moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MAIL SERVICE TO CHINA AND JAPAN.

Mr. TOWNSEND, by unanimous consent, presented the memorial of John Roach, against the cancellation of the contract for additional mail service to China and Japan; which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON MARKET COMPANY.

Mr. HAGANS, by unanimous consent, reported back from the Committee on the District of Columbia the bill (H. R. No. 4520) to amend the act entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington Market Company," accompanied with a report in writing; which was ordered to be printed and recommitment.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. Let it be understood that this is not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. That cannot be done.

SUPPORT OF DISTRICT GOVERNMENT.

On motion of Mr. GARFIELD, by unanimous consent, the Committee on Appropriations was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4452) for the support of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876; and the same was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. RANDALL. Not to be brought back on a motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. That will be understood.

TAXES AND TARIFF.

Mr. DAWES. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the special order—the tax and tariff bill reported yesterday from the Committee on Ways and Means.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HALE, of Maine, in the chair, and proceeded to the consideration of the bill (H. R. No. 4680) to further protect the sinking fund and provide for the exigencies of the Government.

Mr. DAWES. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BECK. Before the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] proceeds I wish he would advise us what time in all probability the Committee on Ways and Means will allow for debate on this bill.

Mr. DAWES. I had not thought of undertaking to fix any time to-day; but to-morrow—

Mr. BECK. That is all I care about knowing.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, I hope not to occupy any great length of time in the discussion of this bill. It so happens that a year ago to-morrow—February 12, 1874—I addressed the House upon the subject of the public expenditures. At that time it was my endeavor to show that there was no necessity for increased taxation. To-day, after a lapse of a twelvemonth, I ask the attention of the House that I may show such necessity. As I sincerely believed then that we could go along without resorting to this the most unwelcome of measures for the purpose of making the receipts and expenditures of the Government meet, so to-day with the same sincerity I am compelled to urge upon the House, from the Committee on Ways and Means, for whom I speak to-day, as well as in accordance with the President and the Secretary of the Treasury, who have both urged this necessity upon Congress, that there does seem now to be no other practical method of making the receipts and expenditures of this Government meet than by resorting to additional taxation. The sincerity of this endeavor on my part is not diminished by the reflection that in the course of events I shall not probably ever trouble the House again upon this subject. Therefore it is not possible for me to-day to indulge in any other remarks on this subject than such as are forced from me by a sense of duty to the House and to those branches of the Government which through our committee appeal to the House.

On the occasion alluded to, when I appealed to this House in conjunction with its own recorded vote to save the country from the necessity of renewed taxation, it was upon two grounds that I hoped to make the expenditures and receipts of this Government meet. Those two grounds were a confident hope that the general revival of business in the country, in conjunction with the reduction of expenditures, would so improve the one and reduce the other that we should find ourselves at the end of the year with sufficient in the Treasury to meet all the demands on the Government. At that time the expenditures of the Government were, as they always must be, fixed by law. The appropriations had been made. That side of the ledger was then made up. The other side, however, for five out of the twelve months of the year it was necessary to estimate, and in making that estimate, compared with the receipts thus far, I promised for the Government a receipt of $281,777,972.99. That was the estimate at that time from all sources of the income of the Government to meet the current expenditures. It was hoped that with such reform as was indicated at that time, or some other equally effective, it would bring the Government, as I then stated, somewhere in the neighborhood of $9,000,000, which could be appropriated to the sinking fund. The actual receipts at the end of the year were $284,441,090.84 as against $281,777,972.99 estimated, a difference between estimates and actual receipts of $2,663,117.85, and that in favor of the Government.

Subsequently in the last days of the session, following the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. GARFIELD,] chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, who brought the attention of the House to the aggregate reduction that had been secured in the appropriations for the next year, setting them down at twenty-five or twenty-six millions, I had occasion to say to the House that such had been the improvement in the receipts of the Government. I took a more hopeful view of the condition of the Treasury than I had in February at the time I made the remarks to which I have alluded, and then had good reason to believe the Treasury would come out at the end of the fiscal year with nearly $5,000,000 surplus over and above the current expenditures of the Government, which could be applied to the sinking fund, and I even went so far as to express the confident opinion that the improvement would continue to an extent sufficient to take care of the sinking fund the present year. The actual result did not quite come up to the promise of receipts at the time I made the statement. There was an excess of receipts over and above the expenditures to the amount of $2,344,882.30, instead of about $5,000,000, which I then thought there was reason to believe we should have in surplus of current expenses at the end of the fiscal year.

On the whole, Mr. Chairman, considering the fact that this was the estimate of receipts of the whole Government for five months out of the twelve, following the general depression in the industries and in all the business of the country, and built upon an anticipated improvement, I think the country will consider the administration of public affairs based upon a calculation like that, approaching so near to the actual result, as one which may well be deemed careful and prudent, and governed by that forecast which is necessary for success in the control of public affairs. The deficiency occurred through the depression arising from the panic and from no fault or default of administration. As matters closed on the 30th of June, under the circumstances, those responsible for the administration of affairs of the Government can well point to the result with pride and satisfaction. Based upon that result and the receipts and expenditures of the next quarter the Secretary of the Treasury made his report in December, and upon that, with the actual appropriations fixed by law and with three-fourths of the year based solely on the estimate of receipts, gathered as well as they might be from experience in the past and calculation as to the future, on importations and from internal revenue, the Secretary of the Treasury estimated the receipts and expenditures at the end of this fiscal year to be such that there would be $9,002,796.57 surplus after payment of the current expenditures of the Government, which, as he then stated, could be applied to the sinking fund. But, sir, the actual receipts since the report made on the 6th of December, compared with the estimates, are more widely different than they have been for many years past, including the last year which embraced the season of the panic and general depression. The actual receipts have fallen far short of the estimates; so that, as I had occasion to state a day or two ago, since the 20th of December, for some cause not quite understood by those who have made finance a study, the receipts from customs have begun to fall off, and have continued to fall off for forty-one days to the extent of $3,810,615.95, or just about $100,000 a day. If continued during the year it would be about $35,000,000 of deficit in Government receipts compared with Government expenditures over and above the estimate made by the Secretary of the Treasury.

I have here, sir, a statement of the receipts and expenditures since 1870, which is as follows:

Year.	Receipts.	Expenditures.	Difference.
1870	$411,255,477 63	$300,653,560 75	$101,601,916 88
1871	383,323,944 89	304,074,631 15	79,249,313 74
1872	374,105,867 56	277,517,962 67	96,588,904 89
1873	335,738,204 67	280,345,245 33	43,392,959 34
1874	289,478,735 47	257,133,873 76	2,344,881 71
1875 (estimated)	284,318,285 99	275,315,489 42	9,002,796 57

The differences between the actual receipts and expenditures as shown in this table show the balance in the Treasury each year from which the claims of the sinking fund and the other reduction of the public debt were drawn.

According to the statement of the Secretary, comparing the receipts of the last seven months with the receipts of the corresponding seven months of last year, they were in those months of last year $168,492,621.41, while in the corresponding seven months of this year they were $165,113,198.49; making a difference between these two periods of seven months, respectively, of $3,379,582.92. The receipts of the seven months of last year came out of the whole season of the panic, when there was a greater depression in business throughout the country than it was supposed the country would be likely to experience in very many years to come. And yet the corresponding seven months during this fiscal year have not brought into the Treasury from customs as much money as the first seven months of last fiscal year by about three and a half million dollars. You have therefore data upon which to calculate for the future.

Mr. GARFIELD. I desire to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts whether the returns of the last seven months indicate a falling or a rising revenue. In other words, have we reached bottom or are we still falling behind?

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, we have this condition of things. The actual receipts of the first seven months of this fiscal year compared with the corresponding seven months of last year show a falling behind of $3,500,000. And if we are to bring out the year anywhere in the neighborhood of the estimates, which are besides fixed appropriations that cannot be changed because they are law—while hidden, unknown, mysterious influences and laws more potent than our legislation control the business of the country and the receipts of the Treasury, to meet this loss we are to do one of two things; to look somewhere for an explanation of this deficiency or to look somewhere for some new source of revenue to meet the demands of the Government.

In answer to the gentleman from Ohio I will state that up to the 20th of December the receipts came very nearly to the estimates of the Government. From the 20th of December to the 1st of January they fell off very seriously. For three or four days after that they recuperated and even went beyond the estimates a few hundreds of dollars. Then they began to fall back and continued to do so to the 1st of February. I am expecting every minute the statement from the 1st to the 11th of February, and perhaps I may be able to furnish that to the gentleman. But up to the 1st of February the receipts continued to fall off until they reached the point which I have stated.

My colleague [Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS] I find has a statement up to the 11th. And if I am not robbing him of the material which his own industry, surpassing mine, has enabled him to obtain of later date than I have obtained, I may state that since the 1st of February, a period of ten days, there has been a falling off of $123,439.75.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. That is the falling off in the balance within the last ten days.

Mr. DAWES. Yes; in the balance. The receipts in that period have been $3,691,496.09; the falling off in the receipts from the estimates being what I have stated.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. The comparison is that of the receipts and expenditures for the first ten days of February, this year, with the first ten days of February last year.

Mr. GARFIELD. Does that indicate that during the last ten days there has been a falling behind, a deficit of something over $10,000 a day?

Mr. DAWES. Of course in the middle of a month, when the amount of the receipts is not made up, there is no such thing as ascertaining the exact receipts of the custom-houses in all parts of the country. And when compared with the expenditures it does not give us quite a fair statement of the case; because the expenditures depend upon when the demands upon the Treasury are made, and these demands may be made more in one part of a month than in another part. And goods are taken out of bond very largely at some particular time. It is a fact that since we began the discussion in the Committee on Ways and Means within the last ten days on the question of a change in the tariff, goods have been very largely drawn out of bond, out of the warehouses, and duties have been paid on goods that would naturally, under other circumstances, have remained six, eight, ten, or perhaps twelve months longer. And thus the receipts coming in at this moment are rather larger than they otherwise would be; but they are at the expense of the receipts of the months in the future. So that, without attempting, Mr. Chairman, to be precisely accurate, there is a falling behind the estimates of somewhere in the neighborhood of three and a half or four millions of dollars since the 20th of December.

I do not state it accurately; it is not necessary that we should have the amount to a dollar, but we have the facts before us and we cannot escape the result that the receipts for the coming year, our net receipts for customs, are not to meet the public expectation. The estimate made by the Secretary of the Treasury upon his own calculation and that of the business men who have advised him, and of whose advice he has availed himself, in calculating the business of the next five months, compels him to say to the House that he is unable to find any source of revenue yet in existence that will meet this deficit.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the reduction of the $26,000,000 on one side of the ledger is due to the reduction of expenditures which was the work of Congress. The reduction of the revenue was not their work, but the work of those influences upon trade and business over which Congress does not assume to exercise control.

Mr. BUTLER, of Massachusetts. I desire to ask my colleague a question. It is whether this falling off is in the customs revenue or in the internal revenue, and which falling off is greatest if it is in both?

Mr. DAWES. The internal revenue has increased until within a few days, perhaps the beginning of this month, but the report from the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shows that up to January last the estimate of the Treasury Department was that the prosperity proceeding out of that business which has contributed to the internal revenue was to that extent most gratifying.

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. The estimate of receipts from the Internal Revenue Department in 1873 was $108,000,000, and the estimate for the present year is $105,000,000, showing a reduction in the estimate in internal revenue of $3,000,000; an estimate which has been verified by the facts since.

Mr. KELLEY. Do I understand the gentleman to say that this year's estimate of receipts from this source is $108,000,000, while last year it was only $105,000,000?

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. In December, 1873, the estimate for the fiscal year which is now running was $108,000,000; but that estimate was reduced for the approaching fiscal year last December to $105,000,000, which is the estimate for the current fiscal year.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, I was about to say that this whole statement in relation to the past, both by the Secretary of the Treasury and by the Committee on Ways and Means, which I have made, goes upon a mistaken construction of law. The attention of the Secretary of the Treasury has been called to the relation of the sinking fund to these receipts from customs, and I desire to state to the House that a strict conformity with law requires the Secretary of the Treasury, instead of making his estimates year by year, saying that upon this result there remains to be paid to the sinking fund $9,000,000 this year, and $20,000,000 for that purpose for the coming year—the law requires him to deduct the sinking fund first from the receipts from customs duties, and then to show how much there is to meet the appropriations. If he had followed the requirements of the law, he would have stated to us that he had first taken from the receipts from customs $29,000,000 for the sinking fund, and then there would have been left a deficit on the receipts to meet the current expenses of $20,000,000. When his attention was called to this point, and also the attention of the Committee on Ways and Means, it was seen at once that he had not followed the law in appropriating to the payment of the current expenses of the Government a single dollar of the receipts from customs until after he had first paid the interest on the public debt, and secondly, the demands of the sinking fund, and third, whatever was left of it only should go into the Treasury for the purpose of meeting the current expenses of the Government.

Sir, I desire to call the attention of the House to the law creating the sinking fund. I did it last year when I was speaking of the necessity of retrenchment. I now call attention to it in connection with the question of increased taxation. This is the law under which all the bonds of the United States have been issued, lying at the bottom of the first issue and running through them all, and it can be no more violated with impunity than any law that prescribes penalties of indictment and sentence to the penitentiary. And any officer of the Government who knowingly and willfully violates this law deserves impeachment at the hands of this Congress. The Secretaries of the Treasury who have gone before the present one, and the present Secretary of the Treasury, can only justify themselves in the course they pursued from the fact that the Congress of the United States has not furnished them with means to meet all the demands of the Government. Section 5 of the act which created the first bonds of the United States was in these words:

That all duties on imported goods shall be paid in coin or in notes payable in bonds hereafter to be issued and by law receivable in payment of duties on goods—

Now I ask the House to note this: What is to be done with the coin received at the custom-houses of the country?— and the coin so paid shall be set apart as a special fund.

It is mortgaged, pledged by solemn act of Congress. A man who pledges his goods for the payment of his debts and then filches them away and violates his pledge and commits a breach of trust or larceny, commits an offense no more aggravated than his who takes the coin received from the duties on customs and appropriates it to any other purpose than that for which it was made a special fund.

Mr. KELLEY. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. DAWES. Right here?

Mr. KELLEY. Right there. It is whether Mr. Chase, while Secretary of the Treasury under Mr. Lincoln, set apart that 1 per cent. for the sinking fund, and whether or not he was guilty of the indictable or impeachable offense the gentleman refers to?

Mr. DAWES. Does my colleague on the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. KELLEY] want me to talk about those necessities of the war that rose above everything else, when the life of the nation was the supreme law that governed us? I would like to have the House listen to what this special fund was set apart for by Congress. They pledged it for the redemption of the bonds of the United States:

It shall be set apart as a special fund, and shall be applied as follows: First, to the payment in coin of the interest on the bonds and notes of the United States; second, to the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year, after the 1st day of July, 1862, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund, and the interest of which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct. And thirdly—

And not till "thirdly," either—

thirdly, the residue thereof—

And nothing but the residue thereof—

thirdly, the residue thereof to be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

That is not only the law of the land, but it has in it also the element of the plighted faith of the Government to those who took the bonds of the United States. Well, in the course of a few years we were in a condition where it was thought by some that we could anticipate the interest on the public debt and pay it before it became due. Provision was made by law that that might be done. But lest somebody would say that by anticipating the interest on the public debt and paying more in one year than was required in that year toward the sinking fund, when Congress authorized this anticipation of the interest on the public debt it enacted that it should not thereby impair the obligations of the Government in each year to the sinking fund.

This is the law:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be authorized to anticipate the payment of interest on the public debt, by a period not exceeding one year, from time to time, either with or without rebate of interest upon the coupons, as to him may seem expedient; and he is hereby authorized to dispose of any gold in the Treasury of the United States not necessary for the payment of interest of the public debt: Provided, That the obligation to create the sinking fund according to the act of February 25, 1862, shall not be impaired thereby.

The proviso would be mere idle words if what is done in one year could be construed as discharging our obligations to the sinking fund in any other year.

Had we paid into the sinking fund each year as the law required an amount equal to one per cent. of the public debt for that year and the interest upon the sinking fund, we should have paid into the sinking fund up to 1874 the sum of $417,556,056; whereas we have actually paid into that fund only $141,000,012.50. We have fallen short of the obligation which law imposed upon us in reference to that sinking fund, the difference between 417,556,000 and odd dollars and 141,012,050 and odd dollars.

Mr. NIBLACK. It is claimed upon the other side by those who hold the views of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] that the purchase of bonds from time to time was an equitable compliance with this provision of the law requiring an amount to be set apart each year for the sinking fund. I desire to hear from the gentleman his views on that subject.

Mr. DAWES. There are those who believe that if we had paid of the public debt altogether in the aggregate an amount equal to what the law required us to pay into the sinking fund, we have equitably discharged our duty in that regard. In reference to that I desire to say, to begin with, that the law is explicit, that we shall pay "each year," year by year, so much into the sinking fund. And I desire to call the attention of my colleague upon the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. NIBLACK] to the fact that the construction of the law does not relieve us from a violation of our obligations to the sinking fund. All the bonds we have purchased, including those which I have already stated were charged to the sinking fund, make a total of but $381,467,087.72, against $417,556,000, which the sinking fund requires to-day at our hands. Therefore all we have done toward the reduction of the public debt, if it could with propriety be applied to the discharge of our obligations to the sinking fund and could with equity be considered sufficiently distributed over all the years, would yet fall short of the requirements of the sinking fund by some $36,000,000.

Mr. BECK. Is the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means [Mr. DAWES] officially informed of that fact, so that he can publish it in the RECORD?

Mr. DAWES. I will publish in the RECORD just exactly what the sinking fund required each year, together with just exactly what has been paid into the sinking fund and the bonds we have purchased outside of the sinking fund. I believe that answers fully the question.

Mr. BECK. Has that information been furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury?

Mr. DAWES. I have the figures from the Treasury Department. The following table shows the requirements of the sinking fund each year since its enactment:

1863.....	$11,869,584 67
1864.....	20,002,219 92
1865.....	30,441,914 20
1866.....	33,359,455 86
1867.....	34,472,950 02
1868.....	35,961,184 80
1869.....	38,002,018 41
1870.....	39,276,481 04
1871.....	40,423,377 61
1872.....	41,934,728 40
1873.....	44,402,532 76
1874.....	47,409,252 17

Total.....	417,556,000 56
Total amount of bonds purchased on sinking fund account.....	141,012,050
Amount purchased in excess of that required for sinking fund account.....	182,241,750

Since purchases for that account commenced in 1869..... 323,253,800

To this sum may be added other bonds redeemed to the amount I have stated.

Mr. BECK. I want to say to the House just now that there are $400,000,000 and over of 7.30 bonds and 3 per cent. certificates also taken up and canceled that the Secretary of the Treasury has held back, in addition to the other bonds, if he has made the statement the gentleman suggests.

Mr. NIBLACK. I will agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] when he says that this purchase of bonds was not an exact compliance, either literally or substantially, with the provisions of the law in relation to the sinking fund. I have recently examined this question of the sinking fund more carefully than before in connection with the tax bill now reported. I only wish to know what explanation the gentleman from Massachusetts has to give of this violation of the explicit provisions of the law. I was utterly astounded when I came to look into the matter to see how the faith of the Government has thus been indirectly violated upon a matter which is regarded by financiers everywhere as vital to the public faith and to the preservation of the public honor.

Mr. DAWES. Does the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] mean to say that the Secretary of the Treasury has not made a true statement of the total amount of the decrease of the public debt?

Mr. BECK. I do mean to say that if the Secretary of the Treasury has said that the only indebtedness we have paid since that law took effect is the 6 per cent. bonds, then he has not made a true statement; and this is why I asked whether the Secretary of the Treasury furnished the statement. We have paid off seven-thirty bonds and 3 per cent. certificates to the amount of over $400,000,000, which should be added to the amount of the 6 per cent. bonds, in order to give a true statement.

Mr. DAWES. I have no doubt that we have changed the form of our securities over and over again. The gentleman from Kentucky may have some information that I have not as to the actual decrease of the public debt since the payment of it was commenced—information which will show that the Secretary of the Treasury has from time to time made a false statement. I do not know how that may be; I will not enter into any argument about it.

Mr. BECK. I merely wanted to say that I doubted whether the Secretary of the Treasury would make such a statement; and believing that he would not make a false statement, I wanted the statement to which the gentleman refers published in the Record, so as to show whether the Secretary of the Treasury did so state or not. If he did, I will show that the statement is false.

Mr. DAWES. I do not mean to say that I have any official document stating the exact amount, but the figures of which I have been speaking were obtained from the Treasury Department. I have been speaking of the reduction of the bonded debt, which is generally understood when we speak of debt reduction. The entire debt reduction of the country, including the extinction of all sorts of paper, is I believe very nearly as follows:

Reduction of debt by Finance Report 1874, page 9.

Principal of public debt June 30, 1866.....	$2,773,236,173 69
Principal of public debt June 30, 1874.....	2,251,090,468 43
Reduction in principal of debt exclusive of interest and cash in the Treasury.....	522,145,705 26

But it must be remembered that nearly all the reductions of the debt from 1866 to the present time in excess of the amount of $381,467,087.72 were made by the retirement of legal-tenders, about $7,000,000; certificates of indebtedness issued to pay public creditors in lieu of money, and compound-interest notes.

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. NIBLACK] inquires of me why it is that the Secretaries of the Treasury in the past and also the present Secretary of the Treasury have not first deducted from the receipts of the customs this amount and applied the rest to the payment of the current expenses, year by year, since 1862.

Mr. NIBLACK. Excepting Secretary Chase, all our Secretaries of the Treasury down to the present Secretary have had surpluses in the Treasury to dispose of. That is the reason I am the more surprised that this law has been utterly disregarded.

Mr. DAWES. I cannot answer; it is not my business to answer at this time for any one except the present Secretary. He has not been in office long enough to be held responsible for the payment for the present year.

Mr. NIBLACK. There is reason to believe, I understand, that the present Secretary proposes to adopt a new rule in regard to this matter.

Mr. DAWES. The last Secretary is the only one since 1869 who has not complied with the law. Secretary BOUTWELL, during his administration, set apart each year for the sinking fund every dollar that the law required. Secretary Richardson, in the last year of his administration, failed to set apart all that the law required, for the reason that to do so would have left the appropriations which were made upon the Treasury by acts of Congress unpaid, and as between the two he met the present calls upon the Treasury and appealed to Congress to furnish him with funds to meet the demands of the sinking fund. Gentlemen will bear in mind that the last Secretary of the Treasury was importunate in his demands for increased taxation, giving among others the reason that without it he could not meet the demands of the sinking fund and the appropriations.

Mr. BECK. I will not interrupt the gentleman longer than is necessary to read four lines. The last Secretary of the Treasury wrote a book, of which I now refer to pages 83, 84, and 85, devoted to the sinking fund.

A MEMBER. What is the title of the book?

Mr. BECK. The title of this book prepared by Mr. Richardson is Practical Information concerning the Public Debt of the United States, with the National Banking Laws. Among other things he says:

The great revenues of the country in excess of the expenditures have enabled the Secretary to purchase bonds much more extensively than the sinking-fund law absolutely requires; and the debt has been more rapidly reduced than by the operation of that fund alone. But the sinking fund itself will extinguish the entire national debt in about thirty years or soon after the close of the nineteenth century.

Mr. DAWES. I see no conflict between what the gentleman has just read and anything that I have stated.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. DAWES. I would of course be glad to answer all questions; but my hour is almost gone.

Mr. ELDREDGE. I understood the gentleman to say that he did not consider it a legitimate use of the sinking fund to buy up certain bonds unless they were purchased in each year in the specific amounts designated. Now, I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts, in the first place, what is the legitimate and proper use of that fund set apart and called "the sinking fund;" and if its proper use be the purchase of bonds, and it has been used for that purpose, does the Secretary of the Treasury or the Government cancel those bonds when they are purchased, or carry them along exactly as though they were held by private parties, the interest being still calculated and paid upon them?

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, up to 1870 it was the custom of the Department to keep the bonds that were purchased for the sinking fund; to let the sinking fund hold those bonds against the United States as if it were a body-corporate. By law, in 1870, the Department was required to cancel all the bonds that had been and might thereafter be purchased for the sinking fund, but to charge up the interest and pay it precisely as if the bonds were not canceled. All bonds purchased on behalf of the sinking fund, either before 1870 or since, have been recorded in a book, and then the bonds canceled and the interest has been charged to the sinking fund, and met in this way.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if I have been sufficiently understood, I have shown that the Secretary of the Treasury should make his statements by deducting from the receipts of customs the interest on the public debt and the amount required for the sinking fund, leaving all appropriations made by Congress to take care of themselves; and if his statement had been thus made, we should have had an excess of appropriations over receipts to meet them of about $20,000,000 upon an estimate which falls short in reality for the last two months about $100,000 a month. So that, to meet the interest on the public debt, the demands of the sinking fund, and the current expenses of the Government, there must be found from some other source at least $35,000,000 or $40,000,000, unless there be a change in the amount of receipts at the custom-houses. I therefore proceed to consider the necessity which has brought this bill before the House.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. ELDREDGE] asks what is the use of the sinking fund. First, sir, whether there be any use of it or not, we pledged ourselves to those at home and abroad, who took our bonds upon the faith of our promise, that we would year by year build up to meet those bonds a sinking fund which in thirty years would pay the entire indebtedness of this country. It was upon the faith of this pledge that those bonds were taken abroad; and he who impairs that sinking fund to the extent of one dollar impairs the faith of this nation at home and abroad, which is of more value to it than the millions that may come into its Treasury by means of taxation or customs dues—of more value, if you count it by dollars and cents; for that which has cost us most in disposing of our bonds at home and abroad is the shaking of the faith of the nation by legislation here upon the mode and manner in which those bonds are to be paid. Take those States for example which have adopted the policy of providing for every debt that they contract a corresponding sinking fund that will meet the obligation when it comes due. Take for illustration the State of Massachusetts, which for all its debts has set apart a sinking fund which, when each of its issues of bonds shall become due, will be found equal to the payment of them. Go into the markets at home and abroad with her bonds, and you find her 5 per cent. bond taken before the 6 per cent. bond of the United States. That is the use of a sinking fund.

And, sir, the effect of a sinking fund upon the value of our bonds has been more pointedly than ever before brought to the attention of the Secretary of the Treasury within the last month in his efforts to negotiate our 5 per cent. and 4½ per cent. bonds in funding the fifty-two bonds. The fact that our sinking fund, instead of being $417,556,000 and on the way to pay the entire public debt within thirty years, lacks almost two-thirds of that amount—the difference between $417,000,000 and $147,000,000—has told upon the credit of the nation and the value of her bonds within the last few months in the markets of the world to an aggregate amount of more than we ask you to raise by this bill.

Now, sir, we are to meet our obligations from some source. Turn to the reduction of expenditures and see if you can remedy the difficulty in that way. You reduced your expenditures last year $26,000,000. Can you hope to bring them down this year and meet this deficit on that side of the ledger? While I for one would co-operate and rejoice in the effort to cut down the expenditures of the Government on all sides to the lowest possible point consistent with the efficiency of the Government, I do not see how we can on that side of the ledger bring the expenditures and the receipts of the Government together. Therefore it is that as the organ of the Committee on Ways and Means I have reported this measure.

The question whence we shall derive an increased revenue of some $35,000,000 is a difficult one. It has troubled the Committee on Ways and Means; I have no doubt it will trouble the House. You cannot in the present condition of business in this country touch the great tariff system of the country without sending a tremor through all business to the remotest boundaries of the United States. It is like the system of nerves in the human body; touch it in one place and you touch it everywhere. The Committee on Ways and Means have been reluctant to approach the question of revising the tariff, and have deferred it to the last possible moment. They held it off at the last session of Congress; and they did succeed in getting the Government along without making provision for the sinking fund of this year beyond about $3,000,000. Next year we are to meet another condition of affairs growing out of the shrinkage of receipts, over which this House has no control and for which it is not responsible.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELLIS H. ROBERTS. I trust that the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means may have further time.

Mr. DAWES. I have been somewhat interrupted; I think I shall be able to finish in a few minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the gentleman's time? The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. DAWES. I wanted to say a word upon the question of touching the tariff at all. No man can go into the room of the Committee on Ways and Means without being impressed with the intricate ramification of all business relations throughout this nation; and never so much as to-day are they all affected by legislation which emanates from that room.

You cannot touch one of these that does not spread and spread like the dropping of a pebble into a pool of water, spreading farther and farther until you move every particle of which it is composed. Therefore, no man would rashly, no man would otherwise than because he is forced by absolute necessity, touch a revision of the tariff.

You can turn to the internal revenue and you will find precisely the same result. Therefore the Committee on Ways and Means, feeling this necessity, have met difficulties on all sides. The railroad and telegraph bring every person's pursuit in this nation to the door of the committee-room or to the doors of this Hall, so that we legislate by the side of the loom and the anvil, by the side of every artisan in the land.

Any change in the tariff and internal-revenue systems affects every pursuit in which man embarks in this country. You cannot raise this $35,000,000 without disturbing industries. Whence can you do it with the least deleterious effect? If gentlemen had refrained from repealing the duties on tea and coffee a few years ago, we should not be here now seeking to increase taxation. We should be in the receipt from that source alone of additional revenue nearly, if not quite, sufficient to meet any new demand on the Treasury growing out of the falling off of receipts from customs—

Mr. COX. Why did you not report in favor of the restoration of those duties?

Mr. DAWES. I am coming to that. If we had not repealed them I say we should not be here to-day asking legislation in this bill. My friend wants to know why we have not in this bill reported to restore the duties on tea and coffee. I voted, Mr. Chairman, in this House against their repeal. I wish they never had been repealed. It would have saved us this exigency. But, sir, to restore them requires another consideration. What will you get by restoring them? Since the 7th of December, when it was suggested in the President's message those duties should be restored, the entire tea trade of this country has devoted its attention to the importation before this hour of all the tea in the tea-growing countries which could be commanded, and it is the nearly universal testimony of all having knowledge of the facts that there is in this country to-day more than a year's stock of teas on hand; that the limit in amount of tea on hand to-day is the limit of production in the tea-growing countries. So, then, if you put the duty on tea and coffee to-day it would be substantially fruitless of revenue for a year or more to come.

But why are the gentleman's constituents clamoring to-day for the restoration of the duty on tea? The singular spectacle is presented to-day of importers importuning Congress to impose a duty upon the goods they themselves import. What is the meaning of it? Why, sir, with a stock for a year or more on hand, 15 cents duty on tea will put 15 cents on every pound of tea in the warehouses of these merchants. Hence their desire—I will not say the desire of all of them—hence the desire, growing stronger and more pressing upon the committee and the House every day, to impose this duty, so that those who drink tea may pay an additional 15 cents per pound, while the Treasury of the United States would not receive any substantial advantage therefrom. That was what influenced the Committee on Ways and Means not to put tea and coffee in this bill.

Then, Mr. Chairman, whence should we look for this increase of revenue? The whisky production is from sixty-six to sixty-nine million gallons every year. For the last five years it has been as follows: In 1870 it was seventy-odd millions; in 1871 it ran down to 54,000,000; in 1872, 68,000,000; in 1873, sixty-eight odd millions; and in 1874, to 68,000,000 gallons; the average being about 66,000,000 gallons a year. It is believed by those who will execute this law that they can collect with equal fidelity a larger tax on whisky. There are those who believe a dollar could be collected with the same fidelity which accompanies its collection of 70 cents. It is the belief of the Department they can get the tax upon 95 per cent. of the whisky manufacturers, and they are of the opinion if it were a dollar they could do the same. Thereby, influenced by these considerations, the committee have imposed a tax of $1 a gallon on whisky.

The difficulty which they had with the whisky in bond, the same difficulty which my friend from New York [Mr. Cox] knows has followed all legislation imposing tax on that article. It is a question which got this House at one time very much excited during the war, and about which there has always been difficulty. Now, the committee have sought to ascertain how much of this is in bond, so as to see what part of the 66,000,000 gallons would pay this tax if you said nothing about whisky on hand. In 1870, when there were 70,000,000 gallons manufactured, there were 11,500,000 in bond; in 1871, 6,000,000 in bond; in 1872, 10,000,000; in 1873, 12,000,000; in 1874, 15,000,000; the average being in the six years 66,000,000 manufactured, and in bond 11,500,000.

There are then about 11,000,000 gallons, more or less, generally in bond. And we have been talking about putting the tax upon whisky all the session, and it was generally supposed that this talk had set the manufacturers of whisky to manufacturing in very large quantities in the anticipation of this tax and in the hope that that which was on hand would escape taxation. But, sir, the first seven months of the present year produced 35,000,000 gallons, and there were in bond 5,000,000 only. In December, 1874, there were 11,500,000 in bond. On the 1st of January there were 11,730,000 gallons in bond, and there has been a decrease—a decrease in the daily manufacture of whisky since the 1st day of January of 18,812 gallons. This arises from the high price of grain. Grain has come to be so high in the market that there is less inducement to manufacture it into whisky than there has been heretofore; so that in point of fact the whisky on hand has not been affected by this discussion of a tax, and it is substantially to-day what it was when the discussion commenced. About 11,000,000 gallons of all the year's manufacture are now in bond.

It was considered by the committee that if we put the tax at $1 upon all whisky hereafter made there would be 11,000,000 gallons in the hands of the owner that would be instantly raised 30 cents on the gallon, and the difference between the 70 and the 30 cents on the whole of these 11,000,000 gallons would go into the pockets of the producer.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to ask the gentleman a question just there. If we put the tax on whisky on hand would not the whisky have to remain in the hands of the parties until a stamp could be devised? Would it not have to be kept perhaps for a month? And who should pay that tax—the purchaser if there had been a contract of sale or the seller?

Mr. DAWES. I will reach that in a moment. The committee thought that it would not be right to make the manufacturer pay the additional tax on that he had on hand equal to the full amount; for he has been carrying it for some time; he has paid interest on the value of it; he has paid insurance on it; he has paid for storage on it. And taking all these drawbacks or charges against the whisky into consideration it was deemed equitable and about as fair as could be to make the whisky on hand pay 15 instead of 30 cents of the increased tax.

Mr. NEGLEY. That is, all the free whisky?

Mr. DAWES. All the whisky on hand which can be traced from the distillery clear to the wholesale dealer.

Mr. NEGLEY. In the original packages?

Mr. DAWES. Yes. After it leaves the wholesale dealer and goes into the hands of the retail dealer, it was not thought proper by the committee to follow it there.

Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS] inquires how we are going to enforce this law before we get a new stamp printed to put upon the package. The committee have provided that it shall be such a stamp as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe, on purpose to meet the objection suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania; and he is only to require of them to put in addition to the 70-cent stamp a 10 and a 5 cent Government stamp of any denomination, making 15 cents upon that which is produced, until he can get a new stamp made to meet the exigency.

Mr. BANNING. May I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts what length of time it will take to get these stamps and distribute them? How long will the whisky be detained?

Mr. DAWES. Not an hour; because there are already enough 10 and 5 cent stamps in the country to meet this new demand, and they can be put on the packages on hand, by the side of the 70-cent stamp and then they will bear stamps to the amount of 85 upon them.

Mr. MYERS. In case of contracts of sale, they cannot be added to the price paid by the purchaser.

Mr. BANNING. Can this be done without a provision of law to do it?

Mr. DAWES. The gentleman will find that is in the bill, if he will look carefully into it. At any rate, this very idea was in the minds of the committee, and the committee endeavored by the language used in the bill to meet this very case. If they have not met it, it was because they were not fortunate in the selection of their language.

Mr. BANNING. Would it not take three or four weeks from the issuing of the order after the bill passes to reach all the collectors of internal revenue?

Mr. DAWES. Why, sir, half a million dollars' worth of orders reached the Department yesterday morning between the day that we, unknown to anybody, had fixed this and the morning afterward, and that from Kentucky and that section of the country. The committee thought that they were keeping the amount secret in their committee room, and before morning orders reached the Commissioner for half a million dollars' worth of stamps to meet the exigency. So it will not take very many weeks, as the gentleman suggests. I think the committee have met that requirement. So that from this there will be received—

Mr. COX. If it will not interrupt the gentleman from Massachusetts, I would like to know whether or not the committee considered the proposition, which I think is established by our experience in collecting the whisky tax, that when we raise the tax we get less revenue from it, and that when we reduce the tax we get more. I have got facts here to show that that is the case.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. Chairman, they did consider that point; they know that if they got it up to $2 per gallon it was beyond the conscience of the officer to collect it, and that we should fail to get as much as we would if it were reduced; but I will state to my friend from New York, if he will not interrupt me any more than is absolutely necessary, that it was the opinion of the committee that although we could not put it up to $2 per gallon, yet we might get it a little above 70 cents a gallon; that 70 cents is not the exact measure of the conscience of officials, but that they would stretch their conscience to 30 cents per gallon more without rending it.

Mr. COX. I will state to the gentleman that when we reduced the duty from $2 to $1.50 per gallon the revenue increased from $13,000,000 to $30,000,000.

Mr. DAWES. We got four times as much, but the country had lost confidence in the honesty of the officers of the Government; but now, with all the machinery we have that works so well, and with the stamps, we hope to bring the collection of the tax to within 95 per cent. of the whole manufacture of whisky, and it can be accomplished with the improvements that have been adopted in the administration of the law since that time.

Mr. COX. That was under a democratic administration.

Mr. DAWES. Well, do not put that in; it is enough to say that the failure which the gentleman has alluded to was under an administration of officials in whom from the highest to the lowest the people had lost confidence.

Mr. COX. The reform was made under Andrew Johnson, and we elected him the other day to another position.

Mr. GARFIELD. Much good may you get of it.

Mr. BANNING. I desire to ask the gentleman a question. Suppose all the whisky now in bond and in the hands of wholesale dealers goes out of their hands into the hands of the retail dealers before the passage of this bill, how much tax will you realize by this 15 per cent. increase?

Mr. DAWES. If the gentleman will find retail dealers enough to divide the quantity of whisky manufactured up into five gallons piece he will find that there will be about as many retail dealers as here are inhabitants in most any city.

Mr. BANNING. Certainly.

Mr. KASSON. I would like to say that a large number of the retail dealers hold licenses as wholesale dealers also.

Mr. DAWES. There is no doubt that some of it would escape taxation in that way, but comparatively little of it. You cannot follow it up with any safety beyond the wholesale dealers. The ingenuity of man has thus far always been equal to an evasion of the law "up to a certain point," as Mr. Brook would say.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to ask the gentleman a simple question. I desire to aid in the passage of a judicious bill, but I wish to ask my friend, because Congress heretofore has passed a bill taxing whisky in bond, whether the same principle has not been rejected by the committee in reference to other articles? What I want to ask is whether the committee have not rejected that principle themselves in relation to other matters affected by the bill; whether we tax tobacco in bond; whether in the little tariff bill in which a duty was placed on wines, that principle was placed in the bill, and whether he thinks we shall succeed in passing a bill containing that proposition? I do not object to increased taxes, but it appears to me that very little revenue would be derived under this provision, and I think it is a principle that ought not to be inserted in this bill.

Mr. DAWES. I shall be very glad to hear the gentleman from Pennsylvania when he has the floor in his own right, because he will not then be embarrassed and compelled to be brief.

Mr. Chairman, this tax upon whisky will yield $16,840,000; the tax upon tobacco of 4 cents on the pound will yield $4,200,000; that on sugar will yield $8,213,000; the 10 per cent. restoration will yield $3,000,000. The whole increase therefore by this bill will yield, Mr. Chairman, $37,750,000. You have to deduct from that the repeal of the duty on matches, amounting to $2,500,000, which will leave $35,250,000. This will be subject of course to any losses which may be occasioned by the evasion suggested by the gentleman from Ohio, [Mr. BANNING.] This bill will therefore increase the revenue of the country $35,000,000. It has been fully and fairly considered, and that is the amount which, so far as can be ascertained, it will produce to the Treasury. It will just about meet the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury and the allowance for that falling off in the customs duties to which I have called attention.

It remains therefore for the House to say first whether you will meet that deficit in the Treasury; second, will you meet it by seeking out new sources of revenue as the committee have, or will you turn your attention to some other method of doing it.

I have but a word to say before I sit down. The honor of the Government is involved in this question and in its ability to meet the current expenses of the Government as well as to keep its faith; these questions are involved in the consideration of this bill. It may not be that the Committee on Ways and Means have selected the right, proper, or best articles from which to obtain this increased revenue. That of course is a question for the House to pass upon. If they make up their minds that they will add to the revenues of the country by means of increased taxation an amount substantially what the committee say the necessities of the Government require, it only remains for them to pass judgment upon the wisdom of the selection made by the Committee on Ways and Means. In that respect the committee will have no cause to complain, and will offer no objection. If the House shall believe that the restoration of the duty upon tea and coffee, after what appears to be the condition of that trade, will be wiser than the restoration of the 10 per cent. reduction on import duties or wiser than the imposition of 30 cents additional tax on whisky or the imposition of the duty on sugar, it will be for the House to take the responsibility of making the substitution.

But I have to say this, that any attempt to remodel the tariff, any attempt at general tariff legislation in this bill, will be fatal to the object of the committee and for the purpose which I believe actuates Congress. You can have no increase of your revenue by a tax and tariff bill if you undertake therein any general tariff legislation. You can change the rates, you can transfer the taxes from these subjects to some other leading sources of revenue with propriety enough. But if you open the door to general tariff legislation by letting in this item which presses upon one member and that which presses upon another, and so on, you will so load down this bill that no revenue bill can become a law at this session of Congress.

The party in power, which is responsible for the legislation of the country, responsible for maintaining the public faith with the public creditor; the party on this side of the House, that has to furnish the means for carrying on the Government for the next two years, will if they resort to any such unwise and indiscreet tampering with this bill turn over the Government into the hands of those who are not responsible in this particular for meeting the obligations of the Government, without the means to do so. I have to say to my political friends on this side of the House that they need not expect support in this measure from those who do not feel resting upon them as yet the responsibility of maintaining the public credit; and if this measure, modified in the particulars which I have suggested, and not modified by any general tariff details, fails to become a law, the gentlemen on the other side of the House will have to take up this responsibility earlier than they may have anticipated, and to them will be left the question whether they will maintain at home and abroad that honor of this Government which, by rejecting this bill, this side of the House will have failed to do.

I submit, therefore, to this House on the one side and on the other—on this side that the public will hold you responsible if you fail to provide this Administration with the means of maintaining the Government; upon that side of the House that it is not well for them to provoke too soon that responsibility in raising the revenue which they will find will come home to plague them quite soon enough for either their comfort or their success.

I think that the question presented in this bill—I do not mean in these particular subjects of taxation, but in producing from three or four productive sources of revenue about $35,000,000—upon that depends the question whether this side of the House shall go to the country after the 4th of March next and ask the people to pass upon their work here with any expectation of commendation. I trust, therefore, that they will look at this calmly; look at the difficulties surrounding the proposed changes. Whatever may be your thought as to the wisdom of the bill as framed, change it if you please, but pass it in some form and thus bring to the Treasury $35,000,000, more or less, or you will fail to have performed that duty which up to this time the republican party, according to the measure of its ability, I feel has substantially discharged.

The committee rose informally.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of their clerks, informed the House that, pursuant to the request of the House, the Senate had returned a bill of the following title:

A bill (H. R. No. 3780) to relieve the political disabilities of Robert Tansell, of Prince William County, Virginia.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

A joint resolution (H. R. No. 148) authorizing the President to appoint a commissioner to attend the international penitentiary congress at Rome.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed and requested the concurrence of the House in a bill of the following title:

A bill (S. No. 679) to establish the boundary line between the State of Arkansas and the Indian country.

TAX AND TARIFF BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, and proceeded with the consideration of the tax and tariff bill.

Mr. WOOD. Mr. Chairman, this is a proposition to levy an additional annual tax upon the industries of the country of over $35,000,000. It is not to be a temporary levy to meet the alleged emergencies, and of short duration, to cease when the emergencies cease, but, like other exactions of a like character, is unlimited as to time, arbitrary as to terms, and continuous as to rates. And this burden is to be laid at once when the people are in a condition little able to bear it. I cannot give it my support. I feel compelled to do all I can to prevent the passage of this bill. In my judgment there is no public necessity demanding it. If there were such a condition of the Treasury as to require some immediate relief, I think the last resort of all should be the one now proposed. There are other methods which appear not to have suggested themselves to those who are intrusted with the Government.

Before proceeding to state the grounds upon which I have brought myself to this conclusion, it may be necessary for me to say in advance that I am actuated by no spirit of faction. I would offer no partisan opposition to any measure of relief to the Treasury if its condition demanded it. The credit of the Government must be maintained at all hazards. The public faith is a sacred obligation which should be regarded, at almost any sacrifice, at all times and under all circumstances. I would do nothing to embarrass the Government or to retard its success in administering the laws equally and faithfully to all interested. But while I say this, and mean it in all sincerity, neither on the other hand shall I do anything to aid the Government in oppressing the people. If I were influenced by personal or partisan considerations, I would, without objection, let measures of this kind pass and become laws, as it will result fatally to those who propose and support them, but a higher obligation compels me to interpose my negative vote. I recognize a higher duty which I shall not omit to perform, irrespective of criticism upon my motives and conduct, emanate from whom it may. I do not think that any additional taxes are necessary. The statements of the Secretary of the Treasury, and the data and estimates attached to his report, will maintain this assumption, and I shall not go outside of these to prove it.

In order to proceed to the consideration of the question upon entirely unquestionable authority, from a Treasury standpoint, I will take the last monthly statement of the Secretary, issued February 1, instant. This, together with his report of December 7, 1874, will furnish sufficient data and estimates for this purpose. In this report (page 7) he states the probability of a surplus revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, of $20,222,000, and thus the amount required for the sinking fund, not included, will be $32,140,914, which would leave a deficit of $11,920,914. I am willing to take this statement as a basis of calculation after correcting some manifest errors which the Secretary, I am sure, will admit.

CONDITION OF THE TREASURY.

The official statement of the public debt of the United States for January, 1875, issued by the Secretary of the Treasury, gives the total principal as $2,242,301,032.43. In this total are included the following items, which are in no sense a debt of the United States:

Navy pension fund, being the moiety of prize-money which by law goes to the United States, and the interest on which is pledged for the payment of Navy pensions.—(Congress should appropriate for these pensions, each year, the same as it does for Army pensions, and this money should be returned to the Treasury and the interest on it should cease).....	$14,000,000
Certificates of deposit for legal-tender notes for which the Government holds the same amount in these notes as a special fund for their redemption.....	45,405,000
Coin certificates of deposit for gold placed in the Treasury, which gold is held in the Treasury for their redemption.....	24,655,300
Making in all.....	84,060,300

So that the total bona fide principal of the ascertained indebtedness is in reality but $2,158,240,782.43.

The annual interest-charge on the bonded debt (funded) of the United States is as follows:

Interest payable January 1.....	$25,030,730
February 1.....	4,589,973
March 1.....	4,864,183
May 1.....	14,269,290
July 1.....	25,030,730
August 1.....	4,589,973
September.....	4,864,182
November 1.....	14,269,290
Total.....	97,526,351

The interest due, uncalled for, and unpaid on the 1st day of February was $3,992,273.31. This item has averaged during the last six years over $3,500,000, so that in making provision for the annual interest yet to be paid in 1875 we can fairly assume that this average amount will continue to be uncalled for, and only $2,500,000 of it need be provided for. This makes, in round numbers, $100,000,000 for interest during 1875. Of this amount that due January 1, amounting to over $25,000,000, has been charged off, so that for the remainder of the year only $75,000,000 will be required. If we deduct from the coin in the Treasury February 1, which was $39,465,085, the amount deposited for coin certificates, $24,655,300, we have as the coin belonging to the Government $44,809,784. Set aside from this 20 per cent. of the interest payable during the year, as a reserve fund to assure the Treasury being always able to pay the interest when due, and we have surplus coin in the Treasury which may be disposed of, amounting to nearly $25,000,000.

The customs duties collected during the last seven months (from July 1, 1874, to February 1, 1875,) have amounted to $39,470,000, (see Finance Report for 1874, page 7, and daily cash slip for January,) or an average per month of $12,781,000. The average for the eleven months of this year, not allowing for any revival of trade, will be fully as much, but say it will only average $12,000,000. This will give $132,000,000, which, added to the $25,000,000 surplus now in the Treasury, gives $157,000,000 in coin to provide for the balance of the accruing indebtedness for interest of $75,000,000.

It may be said that there are other expenses to be paid in coin besides the interest on the public debt. These may be estimated for very liberally as follows:

Expenses of the Navy on foreign stations, (being a very liberal allowance as the entire Navy appropriation should not be more than $20,000,000).....	$5,000,000 00
Expenses of foreign intercourse, (this is a very large estimate, being the full amount of all the appropriations for this branch and the consular fees, which are in coin, amount to $500,000, and are applicable to the payment of these expenses).....	1,500,000 00
Purchases in Europe for other branches, and miscellaneous expenses, in coin, (a liberal allowance).....	3,500,000 00
In all.....	10,000,000 00

Add this sum to the interest and you have $85,000,000 to be taken from $157,000,000, leaving $72,000,000 of surplus coin January 1, 1876.

The internal-revenue collections for the last seven months have been $51,770,000, or an average per month of over $7,500,000. I submit the following table of these simply to show the increase:

INTERNAL REVENUE RECEIPTS—(Official.)

1873-74, November, December, and January.....	$24,478,850 87
1875-76, November, December, and January.....	26,312,656 75

During the next five months these collections will greatly increase if we can judge by past experience—they have already begun to do so as the collections in January were $3,621,693.93. It is fair to conclude that it will average $9,000,000 per month for the remainder of this calendar year, and you have from this source.....

$99,000,000

The other collections may be fairly estimated as follows:

Tax on national banks.....	4,000,000
Sales of public lands.....	1,700,000
Other sources, (not including premium on coin sold)...	6,000,000
Currency in Treasury, February 1.....	10,300,000

And we have as the available currency for the eleven months.....

121,000,000

Add the surplus coin as above.....

72,000,000

And the premium on it, say at 10 per cent.....

7,000,000

And we have.....

200,000,000

As the available revenue to meet the expenditures for the same period, which on the basis of last year—

Net ordinary expenditures of.....

$285,738,800

Less interest on the public debt.....

$107,119,815

And the coin expenditures deducted above.....

10,000,000

Are.....

117,119,815

Take this from $200,000,000, and there remains a surplus of $82,880,185.

Now assuming that the Secretary's views of the sinking-fund law is correct, and that it will require $31,036,545 for the fiscal year ending June 30 next, and to December 31, 1875, $16,070,457, (one-half of the Secretary's estimate for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, as given in Finance Report, 1874, page 7,) it will require $47,107,002 altogether, which if he should spend he will still have a surplus in the Treasury January 1, 1876, of $4,214,013. And this under existing laws without any increase in either the customs or internal revenues or any revival of trade; and if we add the amount to be derived (as estimated by the Treasury itself) under the recently passed "little tariff act" of $4,000,000, the surplus will be $8,214,013.

Nor are these all the facilities which the Treasury will have for raising additional revenue under existing laws, including the construction which the Secretary puts upon the Revised Statutes of June 22, 1874. The Revised Statutes, so called, materially increased the tariff duties. I am aware that the committee which had charge of the passage of the code in this House contend that no change was made in the rates of duties. Whatever may be the fact as to the intention of the committee and Congress in the premises, the result is that a very great change has been effected. For proof of this I refer to Executive Document No. 82, page 512, where will be found a tabular statement of those changes, showing that in some instances an increase of 100 per cent. has been made. This result is the product of both the clumsiness of the statutes, as revised, and the mischievous construction of the Treasury Department. For a more specific statement of this "revised" tariff, I refer to my letter to the Chamber of Commerce of New York, appended, and the indorsement of the chamber in reply. It is estimated that this increase in the rates will add about $5,000,000 annually to the customs receipts, which will increase the balance to $13,214,013.

I have shown that the increase from internal revenue has been nearly two million dollars the last three months over the like three months of 1873-74, which is evidence of reviving trade, with a probable like effect upon foreign importations. The stocks of goods of all kinds, domestic and imported, have been nearly exhausted. The people have been forced into habits of economy, and consumption has decreased to the lowest possible limits. A bottom has been reached, and it is fair to conclude that we are at the beginning of better times. But we are not left altogether to conjecture to reach this conclusion. The failures of merchants, bankers, and traders have decreased. I present a gratifying table taken from the New York Financial Chronicle of February 6, 1875, page 129, showing more than can be gathered in any other way the gradual amelioration of the business people of the United States:

Failures from 1857 to 1873.

Year.	Number.	Amount.
1857.....	4,932	$291,750,000
1858.....	4,225	95,749,000
1859.....	3,913	64,394,000
1860.....	3,676	79,807,000
1861.....	6,993	207,210,000
1862.....	1,652	23,049,300
1863.....	455	6,864,700
1864.....	2,608	63,774,600
1865.....	2,799	75,054,000
1866.....	3,551	88,242,000
1867.....	2,915	85,252,000
1868.....	4,069	121,056,000
1869.....	5,183	228,499,000
1870.....	5,830	155,239,000

By this table it appears that the mercantile and other failures are gradually subsiding, which means that the "panic" and its effects have about exhausted themselves.

I have thus stated accurately the true condition of the Treasury, according to the official data furnished by the Secretary of the Treasury, with his own estimates, including the contributions to the sinking fund, upon which he lays so much stress.

SINKING FUND.

The sinking fund, so called, is derived from the act of February 25, 1862, section 5, which is in these words:

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That all duties on imported goods shall be paid in coin, or in notes payable on demand heretofore authorized to be issued, and by law receivable in payment of public dues, and the coin so paid shall be set apart as a special fund, and shall be applied as follows:

First. To the payment in coin of the interest on the bonds and notes of the United States.

Second. To the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the entire debt of the United States, to be made within each fiscal year after the 1st day of July, 1862, which is to be set apart as a sinking fund, and the interest of which shall in like manner be applied to the purchase or payment of the public debt as the Secretary of the Treasury shall from time to time direct.

Third. The residue thereof to be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The law is entitled "An act to authorize the issue of Treasury notes and for the redemption or funding thereof, and for funding the floating debt of the United States."

It authorized the issuing of $500,000,000 of 6 per cent. bonds and $150,000,000 United States notes. It created an additional debt of $650,000,000. Mr. Chase was at the time Secretary of the Treasury. He was a lawyer of concededly high abilities, and had been a Senator of commanding position and talents, and yet he did not regard the obligation implied by this law which required the purchase or payment of 1 per cent. of the public debt. He was succeeded by Mr. Fessenden, a veteran statesman, who was at the passage of the act chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, and who was probably the author of the bill; and he, like Mr. Chase, disregarded this alleged sacred obligation. Mr. McCulloch succeeded Mr. Fessenden, and he, like his predecessors, paid no attention to it, though in possession of large surplus coin revenues applicable under the law to this purpose.

It has been suggested that the sinking fund was applicable only to the debt created by the act, and that the bonds to be purchased on its account were those authorized by it and to none of subsequent issues. The public credit was at that time far from being good, and the large amount of the bonds and notes issued, and the pending civil war together, made it necessary, in the opinion of Congress, to strengthen it, by creating a fund providing for payment of interest and continued redemption of principal by setting aside a part of the revenues for the purpose. However this may be, I merely state the fact, that whatever may have been the reason, the three Secretaries of the Treasury in office from 1862 to 1869 disregarded entirely and altogether making any provision for the sinking fund. Nor can it be said that those bonds bought by Mr. BOUTWELL on that account were for the purpose of supplying the omissions of his predecessors, because the language of the act is explicit that it must be done "within each fiscal year." Of course, if not done within the time specified it could not be afterward. The purchases to be made, therefore, on account of the sinking fund, must be placed to the credit of the Treasury in its account with that fund, beginning with 1869 and running to the present time. At this showing I think it is evident that there is no default and will not be for some time to come.

It is thus seen that the sinking fund had no existence until May 12, 1869, when Mr. BOUTWELL purchased \$1,000,000 of bonds for it at 83 $\frac{3}{8}$ per cent. in coin. (Finance Report for 1874, page 25.) The purchases continued regularly from that time until September 24, 1873, when, with nearly \$47,000,000 of gold in the Treasury belonging to the Government, Mr. Richardson suspended the purchases and they have not been since resumed. [The Government gold in the Treasury at the close of each month, from September 30, 1873, to January 31, 1875, has never been less than \$40,000,000, and has sometimes reached \$60,000,000.] The amount purchased altogether has been \$323,253,800, at an estimated cost in gold of \$307,702,207, or 95 $\frac{1}{10}$ per cent. of par.

These bonds were held, and on the portion of them assigned to the sinking fund, interest was collected and reinvested until the act of July 14, 1870, directed the cancellation of all bonds purchased, and to all intents and purposes abolished the sinking fund as such, providing in its stead that an account should be kept of the sinking fund, and the interest on the bonds belonging to it, and the amount of this interest should be appropriated annually "out of the receipts from duties on imported goods."

After this act was passed the sinking fund account, as given on page 19, Finance Report of 1874, was opened, and for a place of beginning assumed April 1, 1868, though the first purchase was not made until over a year later.

This account shows a balance of $16,305,000 due to it.

At the same time that bonds were being purchased for the sinking fund the Secretary was using the surplus revenues to buy other bonds without authority of law, (the act of March 3, 1853, 10 Statutes, 189, section 9, was temporary in its nature, and only authorized the purchase of loans then outstanding,) unless the sinking-fund law covered the case; and in that event all bonds purchased should have been so held, that they could have been transferred from time to time as the revenues failed from temporary causes, like the present, to supply surplus enough for the integrity of this account. This can be done now. These bonds amount to $182,241,750. Instead of asking increased taxation to make this account good, let the Secretary transfer $16,305,000 of these bonds to the sinking fund as of date June 30, 1874; and even if there is no surplus revenues for the next five years, there will still be enough bonds here to make the account good, as the entire amount required will not average $30,000,000 a year.

But it is questionable whether this sinking fund should be continued, if to do so it is necessary to increase taxation in these times. A practical man will set aside his surplus income for the payment of his debts. The Government should do no more. Let this surplus, be it great or small, be devoted to the redemption or purchase of bonds, and when that is done and they are cancelled and destroyed, let that be the end of it.

The sinking fund account of the Treasury, as given on page 19 of the Finance Report of 1874, is not correct.

In the first place, it should begin from the 1st of May, 1869, when the first bonds were purchased for it. In the second, it should be computed only on the bonded debt, whereas it has been computed on the entire outstanding indebtedness, as shown by the monthly statements, including "Navy-pension fund," "matured debt not paid," "coin certificates," "legal-tender certificates," "greenbacks," and "fractional currency." The language of the law is, "1 per cent. of the entire debt," not of the "entire indebtedness." As well include all the unsettled claims against the Government in the calculation as these, and more properly so than some of them. The debt is that which has been legally settled and funded; all the rest is floating indebtedness, and is payable out of the revenues as they accrue.

Upon this basis the capital of the sinking fund for each fiscal year from its institution by purchases would be:

For the fiscal year ending June 30—

1869.....	$3,513,131
1870.....	21,265,708
1871.....	22,244,069
1872.....	22,727,382
1873.....	23,140,656
1874.....	23,559,865
1875.....	25,274,148

Or in all, up to the end of the current fiscal year..... 141,724,959

The bonds heretofore purchased on account of the sinking fund amounted to $141,012,050, and are estimated to have cost in gold..... 135,427,657

Which would show a deficit at the close of the year of only..... 6,297,302

But if we take the entire bond purchases, $323,253,800, estimated to have cost in gold..... $307,702,207

And deduct the capital of the sinking fund June 30, 1865, as shown above..... 141,724,959

We have a balance of bonds purchased in excess of the sinking fund amounting to..... 165,977,248 or more than the capital of the sinking fund at the end of seven years from its institution!

The sinking fund was established upon the theory that the interest upon the funded debt should be provided for beyond contingencies and before other public obligations, and that 1 per cent. of the principal should be annually redeemed. This has been fully accomplished so far as the interest is concerned, and more than accomplished so far as the liquidation of the principal is concerned. It has not only been promptly and entirely performed in payment of interest, but there has been a larger reduction made within the same period than ever before in this, and in any but one other country. We have kept full and entire faith with the public creditor with great sacrifice and much difficulty to ourselves. To do so, a war rate of taxation was maintained for several years after the war ceased. This the people bore with remarkable forbearance. It is probable that the flourishing national interest of the country, and the apparent prosperity which at the time rewarded our industries, had the effect of procuring acquiescence which under a less prosperous condition of things would not have occurred. But now we have less national prosperity. We are just emerging from a period of great mercantile, financial, and industrial distress. Like a strong man who has been stricken down with a terrible malady, but whose inherent strength and physical resources enabled him with kind treatment and skillful remedies to escape the grave, we have passed the worst, and may soon, if no untoward errors or accidents occur, be once more strong in health and buoyant in spirits. We are now struggling to reach convalescence, scarcely yet secured. Shall the Government at such a period intervene with its strong arm of imperious taxation? Shall it demand of a people, whose resources are nearly depleted, a portion of what is left? And that, too, to maintain a fancied deficit in the Treasury, which as I have shown has no real existence. I protest, in their name, against so great a wrong, and shall not, until imminent danger to the public credit and general welfare threaten, vote another cent of taxation in any form, or under any pretext.

But why this pressing demand at this time? I have shown that it cannot be founded on any real emergency of the Treasury as now existing or in the near future likely to exist. There must be some other object. I hope it is not required for purposes outside of any now declared. I well comprehend that a reserve fund, to be ready at the command of the President, for some extraordinary condition of the country not now seen, nor anticipated by the people, may lay at the foundation of this. It is not my purpose to impugn motives, or to throw a doubt upon the integrity of the Executive, but when I witness the efforts in that direction to press this additional taxation upon the country at this time, and without substantial cause, I cannot resist the conclusion that there is some hidden purpose which is as yet undeveloped. Whether I am right in this conjecture time alone will determine. That the additional required revenues, if obtained, may not be used in an attempt to effect the military subjugation of any of the States of the Union is my earnest wish. Recent events have shaken the confidence of the country with reference to the intention of the Executive in regard to some of the Southern States. If the like military interference (with the State's civil power) shall be attempted in other States, it will not be uncharitable to conclude that the sinews of war are required for these objects.

NO PROPOSITION FOR REDUCTION OF EXPENSES.

But if it be true that there is a deficiency in the Treasury and that the falling off of receipts demand additional revenue, why is it that it does not suggest itself to the Government and to its supporters in Congress that the true remedy lies in economy and the curtailment of public expenditures? This method of meeting the deficiency does not appear to have suggested itself. The affairs of the Government should be conducted on the same homely principles as those of an individual. When the income is reduced, the expenses should be reduced accordingly. A diminution of receipts should be met by a diminution of expenses. When losses or hard times overtake an individual, his first thought is to conform to the necessities of the case. Not so with this Government. It maintains the same extravagance as characterized it when we had national and individual prosperity. The expenditures for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1874, showed no reduction over those of the preceding year, and if the appropriation bills, together with the other moneyed bills now before the two Houses of Congress, shall pass, together with the deficiency bill of an indefinite amount as yet, it is altogether probable that those ending the 30th of June next will exceed those for the last year.

At last session of Congress, when discussing the question of the public finances, I presented a table gathered from official sources showing a steady annual increase for the last five years, and suggested how an aggregate amount of $30,000,000 could be saved by reductions which could not impair the public service. Without giving details, the branches of the public service which are maintained upon an unnecessarily extensive scale are the military, naval, and Indian affairs; to which may be added extraordinary extravagance in appropriations by Congress for public works, river and harbor improvements, judicial expenses, and other purposes, coming under the head of miscellaneous. If an earnest effort were made in the line of economy in these branches, at least $30,000,000 could be saved, leaving quite as much efficiency and far more integrity than is now manifest. Taking this $30,000,000 from the Secretary's estimate of the expenditures for the coming fiscal year, there would be a very large surplus left, after providing for the sinking fund, under his construction of his duty with reference to it.

In 1858 the expenditures of the Government reached their maximum before the war, when the net ordinary expenses amounted to $72,000,000 in round numbers. In 1874, nine years after the war closed, these same expenditures amounted to $194,000,000! The following table will show how the items of these two years compare:

Expenditures of the government for the years 1858 and 1874.

	1858.	1874.
War expenses.....	$25,679,121	$42,313,927
Navy expenses.....	14,053,264	30,932,587
Indian expenses.....	4,973,266	6,692,462
Pensions.....	1,219,768	29,035,414
Miscellaneous.....	26,400,016	85,141,593
Total.....	72,330,435	194,118,985

The net ordinary expenses of the Government from 1869 to 1874 were in round numbers—

1869.....	$190,000,000
1870.....	164,000,000
1871.....	157,000,000
1872.....	153,000,000

Thus far there seems to have been a reasonable determination to curtail expenses, but the economy was short-lived, for in the next year, instead of decreasing still further as it should have done, the amount spent was—

1873.....	$180,000,000
1874.....	194,000,000

Comment upon these figures is unnecessary. They tell their own story, and that is not complimentary to the Administration, nor satisfactory to the people.

TARIFF LEGISLATION AND TREASURY REGULATIONS.

The stagnation of trade is not the only cause for the falling off in customs revenue. Other influences have been steadily at work for some time which injuriously affect the importation of dutiable goods. Merchants can place no reliance upon this Government and its agents by which to regulate their importations. When an invoice or cargo of merchandise is ordered from a foreign port to this country, the closest possible calculation is made of its exact cost when laid down here. In this calculation will be found original cost at place of export, expenses of transit, freight, insurance, duty, entry expenses, &c. All of these items compose the total cost to the importer. He must know the precise cost to enable him to transact his business profitably. Now, if in consequence of a sudden change in the tariff, as in the case of the Revised Statutes of June 22, 1874, or the erroneous Treasury constructions put upon them, a greater or higher rate of duty shall be required, his goods are made to cost much more, and losses, it may be ruin, ensue. There is no stability in our tariff regulations; change is constantly going on; at almost every session of Congress something is done to further embarrass trade.

The constant changes in the Treasury and custom-house officials increase this difficulty. New Secretaries and their subordinates overturn the rulings of their predecessors, and irregularity and litigation is the almost constant result. Of course the import trade thus embarrassed lessens and falls off. Capital invested in it seeks less hazardous enterprises. Prudent men will avoid such obstructions to success with the liability to the imputation of want of commercial integrity constantly occurring. Many of our merchants have in consequence withdrawn altogether from the importation of foreign goods on their own account; others accept consignments at the risk of the owners in other countries, while some, less conscientious, seek to punish the Government for oppressing them by altogether evading the payment of duties. Thus losses to the revenue and demoralization to trade are the natural results of the want of stability in the tariff laws and fairness in their execution.

I have shown that there is no deficiency to be made good, according to the statements of the Secretary and the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means; that instead of a deficiency there is every probability of a large surplus without any legislation whatever. The title of the bill under consideration is "A bill to further protect the sinking fund, and to provide for the exigencies of the Government." These may be very good catch-phrases, but cannot deceive me. The sinking fund is amply protected, and there are no exigencies to provide for. When there are, no one will go further than myself to render assistance, nor would I stop to consider which party held the reins of government.

However much I regret the maladministration and extravagance of the Administration and the republican party which have had entire and unlimited control for fourteen years, yet I would aid in extricating them from trouble if the honor and true interests and faith of the Government demanded. Convinced that all this present outcry has no actual foundation, and fearing some hidden motive, I shall do all I can to prevent the passage of this bill, especially now, when the industries of the people will bear no further governmental exactions.

APPENDIX.

TARIFF CHANGES UNDER THE NEW CODE.

Fernando Wood to the Chamber of Commerce of New York.

WASHINGTON, January 29, 1875.

DEAR SIR: So many letters of inquiry and complaint respecting the increased rates of duty which have been levied on merchandise imported under the Revised Statutes have been addressed to me by business men in New York which deserve reply, that I venture to avail myself of the Chamber of Commerce as a medium of answer to all by one communication.

That the revision enacted by Congress June 22, 1874, contains a part of the laws, general and permanent in their nature, which were in force on December 1, 1873, cannot be denied, for Congress declared as much in section 5595 of that enactment. Whether the revision contains all the laws then in force must depend on an examination in a specified case, to see whether a particular law has in any part been embraced in the revision, for the last clause of section 5596 declares that "all acts of Congress passed prior to said last-named day, (December 1, 1873), no part of which are embraced in said revision, shall not be affected or changed by its enactment." By "no part," must be meant no part of the operative text of such law; and if this be so, the seventeen volumes of statutes prior to the revision may be as important in tariff matters now as they were before June 22, 1874, because there are many laws and joint resolutions regulating the collection of the revenue on imports which contain not more than one or two sections. It cannot be denied either that Congress understood, and the country understood, that the revision was to be a faithful rejection of repealed laws, and a true expression of those which were unrepealed on the 1st day of December, 1873. Abundant citations from the words of those directly responsible for the revision, and looked to by the two Houses for the faithful execution of the work, can be made in proof of this from the pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the last session.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY OF THE REVISION.

The principal facts in regard to the revision are these: On June 27, 1866, Congress authorized the President to appoint three commissioners "to revise, simplify, arrange, and consolidate" the statutes. The duration of the commission being practically limited to three years, it was revived for three years more by the law of May 4, 1870, and finally the commission reported in the form of two large volumes, printed by Congress. On March 3, 1873, Congress authorized a joint committee of the two Houses to accept, but did not approve or adopt, this report of the commissioners; to contract with a suitable person to prepare, under the direction of the committee, the commissioners' report, and print the same in the form of a bill, to be laid before Congress on the next December. This proposition was introduced by General BUTLER, who said, "The work authorized is merely clerical." The joint committee was raised; it reported, as directed, to the House through the chairman on December 11, 1873; and the report, in the form of one large printed volume, was referred to the Committee on the Revision of the Laws. On this occasion General BUTLER said:

"I desire to premise here that your committee felt it their bounden duty not to allow, so far as they could ascertain, any change of the law. This embodies the law as it is. The temptation, of course, was very great, where a law seemed to be imperfect, to perfect it by the alteration of words and phrases, or to make some change. But that temptation has, so far as I know and believe, been resisted. We have not attempted to change the law in a single word or letter, so as to make a different reading or different sense. All that has been done is to strike out the obsolete parts, and to condense and consolidate and bring together statutes in pari materia; so that you have here, except in so far as it is human to err, the laws of the United States under which we now live. And it will be necessary, if the bill passes Congress, that it shall pass without any one undertaking to amend the law as it stands in this revision; because, once beginning to amend the revision by altering the law from what it is, will lead into an interminable sea, in which we shall never find soundings and which will never find a shore."

And on the same day, pending this debate, the following took place between Judge POLAND and myself:

"Mr. WOOD. If the gentleman from Vermont will permit me, I would like to ask him a question."

"The SPEAKER. If this matter consumes time, the Chair will feel bound to throw it over."

"Mr. POLAND. I do not intend to take any time myself, but I will hear the gentleman's question."

"Mr. WOOD. It is, whether there will be anything in this revision of the laws that we have not already in the Statutes at Large?"

"Mr. POLAND. Nothing; at least we do not intend there shall be."

Here we have a clear exhibition of what the committee of the two Houses intended the revision should be. It was an elimination of obsolete provisions; a condensation and consolidation of statutes in pari materia.

On the 15th of the next month Mr. POLAND informed the House that he was directed by the Committee on the Revision of the Laws to report back the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the House undertook to sit two evenings of each week in Committee of the Whole for its consideration. It was then stated by the chairman of the committee that Mr. Durant, a lawyer in Washington, had been employed by the committee to revise the work of the commissioners, who had made, to some extent, changes in the law, and correct such changes, in order that the bill might be a faithful reflex of the existing statutes in force. And it was then added that, since the work had been before the Committee on the Revision of the Laws, it had been so thoroughly re-examined that the committee were able to assure the House that the bill as reported by the committee is "an exact transcript, an exact reflex, of the existing statute law of the United States."

A portion of three evenings of February 19, 20, and 26, were devoted to the tariff on imports, wherein many amendments to the work of Mr. Durant were proposed and carried in Committee of the Whole. Finally, after a few evenings, the bill was reported to the House with the amendments, which were not printed, and passed without discussion. It was reported to the Senate May 26, 1874, and the chairman of the Committee on the Revision of the Laws in that body (Senator CONKLING) declared that "the aim throughout has been to preserve absolute identity of meaning, not to change the law in any particular, however minute, but to present in miniature, or condensation, the law in all its parts as it was actually found to exist dispersed through seventeen volumes of statutes."

Upon the faith of this representation, as I believe, the bill was adopted in the Senate without any substantial deliberation or discussion. The different steps in the progress of the revision, and these distinct utterances of members of the committee who had it in charge, which are given in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, furnish a sufficient evidence that those who voted for the revision, as well as the whole country, believed; and had a right to believe, that the law regulating the rates of duty on imported merchandise stood in the revision precisely as it existed on December 1, 1873. The revision, by its terms, took effect immediately. It became a law unto the people of the United States so suddenly, that those whose conduct it governed could not obtain a copy, and the Secretary of the Treasury, in the beginning of his report in reply to the resolution of the House of December 14, 1874, devotes a large portion thereof to an explanation of the difficulties he encountered in obtaining and distributing among collectors of customs that portion which relates to duties on imports. The importers of New York and the other large ports of the United States, having been informed while the revision was under deliberation that, although amendments were proposed and adopted to the bill as revised by Mr. Durant relating to the customs, there would be no change whatever in the law prescribing rates of duty, naturally took no interest in the matter. But when the revision was put into practical operation by the Treasury Department, both importers and consumers were astonished to find that rates of duty under it were largely increased from those which had been levied on the 1st day of the previous December. The complaints of the extent and magnitude of these exactions in the city of New York became so general, that I found it my duty to introduce a resolution of inquiry, which has resulted in the report by the Secretary of the Treasury which I inclose, and which in its tabular statements from the four principal ports of the United States more than confirms all that has been charged in respect to the sweeping changes in rates of duty which have been made; and I think that when a careful comparison is made between the tabular statements from these four ports, showing this increase, and the text of the reply of the Secretary of the Treasury purporting to give the reasons or grounds for that increase, considerable surprise and disappointment will be felt on account of the unsatisfactory, if not evasive, manner in which this important subject is treated.

EXTENSIVE CHANGES IN RATES OF DUTY.

That great changes have been made is not denied. Indeed, the Treasury, in one portion of its reply, appears to desire to shield itself from responsibility by the declaration that the classifications or rates thus reported from the leading ports "do not in all cases conform to any authorized construction or ruling made public by the Department, and they are not in such cases admitted to be the proper construction of the law at the time." This is certainly a startling confession in respect to the administration of the customs revenue. The report of the Treasury Department, however, does not deny that a large part of the changes which have been made under the revision have been by its authority or direction.

REASONS FOR THE CHANGES INADEQUATE AND FALLACIOUS.

The Secretary, in his reply, concedes that "previous rulings of the Department" have been reversed since the revision, and an attempt is made to justify this reversal upon the ground that "either in the practice of the local officers, or in the rulings of the Department, and in the long period from 1861 to 1874, some results must necessarily have been attained in the direction of undue concession such as a rigid revision and condensation of the law would require to be reversed." In other words, changes in rates of duty have come, because those who revised the laws intended to reverse, and did reverse, by legislation the previous rulings of the Department.

A law enacted in 1842, and embodied in section 2652 of the Revised Statutes, makes it "the duty of all officers of the customs to execute and carry into effect all the instructions of the Secretary of the Treasury relative to the execution of the revenue laws; and in case any difficulty shall arise as to the true construction or meaning of any part of the revenue laws, the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury shall be conclusive and binding upon all officers of the customs." And by the old laws of 1845, 1857, and 1864, the substance of which is embodied in the Revised Statutes, the decision of the Secretary of the Treasury upon an appeal to him from the collector of customs in respect to the rate and amount of duty is final and conclusive upon the Government and every one else, unless the importer sees fit to bring a suit at law to test the correctness of such decision. Therefore the previous rulings of the predecessors in office of the present Secretary of the Treasury which, he says, the Revised Statutes intended to correct or reverse, were laws, binding at that time upon the Government as well as upon importers.

NO GENERAL TARIFF LAW SINCE 1872.

No general law fixing or changing duties had been enacted by Congress since June 10, 1872. During the period between this date and December 1, 1873, (more than eighteen months,) the interpretations of existing laws had become well settled and well known by importers, and the rates demanded by the Government were established in the memory of foreigners as well as our own citizens. None of them supposed that the rates prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury and levied for eighteen months, since June 10, 1872, were not the legal rates, or that the Government misinterpreted its own laws.

The Treasury does not deny that certain sections of the laws of 1861 and 1862, which were enforced by the Executive on December 1, 1873, were excluded by, or dropped from, the Revised Statutes, and thereby duties were increased. It, however, justifies this exclusion, or dropping, on the ground that when the earlier and later tariff laws "were condensed in the revision the superior force of the later acts became apparent, and the alternative or earlier provision was necessarily excluded." This theory of revision may or may not be correct, but the difficulty is that the codifiers thereby silently excluded laws actually "in force," and the exclusion has worked an increase in rates of duty. I did not understand at the time that the revision would accomplish such a result.

SUPREME COURT DECISIONS.

The Secretary says:

"The revision, however, brought all that legally remained of the various statutes together, thus giving the later acts their proper effect, and dropping those which had been the cause of much misconception. No substantial change of law appears to have been made; the present text is clear and easy of reference, and the confusion and contradictory features of the former state of the law are removed. The diversity of decisions in the local courts that has existed in customs cases was due chiefly to this multiplicity of unrepealed statutes; the case of Smythe vs. Fisk et al., recently decided in the Supreme Court, being an instance. The court below held that duties were chargeable under the earlier statute, whereas the Supreme Court unanimously decided that the later act was the law in force. The rule then laid down, and before referred to as being established by the Supreme Court decision of 1853, appears to have been observed throughout the revision, and it has been carefully followed in the rulings of this Department under it, this condensed text being of great service in the practical collection of the customs revenue."

Here it will be seen that the Department again confesses that certain statutes in force on December 1, 1873, being "the cause of much misconception," were dropped altogether in the revision, and adds that this mode of condensing or revising the laws has been justified by a recent decision of the Supreme Court. A copy of the decision of the court in the case referred to is before me. The question involved was the true rate of duty imposed on an article known as "silk neck ties;" and the court very properly decided that they were dutiable at 50 per cent, under the last clause of the eighth section of the tariff law of 1864. And in this very opinion of the court there is a confirmation of the charge that the Revised Statutes did actually and intentionally change the previous law. The law of July 14, 1862, contained in the thirteenth section a schedule, which embraced, among other things, "Articles worn by men, women, or children, of whatever material composed, made up or made wholly or in part by hand, not otherwise provided for." In schedule M of the Revised Statutes, page 478, this provision is reproduced, but in this changed form: "Articles worn by men, women, or children, of whatever materials composed, except silk and linen, made up or made wholly or in part by hand, not otherwise provided for." It will be seen that the revision inserts the words "except silk and linen." The opinion of the court calls attention to this change, and says:

"The exceptions mentioned (silk and linen) were here for the first time expressly interposed, but it was a legislative declaration that such was the state of the law on the 1st of December, 1873, without the exceptions; and it is necessarily a construction of the last clause of the eighth section of the act of 1864 in accordance with that which we have given to it. It was the declared purpose of Congress to collate all the statutes as they were at that date, and not to make any change in their provisions. Obviously these exceptions were intended to remove doubts and misconception which were known to have prevailed to some extent."

Here it will be seen that the Supreme Court adopts the idea, if not the language, used in the circular of the Secretary of the Treasury, of August 21, 1874, to the effect that, as Congress declared that the Revised Statutes contain the law in force on December 1, 1873, therefore the insertion in the law of 1862 of the words "except silk and linen" must be taken by the court as a congressional instruction or declaration that such was the meaning of the previous law. So that the Supreme Court, instead of having held that the mode of revision was the correct one, or that the laws of 1861 and 1862 ought to have been omitted from the revision, declared in effect that the court cannot look beyond the declaration of Congress in the Revised Statutes as to the meaning of previous tariff laws, no matter whether that declaration, in the opinion of the court, be true or false. And it will be seen that this declaration in the revision may, unless Congress intervenes, influence all future decisions of the court on questions of duty turning on the old laws.

LAWS OF 1861 AND 1862.
